The county commissioners of Red Lake county last week opened the bids for the $35,000 bond issue for the purpose of erecting a court house for that county. The lowest bid was 4.2 per cent. Thus the Thief river promoters will have no more occasion to talk $14,000 graft. This would seem to be another kink out of the plan to form a new county down there—Greenbush Tribune.

Newspaper men, as a rule, have but two things to sell—space and subscription—and it would be just as consistent to ask your grocer for a dozen oranges just to fill up" as to ask the editor for a dozen lines in his paper just to boost your business with the idea that you are doing a kindness in helping to "fill up "space. Try getting a free dinner at the hotel just to make a show of business for the house.—Ex.

Mrs. E. F. Marshall went to Thief River Falls Monday and was there joined by Mrs. C. C. Jackson and Mrs. Marshall and Mrs. Jackson left on their tour of the west. They will visit Denver, and various points of interest in California and Oregon, the exposition at Seattle and will return through Canada by way of the Canadian Pacific, stopping at the famous resorts, Banf and Loggan.

A refrigerator express car was taken north on the Great Northern Monday and brought back Tuesday. At Red Lake Falls and at various points along the line the car was loaded with butter—the prize winning stuff for which the Red River Valley is becoming famous. At Crookston the car was attached to a passenger train bound for the coast. At Seattle the butter will become part of the cargo of a steamer bound for Alaska. The express charges on the car load of butter will be nearly $600, but those Alaska miners have to have the best there is so they send to the Red River Valley for their butter.

FARMERS' INSTITUTE DAY JUNE 16

Remember that it pays to trade at

The Big Store

THEO. LaBISSONIERE, Prop.

The Red Lake Falls merchants advertise some special sales for the day on which the farmers' institute is to be held—next Wednesday, June 16. It will pay every farmer who plans to attend the institute to read the ads in this issue. It will be a big day in town. You will be well entertained while here, there will be some instructive addresses and it will pay to take advantage of the sales and do some shopping.

The society editor is off on a vacation and the boss says it's up to me to do her stuff. I'm the fellow what writes the sporting dope for the paper. I had just received the assignment to do the glad rags stunt with frills and rushing and tucking and fluting when I was tackled by some of the girls from Dr. Koos' sanitorium who demanded that I have a look (that's all; just a look) at the junior banquet hall. Gee! Yes, it was perfectly lovely (meaning pretty fine doings) and—no wonder the society editor needs a vacation, she was getting so thin like, just looking on and telling about the tables groaning with good things to drive away that hollow look in her face (poor girl)—and that's all. The hall was fixed up like the front parlor in the White House on the nights when Nick used to call. There were easy chairs and cozy corners and pillows and flowers and you just wanted to stay and be comfy. The banquet table extended nearly the full length of the hall and was very prettily decorated. Freund and his friends furnished music for the occasion and concealed themselves (the society editor would say were concealed) behind a bank of flowers at the west end of the room. Mr. Koos occupied a seat at the head of the table and from the way that chair was decorated you'd think it was a wedding dinner and that the toastmaster (that's Mr. Koos) had in his confusion planted himself in the bride's place at the table. After the guests had done justice to the good things provided (that expression has been in print so long that I'm not afraid to use it) Mr. Koos told some funny stories. Some of them he had heard the "devil" spring at this print shop and others he got out of the patent insides of exchanges borrowed at this office and he didn't give even the credit of an "Ex." He then introduced those who were to give toasts and they said some original things. Beatrice Emard and Anna Rosch representing the contending classes (meaning the juniors and seniors) each gave a welcome and Eleanor Hanson gave a farewell. The class will was given by Igna Hamry, the class prophecy by Cecil Mikkelsen and the class history by Rebecca Hunt. Eda Lizee talked about "the boys" and Graham Kindseth about "the girls" and they left unsaid those things that ought not to be said (though they'd be interesting) and said the things that should be said. Others were called upon to give impromptu toasts. I had difficulty in getting out of the hall being weary and faint from long endurance and because of the sympathy existing between the senses of sight and taste. I stumbled around and got into the kitchen instead of out of doors and there the mas of the juniors were fixing up good things to eat as only mas known how to do and they said with one accord, "Now, don't you forget to say something about us." But that was all. Not even a cooky and gee! how I love cookies. But though weak and weary and heavy laden (in spirit) I could not fail to note that the young people were having a delightful time. It was an event which the seniors will always remember with pleasure and it must always be a source of gratification to the juniors that they did the graceful thing for the seniors and did it so nicely. The members of the faculty as well as the seniors were guests of the juniors and covers were laid for thirty-five. I almost forgot something that the society editor told me not to forget. Tuesday evening was the time and the I. O. O. F. hall the place. O, yes; and there were place cards (that's what she said) with little brownies in caps and gowns of blue and gold, the class colors. The junior class colors were displayed everywhere, but the seniors didn't mind that for the juniors were doing things that night.

BIG CROWD OF FARMERS HERE

Best Institute Ever Held Here and Visitors Were Well Pleased.

There was a big attendance at the farmers' institute held in Red Lake Falls yesterday. The meetings were held at the Bijou theatre commencing at 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 1:30 o'clock in the afternoon. There was a good attendance at the morning meeting and in the afternoon the room was filled to overflowing. Those having in charge the work of the institute and the farmers attending expressed themselves as well pleased with the meetings.

The speakers were Supt. Wm. Robertson of the Crookston experimental farm, Principal L. P. Harrington of the Crookston agricultural school, O. A. Storvick, of the dairy and food department, and Miss Ida E. Tilson.

To provide entertainment for the visitors to the city the band played during the hour of intermission and after the institute closed and the farmers and their families attended a free show at the Bijou.

The business men advertised special sales for institute day and they were kept on the jump supplying wants of customers.

SOME GOSSIP FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Our New Special Correspondent Notes the Development of St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 14.

This is the silly season at the theatres. Stars of the first magnitude decline to shine on the stage from June to September, so we have to grope our way with lesser lights. Incidently Thespian illumination isn't so expensive. Except at the Orpheum which is closed for the season shows are running just the same however. At the "Met" a stock company holds the boards, and gives a fair imitation of really truly drama. The Grand has gone into the dime continuous show business with moving pictures and vandeville stunts. At the Star much the same sort of thing has happened, but there, there are occasional shockers to titillate a jaded appetite.

Some Beauty Spots.

The greater summer patronage however, goes to the front porch, the outdoor resorts of which the twin cities have several, and the parks. There are those whose taste runs more to primitive scenes, and one inclined to ramble will find that rural delights reward those who seek them even within the city's limits. While the exclusive are enjoying the pleasures and the sports furnished them by the town and country club, whose beautiful grounds overlook the Marshall avenue bridge, the city dweller who wants to get close to nature will do better to branch off there by one of the driveways on the Mississippi's banks we owe to the appreciation of the park board of St. Paul's scenic advantages. He will shortly be convinced that the wilderness still boarders the Mississippi within St. Paul's corporate limits. In many places the forest is still primeval; wildflowers bloom in profusion; mosses cover the ground; the native vines entwine the trees; unfrightened song birds make evening and morning melodious; and miniature cascades pour their glistening waters over the the rocks which overhang the ravines. Many such beautiful spots may still be found by the banks of the Father of Waters within almost a stone's throw of the great avenues which bear the traffic between the twin cities. A short car or an automobile ride will take you to them

Some Working Politicians.

And talk about automobiles, actually there are things doing in the secretary of state's office these days. It's all on account of the new automobile law. Every auto and every motor-cycle and every chaffeur have now to be registered at the secrtary of states' office. The former has to be provided—yes, with two tags the latter with a badge. That's what keeps the secretary of state's automobile clerk as busy as the girl at the candy counter of a department store; that's why during the rush the whole force toils and perspires these sultry June days. Incidently also that's why the secretary's temper got the best of him and he fell foul of the attorney general about those two tags.

Officials at Cross Purposes.

For the law requires the secretary to furninsh the two tags. There's no doubt about that. The secretary of state, who is also something of a legislative shark, says it was the intention of the legislature to have one displayed on the back, the other on the front of the machine. The attorney-general, who is too dignified to get his law backstairsway, is not concerned about what the legislature intended to do—to find out what it did, is what he is about; and that's as plain as a pikestaff. One tag must be "conspicuously displayed on the rear of each vehicle, securly fastened." So he thus lays down the law. As for the other tag the secretary of state is required to furnish it may be framed or worn as a watch-charm or disposed of in some way equally appropriatie. Whereupon the secretary of state says he don't take his law from the attorney general; he will still advice that one tag be fastened in front, the other at the rear of the joy wagon. Hence strained relations; a rift in the lute, and another occasion of factional differences between republican leaders. Will the cup never pass?

A Railroad Magnate Interferes.

Otherwise also the automobile question looms out big. Up here we have a highway commission, an automobile club and others interested in good roads.

One member of he highway commission is Louis Hill. He knows a thing or two about road building and he knows he knows them, and modesty in maintaining his views is no failing of the president of the Great Northern. A few days ago, in company with some fellow members of the highway commission, Mayor Lawler, the county surveyor and others, made a tour of inspection of some of Ramsey county's macadamie roads. The weather just now ain't good for roads, and report has it that those constructed in Ramsey county within a few years were found "little better than hog wallows." Whereupon Mr. Hill said things about them to the surveyor which caused that gentleman to remark, "That man makes me sick," and ultimately to vanish the landscape. Others were offended, as for instance a county commissioner who sold ground to the contractor to whom the commissioners gave a job of road building, and thus made $1000 an acre from his land. And a county inspector who was found working the road smooth with a rake and who in answer to a question as to why he didn't require the road to be sprinkled before being rolled as required by the specifications, replied, "I don't care anything about the specifications." It is said this man threatened to knock Mr. Hill's block off and wielded his rake as if he meant it.

INJUNCTION DISSOLVED

The injunction restraining the county commissioners from issuing the bonds of the county in the amount of $35,000 to raise money for the erection of a new court house in Red Lake Falls is no more, i. e., it is not. It is dead.

The matter came on before Judge Watts at Crookston last Friday and after hearing the arguments of attorneys, Judge Watts sustained the county's demurrer and issued an order vacating the injunction. Attorney Chas. E. Boughton represented the county commissioners. A. P. Toupin appeared in the case as intervenor and was represented by Attorney F. A. Grady. Attorney Miller appeared for the Thief River Falls committee.

The injunction had been issued by Court Commissioner Johnson at Thief River Falls May 29. At that time the case was handled by River Thief attorneys and Mr. Johnson.

There was much rejoicing at Thief River Falls when the injunction was issued and they were still jubilant over the great victory Tuesday, four days after the death of their pet scheme, when some Red Lake Falls people who visited the town broke the sad news to them. Then there was much hurrying to and fro and much talking together in subdued voices. It was a sad occassion and the Red Lake Falls people hurriedly left the place that they might not appear to be rude on-lookers at the obsequies.

The wires must be down at Thief River.

They Like Lindquist.

Bro. Eastman says that the people of Red Lake Falls have the same respect for Commissioner Lindquist that the people of Thief River Falls have. It is surprising to know that the people of Thief River Falls have such high regard for the chairman of the county board. Mr. Eastman is frank to confess that in slandering Mr. Lindquist he has not been pleasing his home people. The rank things that have been pubished in the News led to the belief that that paper was giving expression to public sentiment and that the people of Thief River Falls love Mr. Lindquist not at all. The News says that Mr. Shaw was congratulated by Red Lake Falls people for having administered an alleged rebuke to Mr. Lindduist. If anyone in Red Lake Falls congratulated Mr. Shaw, may it not have been that they were expressing pleasure at his having resigned from the county board?

DUFFY A CANDIDATE--?

Mayor of Red Lake Falls Has Been Suggested for Representative.

There has been considerable talk this week that J. A. Duffy, mayor of this city, may become a candidate for representative in the legislature from the district of which Red Lake county is a part. Mr. Duffy has been out of the city all of the week so there has been no opportunity to ask him to speak up, and it's a little early for politics, anyhow. However, it may be said that the district would have a representative worthy the name should Mr. Duffy go to the legislature.

Journal Offers Cup for Butter.

Creamery men and persons interested in all classes of creamery and dairy products will be interested in the special prizes offered for these at the North Dakota State Fair to be held at Grand Forks, July 20-24 inclusive. In addition to the very liberal cash prizes offered by the Grand Forks Fair associtiou, the special trophy prize consisting of a handsome sterling silver cup valued at $100 is offered by the Minneapolis Journal for the highest scoring creamery butter shown at the state fair this year.

For the benefit of the dairy butter exhibitors, it is announced that Mr. Geo. C. Dickson, of Dickson Dairy Co., Grand Forks, offers a registered Jersey Bull calf for the highest scoring dairy butter. Exhibitors will be pleased to know that F. R. Flint, the State Dairy Commissioner, will act as Superintendent of the Creamery Products Department, and that the Dairy Division of the United States Department of Agriculture has detailed Federal Inspector Joel B. Winkjer to act as judge of the department.

The premium list, giving full particulars, is ready, and may be secured by addressing M. C. Bacheller, Secretary, Grand Forks, N. D.

Sticking to Disagreeable Job.

It is the man who can stick to the disagreeable job, do it with energy and vim, the man who can force himsef to do good work when he does not feel like doing it—in other words, the man who is master of himself who has a great purpose, and who holds himself to his aim, whether it is agreeabe or disagreeable, whether he feels like it or does not feel like it—that wins. Many people keep up their energy and vim by taking regularly at mealtime a good malt tonic, such as golden grain belt beer. Most grateful when fatigued or run down. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

TWO BALL GAMES

Locals Lose to Thief River Falls and Wahpeton Teams.

The first ball game of the season for the local base ball team was played at Thief River Falls with the up river aggregation Sunday afternoon. It was a very good exhibition of the national game considering that the locals have had very little time to get into conditions. Thief River took the game by a score of 6 to 5. It was a close, scrappy game with the score 5 to 4 in favor of the locals at the beginning of the ninth inning, but in the ninth three hits brought in two scores for the Thieves and gave them the game. It is expected that the teams will get together for a game on the local grounds at some later date. Healy was on the mound for Red Lake Falls and did good work. Kiefenheim was at the receiving end.

The Wahpeton Game.

The local base ball players not in the best of condition because of the previous day, and possibly a little nervous because of the reputation of their opponents, a semi-professional team with a reputation of having won eighteen straight games, took on the fast Wahpeton team Monday afternoon. There wasn't much to it—for Wahpeton. The North Dakota boys took an easy victory, 7 to 0. Garceau and Baker did the battery work of Red Lake Falls. Garceau pitched a good game, but was given poor support. They talk about classy ball and nobody knows just what that is, but whatever it is, the kind of ball those Wahpeton fellows play must be it.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of The Wylie Farmers' Elevator and Mercantile company will be held at Wylie, July 1, at 1:30 o'clock p. m.

C. B. CRUZEN,
Secretary.

BALL GAME SUNDAY.

Locals Will Take on Fast Team From Grand Forks.

There will be a ball game on the local grounds Sunday afternoon. The competing teams will be Grand Forks and the locals. The boys have recovered from their nervousness of last Monday and say there's going to be a good game Sunday.

AUDITOR SOLD LAND

Eight Hundred Acres Sold—Little State Land Left in County.

The sale of state lands in Red Lake county was held at the auditor's office last Friday. State Auditor Iverson was not here for the sale and in his absence the sale was conducted by Auditor Latendresse. The attendance at the sale was not large and the bidding was slow the prices ranging from $6 to $12 per acre. About eight hundred acres were sold in forty acre lots. Practically all of the unsold state land in the county is of little value, this sale cleaning up about all there seemed to be any demand for.

CELEBRATION AT TERREBONNE

St. John's Day, Thursday, June 24—Band, Ball Game and Other Attractions.

St. John's day, next Thursday, June 24, will be celebrated at Terrebonne. The celebration will be in charge of the Terrebonne Woodman lodge. The Red Lake Falls Concert band will furnish music for the occasion. There will be a ball game and horse racing in the afternoon. In the afternoon and evening there will be dancing at the Woodman hall for which the Red Lake Falls orchestra will furnish the music.

STATE ESSAY CONTEST.

Chances for Young People to Win Prizes and Fame.

Attention is called to the Minnesota State Fair "Minnesota at Gettysburg" essay contest which closes July 1. In order to encourage study of American history and to increase the interest of public school pupils in the war record of the famous "Fighting First," the board of managers of the State Fair has offered prizes worth over $200.00 for the best 1,000 word essays written on the subject of the great historical spectacle which is to be the big evening feature of the State Fair of Sep. 6 to 11.

A similar essay contest was held last year, in connection with the production of "Fort Ridgely in '62" and thousands of public school pupils responded. The "Minnesota at Gettysburg" contest is likewise open to all pupils in any public school in the state and all those entering this contest are to sign their name and address, togeher with their school and grade and mail the essay to Secretary C. N. Cosgrove, Minnesota State Fair, Hamline, Minn. He will submit them for judgment to a committee of twin city educators, who will announce the prizes Aug. 15. The essays are limited to 1,000 words and it is advisable that they be written on one side of the paper only.

The prizes to be given on this second state fair essay contest are as follows:

First prize: The sum of $25.00 in cash and a season ticket for the state fair, good for main gate and grand stand.

Second prize: The sum of $15.00 in cash and a season ticket for the state fair, good for main gate and grand stand.

Third prize: $10.00 and a season ticket to the state fair, good at the main gate and grand stand.

The committee will also be authorized to name six other high school contestants whose essays are of superior merit, and each of these contestants will be given a season ticket for the coming state fair, September 6-11.

The same set of prizes will be given to contestants from thegraded schools of this state.

The first prize essay will be printed in full in the official program of the coming state fair, together with the picture of the winner and will be used as a basis for a scenario of the production.

As many of these essays have already been submitted it is advisable that all pupils prepare their essays and get them into the mail as early as possible.

Remember that this contest is open to all pupils of the public schools of Minnesota, and that prizes of the same value are to be given to the high school and graded school contestants. The only requirements are as to the length of essay and the complete address of the writer—and delivery by mail to Secretary C. N. Cosgrove by July 1.

Liked the Country.

The agricultural and dairying advantages combined with the comparatively cheap price of land in Red Lake county is proving a drawing card to investers and settlers of southern Minnesota and Iowa. Every day for several weeks past large numbers of land seekers have been looking the county over and nearly all of them buy one or more quarter sections of Red Lake county's rich soil. Last week Mr. D. T. Johnson of Lincoln county, Minnesota, with four of his friends, Messrs. Frank Smidt, A. Dorn, C. Hempel and Paul Schwandtz stopped off at Red Lake Falls to see Samuel Gibeau who is a friend of Mr. Johnson. Mr. Gibeau urged them to take a trip through southern Red Lake county and accordingly two automobiles were chartered and the trip made in record time and in glorious weather. The trip covered some 60 miles and needless to say that the "boys" were quite agreeably surprised at the scenic beauty and well settled country through the townships of Red Lake Falls, Terrebonne, Poplar River and Lambert, noting in particular that his territiory was well provided with rural telephone lines, rural free delivery, churches, schools, creameries, cheese factories and several market and shopping places such as the villages of Terrebonne, Brooks and Lambert. They especially noted the good market facilities of Brooks in Poplar River township, situated on the Soo line, with banking facilities, stores of all kinds and two elevators and very fine roads leading to town. The gentlemen had been under the impression that this country was an undeveloped wilderness and they admitted that in some particulars vital to farming community this country was far ahead of their acquaintance. On their return to Red Lake Falls the gentlemen boarded the train and went north and looked over adjoining counties but were not satisfied with what they saw and they returned to Brooks via the Soo railway and telehoned to Mr. Gibeau who met them with his auto and with the Brooks hustlers, showed them some thirty pieces of land among which they selected and bought each a quarter section at prices which cannot remain at those figures very long. Needless to say that the "boys" were well taken care of and when Mr. Johnson, and his friends took the train back for home they voted Mr. Gibeau and Red Lake county the best ever.

YOUNG PEOPLE GIVE PROGRAM

Commencement Exercises of St. Joseph's School Last Thursday Evening.

Sixteen Boys and Girls Have Completed Work and Have Graduated.

The capacity of the Metropolitan opera house was taxed to accommodate the large number of people who attended the St. Joseph's school commencement exercises last Thursday evening. A fine progam was given and the young people acquitted themselves in a manner indicating that they had received careful training and those attending were highly pleased with the program. The Red Lake Falls orchestra assisted with the music for the occasion.

Sixteen boys and girls received diplomas from the school. The work of the shool is equivalent to the first eight grades of the public shools and no doubt many of the young people will enter the high shool next year.

Following are the names of those who received diplomas: Joachim Huot, George Bray, Ervy Toupin, George Richards, Horace Demerais, Joseph Lacoursiere, Louis Philion, Lea Chatel, Emily Lambert, Pitilla Paul, Margaret Majeres, Etta Pahlen, Lucie Crompe, Dora Toupin, Emily Benoit.

A meeting for the election of a county commissioner from the Fourth district has been called for tomorrow, Friday, June 18, at which time the mayor of Thief River Falls and the chairmen of the towns in the Fourth district will elect a successor to Daniel Shaw, resigned. The following are those who will be entitled to vote in the election of the commissioner:

T. P. Hamre—Thief River Falls.
Herman Ortloff—Sanders.
Ellef Grandlie—Nordn.
H. R. Williams—North.
Anton E Peterson—Silverton
Edward Iveson—Clover Leaf
E. H. Besancon—Goodridge.
Lewis S. Rosland—Reiner.
Oluf O. Onlid—Star.

HOTEL FIRE AT ROSEAU.

Annex to the Elliot Destroyed at a Loss of $5,000.

Hotel Elliott at Roseau was thoroughly gutted by fire that started in the annex Sunday. The annex and all that it contained, including a complete set of bar fixtures, was totally destroyed, and the hotel fixtures and furniture were more or less damaged by fire and water.

The fire was burning fiercely when first discoveed, and it was only after a hard fight that the firemen were able to save the main building in a badly damaged condition.

The loss is estimated at about $5,000 insurance $4,800.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

The treasury deficit for the month of May is shown to have been $5,453,955, and for the eleven months of the current fiscal year a deficit of $97,858,102 is indicated.

Government officials are agitated over the discovery of an obstruction in the Delaware river, in the vicinity of Fort Mifflin, which they think may prove to be a treasure ship which went down in 1812.

Maj. Kelly, superintendent of the Rosebud (S. D.) Indian agency, has been suspended by order of the secretary of the interior. The agency will be temporarily placed in charge of a department inspector.

President Taft has approved a change in the naval regulations recommended by Secretary Meyer by which midshipmen are prohibited from marrying until the completion of the prescribed six years' course of training.

Lieut. Gen. MacArthur, the ranking officer of the army, has been placed on the retired list by operation of law on account of age, and the grade of lieutenant general ceases to exist in the army. Gen. MacArthur is now at his home in Milwaukee.

Regulations designed to preserve food fishes in inland waters contiguous to the United States and Canada have been signed by commissioners of the two governments. Formal approval will have to be given the regulations by both governments before they become operative.

PERSONAL.

G. M. Sheppard, general assistant in the traffic department of the New York, New Haven & Hartford railroad, died at New Haven from acute gastritis.

David M. Parry, for twenty-seven years president of the Parry Manufacturing company of Indianapolis, has resigned to take up another line of business.

The marriage of Miss Beatrice Thaw of Pittsburg, to Don Francesco Thaw, daughter of Alexander Blair Theodoli of Italy took place at the Thaw residence in Rome.

John H. Gregg, a prominent grain dealer of St. Joseph, dropped dead following a game of golf at the Country club. Mr. Gregg was apparently in good health when he began the game.

Col. James M. Wakefield is dead at Louisville at the age of ninety-nine years. So great are the numbers of his children and his children's children that from Shelbyville, Ky., alone a special train will bear only kinfolks to the funeral.

That a permanent memorial to Abraham Lincoln will be erected on Government Square, Cincinnati, was practically assured when it was officially announced that Mrs. Frederick H. Alms had signified her intention to give $100,000 of the $250,000 required to provide for the memorial contemplated.

Dr. John M. Bischoff, "blind organist of Washington," who lost his sight when two years old, is dead. For the last thirty-five years Dr. Bischoff has been organist of the First Congregational church in the capital city, and was considered one of the greatest composers and organists of this country, among his compositions being "Good Night, Sweet Dreams," "Unanswered" and "Bob-o-Link."

CRIMES.

A. F. Stinsel, an insurance man of Mount Carmel, Ill., committed suicide in Evansville, Ind.

Onaferio Chiramente, the Italian charged with the murder of B. Labella, a wealthy Italian merchant of New York, was convicted of murder in the first degree at Tampa, Fla.

Milton Boyce, organist in the Sacred Heart Catholic church, a rich congregation at Cincinnati, is in the county jail, following his arrest on a warrant charging forgery.

A man who says he was a student at Yale and has wealthy relatives in the East was arrested in Chicago on the charge of shooting two women in a disorderly resort. He is twenty-twenty-four years old.

The unwritten law scored a victory at Hattiesburg, Miss., in the case of G. I. Crosby, charged with the murder of J. R. McShan, when the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty. Crosby found McShan in the woods with his wife and killed him with a shotgun. Crosby was cheered as he left the court house.

John H. Wood, former president of the Matthews National bank of Matthews, Ind., was released from the federal prison at Leavenworth after the expiration of a term of six years. He was convicted of making loans in excess of the amount allowed by law.

Max Emmerich, a bookkeeper in the Capital National bank of Indianapolis, has disappeared. Frank D. Stalnaker, president of the bank, made a public statement that an examination of Emmerich's books shows he was responsible for a cash shortage of $10,000.

Four masked highwaymen held up a crowd of thirty merrymakers at the Tavern, a resort at Petersburg, ten miles from Denver, and made away with more than $3,000 worth of diamonds and $200 in cash. The robbers escaped on horseback.

Mrs. Edith Cunningham, wife of George S. Cunningham, a well known civil engineer, was found dead in her home at New York from gas inhalation. She got up while her husband slept, shut herself in a closet and turned on the gas. No motive for suicide is known.

ALL OVER THE STATE

FIVE YEARS FOR 'U' LAW COURSE

Important Change Is Decided Upon by Directing Committee.

In order to raise the standard of the university law school to that of Eastern institutions, the course of study required will be lengthened to five years, beginning Sept. 1, 1911. Action which will result in the change was taken at an executive meeting of the law committee in the offices of Pierce Butler, St. Paul. The report of the committee will be made to the university board of regents at its next meeting, June 9, and members of the committee believe there is no doubt that it will be unanimously ratified.

President Cyrus Northrop, a member of the committee, said that the action has been long contemplated, but that its immediate cause was the action of the directors of the Carnegie fund foundation requiring state universities that receive benefits under the fund to maintain long courses in their law colleges. Following the meeting Dr. Northrop telegraphed to Dr. H. T. Pritchett, treasurer of the fund, of the proposed action.

President Northrop believes the longer course will put the law school on a much higher basis, by requiring two years' preparatory academic training for admission. He says:

"Under the new plan it is the intention of the university authorities to eliminate special students in the law college. Men who have had some business training and who are now freely admitted to the college, as well as graduates of state high schools, will be refused admittance, it is true, but in so doing I believe the university will graduate no more illiterate men from its law department.

"Another advantage will be the decreased enrollment of the school and the resulting greater efficiency of the instructors. If two years' academic training were required the number of students in the school would probably be cut down one-third.

"When the standard of admission to the college of medicine was raised to two years' preparatory training the college was soon ranked among the best medical schools in the country, and I look for a similar rise in the law college when the new rule goes into effect. Next fall special students and university undergraduates who have had one year's study will be received, but after that the bars will be raised."

CATTLE BUSINESS BRISK.

The cattle business took quite a spurt at South St. Paul last month, in comparison with May of last year, according to the report issued by the stock yards company. While the total receipts of cattle in May, 1908, were 16,549, they were 19,461 last month, while there were 8,527 calves received last month, as against 5,984 for the corresponding period of last year.

Minnesota took a long lead in supplying these cattle. It furnished 12,306 last month, North Dakota being second with 3,413. This state also supplied 43,645 hogs, South Dakota being second with 10,824. Hogs did not show up well, however. While the receipts for last month totaled 61,524, there were 82,307 received a year ago last month. The receipts for last month were 318, against 574 for May of last year.

DRUG MEN WILL GATHER.

Silver Jubilee of Pharmacists' Association to Be Celebrated.

The twenty-fifth annual meeting of the Minnesota State Pharmaceutical association will open at Tonka Bay, Lake Minnetonka, on June 16, and will continue for three days. The convention this year is to be made especially attractive in its program in honor of the silver jubilee of the organization. It is expected that a large attendance of pharmacists from all parts of the state will be present at the sessions.

Arrangements have been made for an exceptional number of technical papers, with discussions to follow.

In addition to the program of papers, various amusements have been arranged at the hotel and on the lake. Dancing and card parties have been arranged for women attending the convention.

The spring log drive, which has already been delayed several weeks, is again held up on account of the low water level in the streams, according to a report from Cloquet. Lumbermen are experiencing great difficulty this year, and in many places the drive has been temporarily suspended. Unless rain comes soon it will be impossible to get many logs to the mills.

SETTLE TIMBER SUITS.

Four Firms Pay Up and Cases Are Canceled.

Four suits for timber trespass were settled by the attorney general last week, with the consent of the state timber board, and the money paid into the state treasury. The amounts paid in were as follows: Nanakin Lumber company, $6,883.08; Crookston Lumber company, $6,844.92; C. A. Smith Timber company, $367.48; Cook vs. Elliott, $1,294.30. This makes a total of $14,289.78

STATE FACES A DEFICIT.

Legislative Expenses to Blame for Half Million Decrease.

The state treasury of Minnesota is likely to face a somewhat heavier deficit this fall than it has for the last three years or so. When the railroad taxes are paid in the winter there is always a large surplus, and in the fall the treasury runs low, so that the state has to borrow. Four years ago the state had to borrow considerable sums, but the increase in the gross earnings taxes relieved the situation somewhat, and the last couple of years the deficit has been very small.

The cash balances in the treasury at the close of business for May are considerably less than a year ago. The total of all funds Saturday morning was $1,563,400, while at the same time last year it was $2,148,227. Of this amount the general revenue fund contains $961,376 this year, while a year ago it had $1,298,106.

A decrease of about half a million in the receipts from railroad taxes, due to the smaller amount of business last year, accounts for part of the decrease. The fact that the legislature met this year, spent the usual $200,000 for its own expenses, paid itself $91,000 for next year's salary and made various other appropriation available immediately, also has something to do with the decrease in the state's funds.

NEEDED IN MINNESOTA.

Governor Would Like to Name a Conservation Board.

Minnesota's absence from the list of states which have commissions, as suggested by Former President Roosevelt, for the conservation of natural resources is regretted by Gov. Johnson, but, until he can find three men willing to work for nothing, the state will have to continue to be among the missing.

"There can be no official commission," said the governor, speaking of Minnesota's failure to join in the work, "for the reason that nothing was done by the legislature. Such a commission was not even sanctioned.

"The work contemplated takes time and money, and if I can find some one willing to take up the task with the knowledge that what he may do will be entirely gratuitous, I shall certainly avail myself of his services. There is no money, not even for expenses. I have in mind now several persons whom I shall ask to serve as commissioners, but I have no knowledge that they will accept."

WANT TIMBER LANDS.

Inquiries Are Coming From All Parts of the Country.

There is more interest than ever before in Northern Minnesota timber lands, according to George Welch, state immigration agent. Mr. Welch has received a letter from a Belle Plaine, Iowa, real estate man, who had received a copy of the department's book on "Minnesota Timber Lands," and asks that a large number of the books be shipped to him by express. He said that the interest among land seekers there is rapidly turning toward the half-timbered lands of Northern Minnesota.

Mr. Welch said that is only a sample of hundreds of letters he is receiving from different parts of the country. There has been demands for so many thousands of the book that the department is able to supply only a small part of them with the limited appropriation. Inquiries come from all parts of the country, but Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio and Pennsylvania supply the largest number.

MILLION IN SMOKE.

Fire Losses in Minnesota During May.

Fire losses of over a million were reported to State Fire Marshal Edward Peterson for May. This is considerably larger than last year, but officials in the department say that this does not indicate greater fire losses. They had considerable trouble at first to get the fire departments of the smaller towns to report fires, but believe that now the officials are getting into the habit of reporting, so that practically all the fires are reported. The number of losses during the month was 171, the loss on buildings, $1,002,566; the insurance on buildings, $528,832; the loss on contents, $134,294, and the insurance on contents, $236,720.

LIKE NEW GRAIN TAX.

Country grain men are not disposed to fight the new bushel tax on grain, as many of them find it cost them less than by the old system. An instance was reported at the state capitol recently. The Farmers' Elevator company last year paid taxes on 1,000 bushels of grain on hand May 1, and the tax was $18. This year the elevator reports 96,000 bushels passed through it in the year preceding March 1. The bushel tax on this is only $11.

USE OF PARDON BOARD.

Gov. John A. Johnson and Chief Justice C. M. Start have taken issue with each other on the proper method of administering the pardon power. Gov. Johnson does not think the state pardon board is any improvement over the old scheme which gave the whole power to the governor. It has not reduced the number of pardons, he says, but they have actually increased under the board plan. On the other hand, there is little chance for a prisoner to get pardon or commutation unless he has an attorney to represent him at a meeting of the board. Deserving cases in this way may be overlooked. "If I had the sole responsibility for exercise of the pardoning power," said Gov. Johnson, "I would make personal visits to the penal institutions and investigate cases to find these men who are worthy of clemency, but fail to get it because they have no one to lay their case before the board."

Chief Justice Start says there may be more pardons under the present system, but there are also more prisoners. When the governor had the sole power there were no records, no hearings, and often the first that home people knew of a pardon was when the prisoner showed up with his pardon papers. The chief justice does not think applicants need an attorney. If their story shows a meritorious case they can get justice from the board. As to the plan of visiting institutions to look up worthy cases the chief justice says:

"I know of no rule or provision of the law that would hinder the governor from doing that under the present system and laying his information before the board. His recommendation would surely have great weight with the board."

LONG COURT TERM ENDS.

Ten Prisoners Sentenced at Pipestone to Stillwater and St. Cloud.

A term of district court has just come to a close at Pipestone, after having been in session since May 4. There was but one civil case for jury trial and four cases for court trial, but the grand jury returned twenty-two indictments, and the criminal work took up all but two days. At the close of the term Judge Brown sentenced the prisoners as follows:

George Barkley, grand larceny, five years at Stillwater; Dell Gillard, grand larceny, twenty-three months; Clarence Strong, grand larceny, sixteen months; Ed Quinn, grand larceny, one year; Nelse Nelson, grand larceny, eleven months; Eli Totman, grand larceny, six months; Thad Kelley, Alvin Brown and George W. Jones received sentences to the St. Cloud reformatory, and William Simning, charged with having sold mortgaged property, paid a fine of $100.

DEFENDS DAIRY LAW.

State Commissioner Says Amendment Is in Interest of Cleanliness.

Andrew French, state dairy and food commissioner, comes to the defense of the late legislature for the amendment which requires persons selling milk from a single cow to take out a license.

"The change in the law was necessary," he said. "The old arbitrary rule which only required licenses from owners of three or more cows was class legislation and would have been knocked out if it ever got into court. The law is not so broad as some people think. It only applies to persons selling milk in municipalities, and not to country producers and shippers."

Mr. French says that his department is not concerned with the tuberculin test, but makes sanitary inspection of every dairy. The value of the license is to enforce sanitary conditions in all dairies, without which the license may be revoked.

BIG PURSES FOR RACES.

Superintendent of Speed George Atchinson of the Minnesota state fair is making every possible effort to interest racing men all over the country in the races scheduled for the state fair, Sept. 6 to 11 this year. There will be two $5,000 purses hung up, one the Minneapolis stake and the other the St. Paul stake. Altogether there will be $25,750 hung up for purses, and there are on the schedule twenty-seven different events.

The races this year will be held under the old "two in three" and "three in five" rules, instead of under the "every heat a race" system, which was tried and found wanting last year. All entries will close the night before the race, and if any race is called off by the association the entry money will be refunded.

STATE BUYS FARM.

Land for the state hospital farm for inebriates has been purchased by the state board of control near Willmar. A farm of 482 acres is acquired from D. N. Tallman of Willmar for a consideration of about $39,000. The farm is well improved, having buildings appraised at about $20,000, and is the one which took the J. J. Hill prize in the tristate competition last year. A side track will be put in for supplying fuel and for loading out farm products.

I mentioned the fact last week that about three times as many emigrants left Norway by the way of Trondhjem in February, 1909, as during February, 1908. It is now announced that 1,249 emigrants left by the way of Christiania in April, 1909, as against 643 during the same month a year ago. Of these 217 were residents of the capital city. As I stated last week, the cause of the marked increase in the number of emigrants is the return of prosperity in America. A year ago the reports that reached Norway from America, as to business conditions, were very discouraging, and, in consequence, a large percentage of the prospective emigrants remained in Norway. Now they are leaving, as the reports from America are favorable. It seems that the efforts of the Anti-emigration Society of Norway are not meeting with success.

The battle between the "rigsmaal" (the Danno-Norwegian language), and the "landsmaal" (the Norwegian peasant dialect), to which I have made repeated reference in the past, still goes merrily on, with Former Premier Lovland as the leader of the "maalstraevere." He delivered a lecture in favor of the "landsmaal" at Larvik, early in May, but found such a strong sentiment for the "rigsmaal" in that section that he spoke in a more guarded and moderate tone than usual.

In this connection it may be timely to say that efforts have been made by certain leaders to get the "Norske Selskab i Amerika" (the Norwegian Society of America), to go on record against the "landsmaal," but this move met with such strenuous opposition within the society that the idea has been abandoned. The matter was up for consideration at a meeting of the society at Moorhead, Minn., May 17 last.

The statue of Karl XV. was unveiled in Stockholm the early part of May in the presence of King Gustaf and Queen Victoria, and the king and queen of Denmark, appropriate exercises making the occasion one long to be remembered. At the command of the king the drapery was removed and the beautiful bronze statue stood revealed to the gaze of the multitude. A male chorus sang a couple of the national airs, after which the king placed a large wreath on the pedestal of the statue, the wreath being tied with silk ribbons in the national colors, and bearing the initials of the king and the queen. The king and queen of Denmark also left a handsome wreath, and there was a profusion of other set pieces, flowers, etc., from other notables. The sculptor of the statue was presented to the king, who gave him the knight's medal of the Vasa order. At the close of the exercises the king reviewed the troops, companies being present from the military school, the seamen's school, Svea and Gota life guards, the fleet, artillery, etc.

The recent session of the rigsdag lasted seven months, during which time the landsthing had 85 meetings and the folkething 140 meetings. One hundred and twenty-three bills were introduced, of which 63 became laws, and 6 passed the folkething, but were killed in the other chamber. It appears, therefore, that one-half of the proposed measures became law, which must seem remarkable to Americans, for only a small percentage of the bills introduced into state legislatures and the national congress are passed by both houses.

A PAGE FOR THE FARMER

PROFITABLE TRUCK FARMING IN ATLANTIC COAST STATES

Besides the Staple Market-Garden Crops Grown, There Are Many Others Which Are Peculiar to Certain Localities and Climate.

One Day's Harvest.

The development and extension of truck farming in the Atlantic coast states has been coincident with the development of transporation facilities throughout that section. The phenomenal growth of the great consuming centers of the country has stimulated a corresponding growth and extension of the food-producing territory, especially of that capable of producing perishable truck crops.

Transportation facilities, together with cheap labor and cheap lands at the south, have made it possible to produce products out of season at the north in competition with greenhouse products.

The first development of truck farming, as we now recognize it, as distinguished from market gardening, took place about Norfolk, Va., and Charleston, S. C. Both of these places were provided with steamship connections to northern ports before rapid railway transportation became a feature in the moving of perishable products and as a result of these advantanges for reaching the markets these two ports became important truck-producing centers for supplying the northern trade.

Besides these advantages, the peculiar geographic formation of the territory immediately surrounding Norfolk gives it a winter climate characteristic of sections many miles southward. The fact that the coast line of the United States at this particular point is very broken, together with the proximity of the Gulf stream, gives this area a winter climate which enables it to produce some of the standard garden crops without protection and many of the more tender crops with only slight protection during the winter months. The islands off the coast of South Carolina, in the vicinity of Charleston, are so protected by the warm currents and by the atmosphere of the sea that orange trees are grown successfully in the open, and in some favorable seasons are known to produce fruit. It is therefore possible to grow the hardier truck crops in the open and the more tender ones with very slight protection during the winter.

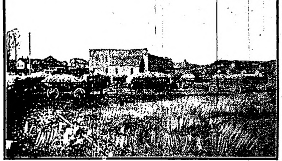
The advantages of the Norfolk region for truck work appealed to a Jerseyman by the name of Hugh Bates, who went to this section about 1840. Naturally he followed the practices of his home people of New Jersey in the new territory, and, while he found some of his precautions unnecessary, his work on the whole was successful. He was followed later by other growers from the same territory.

It was not until 30 years later that the first all-rail shipments of truck were made from this territory. Railways began carrying the products from Norfolk to northern markets in 1885, and from Charleston in 1888.

The methods employed to adapt cabbage to the requirements of the market and to the different areas in the trucking region are distinct and each forms a chapter in the cultural history of this important truck crop. For instance, at the south cabbage is a winter crop, seeds being sown during September and October, the plants transplanted to the field at the beginning of winter, and kept in a slowly growing condition throughout the colder portion of the year, to be forced rapidly by the addition of stimulating fertilizers early in the spring to supply the demands of the market as the warm weather comes on. This product is naturally very soft and must be consumed with little delay: and, since it is grown on a very extensive scale (see Fig. 1), it must be so distributed as to meet only the immediate demands of the market to which it is sent.

At the north the crop is of a very different character, both in variety and in the method of its cultivation. The great bulk of the northern-grown cabbage may be considered as a truck-crop feature of the general farming in sections where the industry has gained a foothold. The cabbage crop takes a regular place in the farm rotation in those communities where the industry has become a permanent feature. In some sections it forms the chief money crop of the fall season, ocupying a position similar to that held by potatoes in other sections.

This great crop is measured by thousands of acres and millions of tons. At harvest time, in October and November, it is shipped to the great consuming centers in bulk in carload lots. It is stored by thousands of tons in specially constructed warehouses, to be sent out as the demands of the market will justify during the winter season. It is also manufactured into sauerkraut, which finds its way to the great cities as rapidly as there is a demand for it. A sauerkraut factory with wagons filled with cabbages is shown in Fig. 2.



Wagon with Cabbage at Sauerkraut Factory.

Besides the staple market-garden crops of the north which are now extensively grown as truck crops throughout the South Atlantic coast region, there are crops which are more or less peculiar to certain localities. As illustrations, the watermelons of Georgia, the kale of Norfolk and the sweet potatoes of eastern Maryland and of New Jersey stand out preeminently. The northern areas of the trucking region also are characterized by particular crops adapted to comparatively restricted areas.

Leaking Drains.—Faulty junctions of drain laterals with mains are the cause of impeding the flow of water in the main, and of lodging silt and finally blocking the drain, says the Engineer Magazine. It is sometimes best, when the lateral has plenty of fall, to make the junction two inches above the head of the main. In any event, the junction should not be right angled, but preferably at an angle of 30 degrees. The silt basin is a valuable device in draining; its use and importance cannot be too well understood. It may be used at the junction of two or more drains in a line of drain, where it is necessary to change the grade from a steeper to a less steep one. The purpose of the silt basin is to collect silt or mud in a part of the basin below the line of tile, and thus prevent the silt from lodging in the drain and finally blocking the flow. In form the basin is a small well, 12 to 24 inches in diameter, extending from 12 inches below the line of tile to the ground surface, where it is provided with a movable cover to allow occasional cleaning. It may be constructed of brick, stone or plank.

Liquid Manure.—If it be true, as the experiment stations seem to prove, that the liquid excrement of live stock contains more than 50 per cent. of all the fertilizing properties of the foods fed, it would seem to be especially important that a campaign be begun to induce stockmen to save and use these liquids. New England would be much more prosperous if this were done.

MELONS OF EGYPT ARE GROWN IN SOUTH DAKOTA

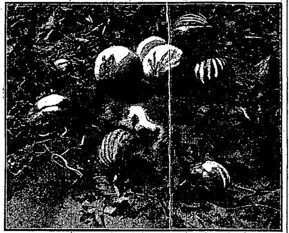
Direct Descendants from the Very Melons Which Our Hebrew Brethern So Loudly Bewailed While Traversing the Desert.

A new melon in which the seeds are separate from the flesh, and is probably a type of the earliest melons known.

"And the children of Israel wept again and said: We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons; . . . And now our soul is dried away, there is nothing at all beside this manna."—Numbers 11:5.

This is perhaps the first well-recorded case of a riot over the menu of a camping-out party; but that is not the point of interest so much as that this also is the first record of the melon. Nor, really, can it be wondered at that there was some disappointment at the loss of the melons, though we have no real idea in these days of what manna was, or its toothsomeness.

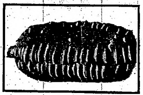
The melon of Egypt is supposed to have been of African origin, though this is not certain. The muskmelon has never been found in a wild state, and is supposed to have originated in India and to have been brought thence by way of Persia. Melons from seed brought from Armenia were cultivated three centuries ago at Cantaluppi, near Rome, and thence were introduced all over Europe under the name of cantaloupes, whence our present name for them, which is being supplanted in the market by the cognomen of Rocky Ford; for once the cantaloupe gets into the hands of the dealer, it may be raised in Indiana or any other seaport, but it is always a Rocky Ford.



A Bunch of Melons.

The two accompanying photographs have great interest from two reasons: They show melons which are new in this country and which are no doubt direct descendants from the very melons which our Hebrew brethren so loudly bewailed while traversing the desert. I found them on the garden of Martin Doerksen, whose farm is in the flourishing Mennonite settlement numbering a half-hundred families, near the beautiful little city of Meade, Kan. There are two kinds of melons shown in the first photographs—watermelons and muskmelons. The watermelons are in the heap in the center. They are not strictly peculiar as compared with our American watermelons, except that they are small, nearly round, very light in color on the outside and also on the inside, and very sweet. The three muskmelons at the bottom of the picture are entirely different from anything raised in America. The outside is a pale yellow, and ribbed. In size they are as large as the usual run of muskmelons. The flesh is a deep orange in color, very thick, very sweet, and deliciously fragrant. The peculiarity of this melon is in the arrangement of the seeds. They are not spread through the flesh, as in the American melons, but are all in a hard mass in the center, looking exactly like a nubbin of corn. The second photograph shows these seeds. When the melon is cut, this core is taken out, a stick thrust through it, and it is hung to the rafters of the kitchen until melon-planting time of the following year. Before planting, the seeds are separated and then planted as any other melons are planted. Both sorts are prolific growers, come early and go late. They are among the first melons on the place to ripen, and there are melons on the vines until frost comes. All the melons shown grew on two vines, and very many had been plucked from the same vines.

Mr. Doerksen stated that he brought the watermelon seed from the province of Taurida, in southern Russia; and that it is there called the Astrachan. The muskmelon seed he brought from the shores of the Caspian sea, and it is called there the Kluemelon.



The Seed.

It requires very little research, when the history of the Mennonites is considered, to connect these melons with the most ancient and historical forms of this fruit of the vine; and the peculiarity of the arrangements of the seeds in the Kluemelon would make it very attractive to the housewife because they are not "mussy" to serve. The eater would enjoy the absence of the seeds also. Properly cultivated it would probably produce a melon which would be in great demand.

PRESERVE THE SPRING LAID EGG

Hen Product of This Time of Year Best.

Recent investigations show that eggs laid in May and early June keep better than those laid at any other time of the year, and for that reason eggs laid at this particular time of the year should be preserved.

It has been found that water glass when properly made seals the eggs and prevents further infection when kept at a comparatively low temperature. Water glass can usually be obtained through druggists at from $1 to $1.25 a gallon, a gallon of the water glass being made into ten gallons of preservative by simply dissolving it in nine gallons of water which has been boiled and cooled before use. The preserved egg should be kept in a cellar or room of even temperature, which does not go above 60 degrees.

It has been discovered that eggs may be infected with bacteria of decay in the oviduct before the egg is laid, and through pores and defects in the shell after the egg is laid. Much can be done to reduce the chances of infection and to reduce or prevent the injurious effects of infection, thereby greatly improving the keeping quality of the eggs.

In the first place the hens should be kept in as nearly perfect health as possible and should be given enough shell forming food to enable them to make strong shells of uniform thickness. Clean nesting places are necessary to prevent infection in the nest. The eggs should be gathered daily and kept in a dry, cool room or cellar, where the sun's rays do not fall directly upon them. Only clean eggs should be used for preservation, and these should be placed in the preservative within twenty-four hous after they are laid.

If care is taken to select clean, sound eggs, and proper precautions are observed in carrying out the details of the method of preservation as above indicated, it is believed that water glass furnishes a cheap, reliable and easily employed preservative for domestic use, and by its use everyone having a supply of fresh eggs in the spring can make a considerable saving and at the same time have a larger number of fresh eggs to use in the winter.

Sell Nothing But the Best.—If farmers will make it a rule to send only the best to the market they will get more money for one-half of the crop when prices are low than for the whole. When the markets are well supplied only the best will sell. Not only should the articles be selected, but they should be uniform—of the same quality—at the bottom of the basket as at the top. Instead of reducing the price of potatoes by sending the very small ones to the market, keep those that are unsalable, feed them on the farm and they will then be more valuable.

Potatoes from Sprouts.—The British agricultural colleges have been testing the growing of potatoes from sprouts with great success. A Daily Scotsman forwarded by Vice-Consul Charles Drysdale of Dunfermline says that the yield and quality have both been increased and the disease-resisting powers strengthened.

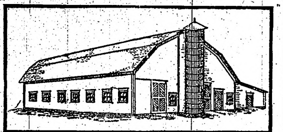
DETAILED PLAN FOR PRACTICAL FARM BUILDING

Complete Design Given for Erection of Structure that Will Accommodate, Horses, Cattle, Feed and Other Accessories.



Barn for Mixed Farming.

The farmer who can so adjust his work that he may dispense with the help of one man is lucky indeed, but many a farmer has done so by simply changing his system of feeding and caring for the stock; also by so disposing of the grain and hay that instead of hauling many tons of it to market it is fed on the farm, and the beef, pork, butter, cheese, etc., sold. This allows the farmer to restore to the ground at least a part of the fertility in the shape of manure.

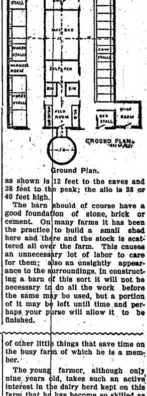
The barn plan shown herewith in the two illustrations, the ground plan and the perspective view, is so arranged that one man may feed and care for the stock in a short time. As shown on the floor plan, the barn will accommodate 14 cows, 12 horses, has box stalls for both the cows and horses, also a large calf pen. The installation of manure carriers and hay fork is very easy, and these will soon pay for themselves in the labor saved. A feature of the barn not to be overlooked is the arrangement of the feed room and silo. The four-foot chute extends the entire length of the silo, and has small windows for light, a tight door below separating same from the feed room to keep out dust and odors. The silage is dropped down this chute, and from there shoveled to the mixing boxes—one for the cows and one for the horses. There are two bins in the feed room and two more may be located on the floor above and connected by small spouts for drawing off the grain. These spouts may be located directly over the mixing boxes. All hay is supposed to be fed from above, one hay chute being provided for each two stalls.

The milk room being located as it is, the milk may be taken to it at once. In this room should be located the separator, also plenty of clean water; if possible running water should be provided. The shop is a very necessary room, and it will save many small repair bills. In it may be stored the nails, bolts, etc. In the horse barn the harness room is located in the center, which makes it handy to all parts of the same. The two box stalls provide room for both male animals as well as sick and ailing ones.

The hay bay is supposed to be open clear to the roof. However, some farmers may wish to arrange this space different. The partition separating the cows from the center section is boarded or plastered up tight, excepting the calf pen, to separate the cows from any odors, dust or dirt from the other animals. The box stalls, however, in both the cow and horse barn are so constructed that the inmates may have a good view of the other animals. They like company, and will do better if they can see their neighbors.

The floors of the cow stable, the milk room, feed room, and silo are of cement, the gutter being formed in the floor and having a four-inch drain at the rear leading to the manure pit. The stalls are made to fit both long and short cows. The first stall in front is four feet wide and five feet long. The rear stall is three feet six inches wide and four feet eight inches long. The stalls then slope from front to the rear, each stall being slightly shorter. Stalls are now constructed in so many different ways that it is hardly worth while to mention them, every cow man having his own views of the matter. However, it is wise to so build them that the stall may be easily cleaned and washed. This construction will comply with all sanitary requirements of inspectors. The floor of the horse stable may be of cement or clay.

The location, the local supply of materials, etc., will of course govern to a certain extent the material entering the construction of any building, and, in fact, all buildings. The barn as shown is 12 feet to the eaves and 38 feet to the peak; the silo is 38 or 40 feet high.



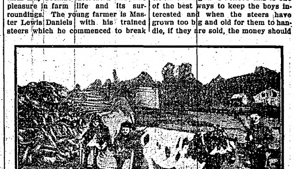
Ground Plan.

The barn should of course have a good foundation of stone, brick or cement. On many farms it has been the practice to build a small shed here and there and the stock is scattered all over the farm. This causes an unnecessary lot of labor to care for them; also an unsightly appearance to the surroundings. In constructing a barn of this sort it will not be necessary to do all the work before the same may be used, but a portion of it may be left until time and perhaps your purse will allow it to be finished.

KEEP BOYS AND GIRLS INTERESTED

Children Should Take Pleasure in Farm Life.

The accompanying picture shows one way how the boys and girls of the farm may became interested and take pleasure in farm life and its surroundings. The young farmer is Master Lewis Daniels with his trained steers which he commenced to break when they were only three weeks old and which were so well trained when this picture was taken that he could drive them anywhere, either riding on the wagon or driving alongside. They have become so handy, and the driver as well, that they do lots of small jobs on the farm, such as drawing wood from the pile where it is sawed and split to the house sheds, carting feed to the chicken houses, gathering leaves to put in the pig pens and lots of other little things that save time on the busy farm of which he is a member.



Master Lewis Daniels and His Trained Steers.

The young farmer, although only nine years old, takes such an active interest in the dairy herd kept on this farm that he has become so skilled as to have charge of the feeding of the twenty or more head of calves and young stock, that the owners only deem it necessary to give them occasional oversight. I believe this is one of the best ways to keep the boys interested and when the steers have grown too big and old for them to handle, if they are sold, the money should be placed in the bank to their credit, and the future will hold for them a strong tendency to remain upon the farm.—H. O. Daniels.

Tips Abolished by State Law.

The state of Washington has abolished the tip in hotels, dining cars and other public places. The new law makes both the giving and receiving of a tip a misdemeanor, and imposes a heavy fine.

Bill to Protect Hunters.

If hunters after bear or deer do not wear a red coat and a red cap they will subject themselves to a fine of $25 or twenty-five days in jail if a bill which Representative James C. Cole of Adams county introduced tonight becomes a law.

A red sweater, the bill says, will do, but it does not specify permission for a red hat instead of a cap. The object is to prevent hunters from being shot as supposed game.

Plain-Spoken Women.

It would be of advantage to us if we could dispense with all that verbiage, that frothy flood of polite utterances which are only too often used and substitute a little plain speaking in their place.

The Road to Fortune.

The easiest way to coin money in these hard times is to participate in the manufacture—either as writer, producer, composer, or publisher—of a popular musical comedy.

BURDENS LIFTED

From Bent Backs.

A bad back is a heavy handicap to those of us who have to work every day. Nine times out of ten, backache tells of kidney weakness. The only way to find relief is to cure the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills have given sound strong backs to thousands of men and women. Mrs. Wesley Clemens, 311 Marion St., Manchester, Ia., says: "Constant work at a sewing machine seemed to bring on kidney trouble. The kidney action was irregular and the pains in my back and loins so severe I could hardly endure it. Doan's Kidney Pills made me feel better in a short time, and I took them until entirely free from my trouble."

Breaking the News.

Marion, who had been taught to report her misdeeds promptly, came to her mother one day, sobbing penitently,

"Mother, I—I—broke a brick in the fireplace."

"Well, that is not very hard to remedy. But how on earth did you do it, child?"

"I pounded it with father's watch."

SKIN ROUGH AS BARK.

Baby Boy Had Intense Itching Humor —Scratched Till Blood Ran.

Found a Cure in Cuticura.

"Our son, two years old, was afflicted with a rash. After he suffered with the trouble several weeks I took him to the doctor but it got worse. The rash ran together and made large blisters. The little fellow didn't want to do anything but scratch and we had to wrap his hands up to keep him from tearing the flesh open till the blood would run. The itching was intense. The skin on his back became hard and rough like the bark of a tree. He suffered intensely for about three months. But I found a remedy in Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. The result was almost magical. That was more than two years ago and there has not been the slightest symptom of it since he was cured. J. W. Lauck, Yukon, Okla., Aug. 28 and Sept. 17, 1908."

The Speaker a Servant.

The speaker is the servant of the house, says Joseph G. Cannon in the Century. The speaker is elected by a majority of the members, and he can be deposed and another man elected any hour of any day that he fails to fulfil the duties of the office as the majority would have it fulfilled. And yet there are men who profess to be well-informed on public affairs who tell people that the speaker is a power in himself without regard to the majority. These people are not entirely disingenous; they have method in their misrepresentation.

People Talk About Good Things.

Fourteen years ago few people knew of such a preparation as a Powder for the Feet. To-day after the genuine merits of Allen's Foot-Ease have been told year after year by grateful persons, it is indispensable to millions. It is cleanly, wholesome, healing and antiseptic and gives rest and comfort to tired aching feet. It cures while you walk. Over 30,000 testimonials. Imitations pay the dealer a larger profit otherwise you would never be offered a substitute for Allen's Foot-Ease, the original foot powder. Ask for Allen's Foot-Ease, and see that you get it.

A Hairbreadth Escape.

Charles E. Bigelow, the comedian, is bald, except for a rim of hair a few inches above his collar line.

"I'm in an awful hurry,' he said one day to the Lambs' club barber; "can you cut my hair with my collar on?"

Remember, the real flavor of crushed mint leaves costs no more than rank imitations. Insist on WRIGLEY'S SPEARMINT.

CALUMET
Baking Powder
Received
Highest Award
World's Pure Food Exposition
Chicago, November, 1907
What does this mean?

It means that Calumet has set a new Standard in Baking Powder—the standard of the World.

Because this award was given to Calumet after thorough tests and experiments, over all other baking powders.

And this means that Calumet produces the best, most delicious, lightest, and purest baking of all baking powders.

Doesn't that mean everything to you?

$1.00 Per Year in Advance

The Duluth Daily Star has ceased to twinkle. The Herald is such a good evening paper that there is no room for opposition.

When the tariff bill gets back to the house the congressmen will hardly recognize the child they abandoned to the mercies of the United States senate.

Ex-Senator Foraker wants to be the republican candidate for governor of Ohio. He evidently doesn't realize that the people of Ohio really meant it.

According to the Mankato Free Press Senator S. Works of that city is about to leave Mankato. He has been offered a position of manager by a large California lumber company at a salary of $7,000 per annum. If he accepts the position he will take his family to San Fransisco or Portland, Oregon.

For drastic automobile laws Florida can probably take the palm. The legislature has passed bills, which, among other things, provide, that when motor cars driven along a public highway, meet another vehicle the chauffeur shall stop his machine, and if there are women and children in the other carriage he must get out and help to guide the animals drawing it, whether they are horses, mules or oxen, safely by his machine. How the law is to be enforced southern papers do not state.

New York's new law for the protection of its forests contains provisions which might well have been added to the otherwise excellent law passed by the Minnesota legislature, says the Pioneer Press. This provision empowers the governor to "suspend the hunting season" in times of unusual drouth. Of course, it is offensive to the hunters. But everyone of them carries to the woods an added peril of fire from his gun, from his cigar, from his matches and from his camfire; and, with such vast interests at stake his exclusion from the forest is only a reasonable precaution. Even the camera-hunter is not a desirable visitant at times when grass and schrubs are converted into tinder, and when a flame "spreads like wildfire."

Beltrami County Still in the Limelight.

Minneapolis Tribune: Beltrami county is again in the limelight as a result of the examinations made by Deputy M. F. Kane, into county conditions at Bemidji. As a result, County Auditor Wiltman and Commissioners Wright, Sibley, Gunderson and Dannaher have been indicted and an effort will be made to have Governor Johnson remove the offenders. This would mean that the governor will send a commission to the scene to take evidence, and a continuation of the politics of the fight will result. It is charged against the men that they have been making illegal allowances, letting bad roads and other contracts and participating in them. Two years ago Governor Johnson removed two of the commissioners, Wright and Sibley, but they were re-elected by the voters. The county's affairs have been in a bad state and the last legislature allowed them to issue bonds in the sum of $100,000 to satisfy floating indebtedness, and it is possible that this bond may be re-called. The fight which Bemidji made for the location of the State Normal school was for the purpose of encouraging conditions there. Deputy Kane had difficulty in securing the indictments and it is doubtful if convictions will result, although Governor Johnson seems certain to take action.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Mankato Review: According to Senator Aldrich's theories, what the American workman needs is to be taxed more heavily on the necessaries of life. Apparently he not only is less efficient than he has been told he was, but his cup of happiness will not be overflowing until he is made to pay more for the food, clothing and shelter that he and his family require in order to exist.

Cass Lake Times: The income tax provision of the tariff reform measures is dead at least for the present session of congress. There are too many millionaires in congress for the little fellows who want relief to get anything that will tend to even up taxation. An excellent catch phrase in coming campaigns will be, elect no millionaire to a public office, especially to congress, if relief is expected. A 2 or 3 per cent income tax reaching everybody would be a blessing, the same to apply to incomes of over a fixed sum would be better, but so long as self controls congress there'll be no income tax.

The Best Road Material

Among other laws Mr. Hill laid down was that gravel wasn't material for sufacing roads. Trap rock or crushed granite shoul be used, the preference being for trap rock. To show its superiority, the "hog wallows" above referred to were compared with a piece of road built elsewhere of trap rock eleven years ago and never resurfaced, which is still smooth and even. To be sure trap rock costs 2000 a mile more than gravel or the crushed native stone, but big figures don't appal Mr. Hill. He's used to them. Now trap rock does not signify that it is secured by any such devices as is used in capturing roads. Trap is a geological term and signifies "a heavy igneous rock, as basalt, less ancient than the granite and older than the recent volcanic rocks." It can be secured in several places in the state, some of them not too far from St. Paul.

Who Will Foot the Bills?

Automobiles account for much of the interest Mr. Hill and many of his class have in good roads. Incidentally automobiles play the very dickens with the roads. Streets also. Oil dripping from autos disintegrate asphalt. Only the very best roads can stand the strain of heavy touring cars. In St. Paul, possibly elsewhere, the wealthy men who own automobiles have something of a pull. That's one reason why, after the tour of inspection referred to, the county commissioners held a special session and so changed the specificaions of contracts already entered into, that on certain new roads trap rock or granite is to take the place of limestone or gravel as surfacing material, which is a good thing for the roads as well as for the automobiles. Incidentally good also for the railroads which will have the material to haul. In Ramsey county if our new assessor does his duty as he seems inclined to, possibly automobile owners will make an equitable contribution to the added expense. Whether or not some system can be devised to make them pay for damages done elsewhere to the country roads and require them to contribute to their maintenance is one of the questions which will in the future doubtless come up for legislative consideration.

The Legal Department Less Strenous

They tell me that in other directions in the Midway district where the scenes I have mentioned may be found, there are other things—blind pigs for instance. Which leads me to note that a less strenuous policy is pursued under its present incubent with regard to infractions of the law in this respect than by his predecessor. I learn that it is the view of the attorney general that the prosecution in this regard lays with the sheriffs whose duty as agents of the executive is to initiate proceedings against officials who don't enforce the laws. At all events the big stick is conspicuously laid on the shelf, notwithstanding the fact that requests more or less urgent to bring it into use have been made by some who had concluded that as a result of recent court decisions the legal department would not be appealed to in vain to bring to local officials a proper sense of neglected duties.

Nelson's Star In the Ascendant

Senator Nelson is winning warm econiums from all parts of the state for the splendid work he has recently done in fighting the battle of tariff reform. His present course has gone far to make people forget some things in his record of which they could not approve, notably his advocacy of the ship subsidy steal, and the state is being congratulated that there is in the Washington delegation at least one man besides Congressman Hammond who is worthily fighting the people's battles against the Aldrich iniquity. His action is compared with the weak and facilitating course pursued by Senator Clapp, whose action is doubtless due to influences which at Washington are only too apt to make people forget the interests of their constituents at home. It is a matter of general regret that the junior senator has not like his senior senator proved brave enough or strong enough to defy them.

Eberhart's Campaign

The other candidates for governor, and of aspirants to this position some score of names are mentioned, will have to hustle pretty soon or Lieutenant Eberhart will have the job pre-empted. Besides having powerful friends he has active advocates and a singularly resourceful literary bureau which is doing work which cannot fail to prove effective. That his candidacy has a considerable official sinction and has become really formidable seems clear, nor does there appear to be many grounds on whcih his right to succession can be logically contested. The wide acquaintance he has formed through two campaigns, the efficiency with which he discharged the duties of presiding officer of the senate and the favor with which his candidacy is regarded by the leaders of the party all point to a successful issue of the carefully planned campaign now being conducted in his interest.

Stop That Cold

To check early colds or Grippe with "Preventics" means sure defeat for Pneumonia. To stop a cold with Preventics is safer than to let it run and be obliged to cure it afterwards. THE DOCTOR'S TEST.

By ELBERT T. BENTLEY.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

We physicians need to exercise great care to avoid becoming victims of imposition. We are constantly called upon for expert testimony on the matter of claims or criminal cases where it often requires ingenuity rather than professional skill to get at the truth.

As an oculist I was called upon to pass upon a matter involving considerable money between two young women cousins, Eunice and Alice Jaynes. The ownership of a large property depended upon whether a certain paper had been written and signed by one of them. Eunice Jaynes claimed that she was totally blind and had been so during the period that it was claimed she signed the paper. If so, she could not have written and signed it without showing the fact that she was blind. It was claimed by her counsel that the paper was a forgery. Other oculists had examined the girl and signed certificates that she was entirely blind in both eyes. It was agreed that if I confirmed their opinion no further effort would be made to impeach her testimony and the case would be decided in her favor.

The girl did not please me. There was an expression on her face I did not like. Nature provides this telltale expression that we may distinguish the bad from the good, though I confess there may be counterfeit expressions so perfect as to avoid detection. On the other hand, I had seen her cousin and had at once been struck with a native honesty stamped on every feature of her face. Her case depended on me. If I decided that Eunice was blind I would give her a fortune. If I could prove that Eunice could see the property would go to Alice.

I examined Eunice first as to the surface of her eyes. Their condition was normal, but this did not prove she could see. I applied tests of very strong light. The girl did not blink and professed not to be able to distinguish between light and darkness. I did not believe that any one could stand this light test without a quiver of a muscle. It looked as if the nerves of the eyes were perfectly dead. I applied other tests, but did not have the confidence in them I had in the light test. The girl stood every one of them.

I gave up trying to prove by professional tests that Eunice Jaynes could see. It looked as if I must sign a certificate that she was stone blind. There was no defect in the eyes, for such could be discovered by any competent oculist. But a defect of the nerve might not be detected. I asked her if she had ever received a blow on her temple. She thought for some time and said that some years before on going upstairs in the dark she had tripped, fallen and struck her head on the stairs in a place upon which she laid her finger. It was her temple.

I had had cases of young men hit with a baseball in that region with a consequent blindness in the eye on the side struck. Since the nerves of the eyes cross, the remaining eye is liable to be affected. I asked the girl if she had discovered after the accident any difference in the sight of the eyes. She replied that when the sight commenced to fail it failed in both eyes at the same time—that is, so far as she knew.

I made up my mind to try one unprofessional test and if she stood that I would sign the certificate of her blindness. But the nature of the test required witnesses, because it was unprofessional. I directed the girl to come to my office next morning at a certain hour. I had my witnesses in my consulting room and received the girl in my waiting room. I blindfolded her so carefully that I was sure she could not get a ray of light, placing a bandage over her eyes, with two fillers for the eye sockets attached. When this was done to my satisfaction I led her into my consulting room and placed her in a chair before my witnesses. Then, taking up a mouse trap I had ready, I took a mouse out of it and held it by the tip of the tail close to but not touching the girl's face. Then I suddenly removed the bandage.

The instant Eunice Jaynes saw the wriggling little rodent within a few inches of her face she not only drew away, but uttered a slight scream.

Where my professional skill had failed my knowledge of feminine instinct succeeded. The proof was positive. I not only declined to certify that the girl was blind, but certified that she could see. The witnesses also certified to the demonstration of fact.

Of course the verdict was in favor of Alice Jaynes and on my testimony. The case excited a great deal of comment, with many thrusts at the professional tests of my brother practitioners and many compliments upon what were termed my "practical sense and absence of professional tomfoolery." This was naturally very gratifying to me, but something better was in store for me.

The day after the verdict on going to my office I found there a magnificent bouquet of flowers, with an accompanying card bearing the name of Alice Jaynes.

I did not propose to thank the fair donor in a note, and the same evening I called upon her for the purpose. I found her brimful of gratitude to me for saving her property to her and admiration for my ingenuity. When I finished my call, which seemed to me to have lasted half an hour, in looking at my watch I found that it had lasted three hours. I am now Alice Jaynes' husband.

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.
CONRAD LOHR,
Anderson, Ind. 122 E. 19th St.

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

For Health SUNKIST ORANGES SUNKIST LEMONS Mostly Seedless

Sweet "Sunkist" Oranges
Juicy "Sunkist" Lemons

The orange groves of Sunny California have never grown more perfect fruit than the present crop. And the choicest yield of 5,000 famous orchards have been labled "Sunkist." Rich, golden globes of sweetness.

When you buy oranges and lemons insist upon the best. The "Sunkist" brands cost no more than the common varieties.

Always look for the name "Sunkist" on the box. It stands for the finest quality in oranges and lemons. It is there for your protection. It insures carefully selected fruit.

The California Fruit Growers' Exchange devote their energy, ambition and money to the cultivation of this brand. They are the richest in flavor, the firmest and the juiciest. Truly sun-kissed.

Tree-Ripened and Hand-Picked

Eat "Sunkist" oranges for health. To see them is to want them. To taste them is to want more. Keep them on your table at all times.
Use "Sunkist" lemons for flavoring and for lemonade.

Any lady reader of this paper will receive, on request, a clever "No-Drip" coffee strainer coupon privilege, from Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. It is silver plated, very pretty and positively prevents all dripping of tea or coffee. The doctor sends it with his new free book on "Health Coffee" simply to introduce this clever substitute for real coffee. Dr. Shoop's Health Coffee is gaining its great popularity because of: first, its exquisite taste and flavor; second, its absolute healthfulness; third, its economy—1½ pound 25c; fourth, its convenience. No tedious 20 to 80 minutes boiling. "Made in a minute" says Dr. Shoop. Try it at your grocer's for a pleasant surprise. For sale by all grocers.

If sickness, if a certain hidden nerve goes wrong, then the organ that this nerve controls will also surely fail. It may be a stomach nerve, or it may have strength and support to the heart or kidneys. It was Dr. Shoop that first pointed to this truth. Dr. Shoop's restorative was not made to dose the stomach nor to temporarily stimulate the heart or kidneys. That old-fashioned method is all wrong. Dr. Shoop's Restorative goes directly to these failing inside nerves. The remarkable success of this prescription demonstrates the wisdom of treating the actual cause of these failing organs. And it is indeed easy to prove. A simple five or ten days test, will surely tell. Try it once, and see. Sold by all dealers.

Increased Train Service

NORTHERN PACIFIC

Effective May 28, 1909, the Northern Pacific Railway augmented its passenger train service by the establishment of new trains not alone between eastern and western terminals, but locally on main lines and branches in the several states which it serves.

It has thus placed in closer touch than ever the different sections, the various cities and towns, the thriving communities, which for twenty-six years the Northern Pacific has aided and fostered in growth and progress.

This increased efficiency of service means much to the territory tributary to the Northern Pacific Railway.

Additional lines projected or actually under construction will still further increase the scope of Northern Pacific co-operation in the development of the Northwest in the course of the next year or two.

The present through service comprises affording through equipment without change between Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Fargo, Jamestown, Bismarck, Mandan, Glendive, Terry, Miles City, Forsythe, St. Louis, Kansas City, Omaha, Billings, Butte, Helena, Missoula, Spokane, Portland, Tacoma, Seattle and Puget Sound.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of fifty two and no 100 dollars, which became due on the 23rd. day of January 1909, all of which is due and claimed to be due at the date of this Notice, upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by John P. Enstad and Caroline Enstad, his wife, mortgagors, to J. A. Duffy, mortgagee, bearing date the 23rd. day of January, 1905, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake in the State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of February 1905, at 1:30 o'clock P. M. of said day in Book 29 of mortgages on page 617, which said mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter duly assigned by said J. A. Duffy, mortgagee, unto The Netherlands American Mortgage Bank, a corporation, by a written assignment, dated February 13th, 1905, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of said County, on the 15th day of February 1905, at 9:00 o'clock A. M. of said day in Book 15 of Mortgages at page 189.

And Whereas, pursuant to the terms and conditions of said mortgage by reason of said default the whole principal sum of said mortgage unpaid became at once due and payable, and was so declared by the owner of said mortgage; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due on said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, at the date of this Notice the sum of eight hundred seventy three and 23-100 dollars; ($873.23) and the power of sale having become operative, and no action or proceedings having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit: The Southwest Quarter of section numbered eighteen (18) in Township numbered one hundred fifty three (153) North of Range No. forty five (45) West of the 5th principal Meridian in the State of Minnesota, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake County, at the front door of the Post Office in the city of Red Lake Falls, in the County of Red Lake, in the State of Minnesota, on the 26th day of June, A. D. 1909, at ten o'clock in the forenoon of said day, at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $873.23 and interest and taxes if any, on said premises, and fifty and no-100 dollars attorney's fees, stipulated and agreed in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

PROCEEDINGS

Commissioners' Proceedings of Red Lake County, Minn.

Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.
June 4th 1909.

Pursuant to adjournment the board of county commissioners of Red Lake county, Minnesota, met in special session at the office of the county auditor, in the city of Red Lake Falls, in said county, at ten o'clock a. m.

Members present Lindquist, Shaw, Aubol, Demann and Pigeon.

Members absent, none.

Meeting called to order by the chairman at ten o'clock a. m.

All members present.

Moved by Commissioner Demann and seconded by Commissioner Pigeon that the board take a recess until one o'clock p. m., in respect to the memory of the late John B. O'Brien, county auditor, deceased, and the late Ole T. Tandberg, county treasurer, deceased.

Motion carried.

Meeting called to order by the chairman at one o'clock p. m.

All members present.

Whereas, The great and supreme Ruler of the Universe has in His infinite wisdom removed from our midst of our esteemed citizen and co-worker, John B. O'Brien; and whereas, the long and eminent relation held with him in the faithful discharge of his duties as county auditor of the county of Red Lake, and state of Minnesota, and as a citizen of our great state makes it eminently befitting that we, the board of county commissioners in and for the county of Red Lake and state of Minnesoat, record our appreciation of him at this, a special meeting of said board held this fourth day of June, A. D. 1909; Wherefore,

Be It Resolved, that the wisdom and ability which he has exercised in the aid of good citizenship, and the administration of public affairs by service, counsel and the honest, honorable and upright life he led, not only in private life but also as a public official will be held in grateful remembrance;

Be It Resolved, That the sudden removal of such a life and character from among us leaves a vacancy and sorrow that will be deeply realized by all good citizens in Red Lake county, Minn., and will prove a serious loss to the public at large,

Be It Resolved That with deep sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the deceased we express our hope that so great a loss all may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well,

Be It Further Resolved That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this board, that a copy of said resolutions be sent to the widow of our beloved friend, and a copy of said resolutions printed in the official paper of Red Lake county, Minnesota.

Said resolutions having been offered by Commissioner Aubol, and seconded by Commissioner Demann.

Resolutions adopted by a unanimous vote.

C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman.
Attest:—A. A. Latendresse,
Auditor.

Motion made by Commissioner Aubol duly seconded by Commissioner Demann that the matter of reconsidering the order forming school district No. 61, be laid over until the meeting of the board on June 10th, 1909.

Motion carried unanimously.

Motion made by Commissioner Shaw seconded by Commissioner Demann that the petition of John Norman to be set off from school district No. 102 to school district No. 227 be rejected.

Motion carried.

The petition of E. H. Besancon and others for the formation of a new school district was considered, no one appearing to be heard for or against the granting of the same. On motion made by Commissioner Demann seconded by Commissioner Pigeon and carried unanimously the said petition was granted and the following order establishing such new school district was made:

Whereas, a petition signed and duly acknowledged by a majority of the freeholders who are entitled to vote at school meetings in their respective districts, residing within the territory of the proposed new school district, asking for the formation of a new school district, which shall embrace the territory hereinafter described, was presented to the county board of this county, at a session of said board held on the 30th day of May A. D. 1909, for the action of said board thereon.

And Whereas, It was then ordered by said board that a hearing should be had on said petition, at a session of said board commencing on the 4th day of June, A. D. 1909, at the office of the county auditor, in the city of Red Lake Falls, in said county.

And Whereas, Due notice of the time and place of such hearing has been given by posting a copy of said notice in three of the most public places in each of the school districts to be affected by said petition ten days prior to the day of such hearing, and by mailing to the clerk of each of said school districts so affected thereby a true copy of such notice, at least ten days before the time appointed for such hearing and by the publication of said notice for two weeks in the legal newspaper printed and published in said Red Lake county, towit, Red Lake Falls Gazette which said newspaper last mentioned is printed and published in said county, and was duly designated by said county board for the publishing of the same, and due proofs of the posting and service and publication of said notice of hearing having been made and filed, by the affidavit of E. H. Besancon who posted said notice and by the certificate of the County Auditor of said County, who served the said notice upon each of the clerks of said districts affected thereby, and by the affidavit of the pubilsher of said newspaper in which the same was so published, respectively.

And Whereas, At the session of the said county board commencing on said 4th day of June, A. D. 1909, said petition was publicly read and considered, and arguments of all persons interested herein for and against the organization of said proposed new district duly heard and considered.

It Is Hereby Ordered And Determined, That said petition be granted and the following described teritory to-wit:

Three miles wide and four and one-half miles long, being the east one half of Goodridge township in Red Lake county, Minn., being sections twenty-two, twenty-three, twenty-four, twenty-five, twenty-six, twenty-seven, thirty-four, thirty-five and thirty-six, in township one hundred and fifty four (154), range forty (40) west, also south halves of sections ten, eleven, and twelve, and all of sections thirteen, fourteen and fifteen, all in the township of Goodridge, county of Red Lake, state of Minnesota, be and the same is hereby organized and constituted a school district, and shall be hereafter designated and known as common school district No. 62 of the county of Red Lake, state of Minnesota.

It Is Furher Ordered And Determined, That the 24th day of June A. D. 1909, at 7 o'clock in the afternoon, at the house of E. H. Besancon on the southeast quarter of section 25 in township 154, range 40 in said district be and the same is hereby fixed as the time and place, when and where, the first meeting of the electors of said district who are qualified to vote at school meetings, will be held to organize said district, and that the county auditor cause ten days posted notice to be given of the time and place of such meeting as required by law. The county auditor will mail to the clerk of each of the districts affected by this order a true copy thereof.

By order of the county board of Red Lake county, Minnesota.

C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman of Board.
Attest: A. A. Latendresse,
County Auditor of said Red Lake county, Minnesota.
Dated this 4th day of June, 1909.
(County Auditor, Red)
(Lake County, Minn.)

The petition of Ole Oveson and others for the formation of a new school district was considered and no one appearing to be heard for or against the granting of the same on motion made by Commissioner Shaw and seconded by Commissioner Demann and carried unanimously the said petition was granted, by adding the North east quarter and the west half of section Ten (10) also the South west quarter of Section Three (3) in Township 153 Range No. 41, to the lands already included in the proposed new school district, the County Superintendent of schools having recommended said change, and the following order establishing such new school district was made:

Whereas, a petition signed and duly acknowled by a majority of the freeholders who are entitled to vote at school meetings in their respective districts, residing within the territory of the proposed new school district, asking for the formation of a new school district which shall embrace the territory hereinafter described, was presented to the County Board of this County, at a session of said Board held on the 30th day of May, A. Forestry and Fire Wardens.

Chapter 22 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota, 1905, entitled "Forestry and fire wardens," requires the Forestry Commissioner to prepare an abstract of the penal laws relating to forest and prairie fires and he may require any county board to cause at least three weeks published notice thereof to be given. The following is accordingly hereby published:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.
Office of Forestry Commissioner.
St. Paul, April 15, 1909.

The law of Minnesota for preventing and suppressing forest and prairie fires, as amended by Chapter 182, Laws of 1909, makes town supervisors, town clerks, village presidents, and mayors of cities fire wardens, and requires them to take precautions against such fires, report them promptly, and prosecute offenders.

THE LAW FORBIDS

Setting fires and not extinguishing it before it endangers the property of another.

Throwing or dropping burning substance into combustible material without extinguishing same.

Starting camp-fire without clearing ground within a radius of ten feet.

Setting fire to brush or slashings or other combustible material in a dry season, or allowing fire to be burning or smouldering in such season.

Those who cut timber or wood to sell must pile the slashings and burn the same as soon as practicable, and when it can be done without danger, and before the first of May.

Rangers may be appointed in a dry and dangerous season.

Railroad companies must keep their right of ways clear of combustible material, extinguish fires that occur near their lines of roads, also patrol their roads in dangerous weather. The master mechanic and locomotive engineer, as well as the company, are responsible for the efficiency of spark arresters.

The minimum penalty for violation of any of the provisions of this law is $50; the maximum penalty, $100 and three months imprisonment in jail.

C. C. ANDREWS,
Forestry Commissioner.

FORESHADOWS FINAL DOOM OF AUTOCRACY

Sultan's Downfall Carries Advance of Liberal Government Into Final Citadels of Tyrants.

When the principle of liberal government is able to storm such a citadel of absolutism as the castle of the ruler of Turkey, one of the great traditional despots of the world, there is no autocrat who has a right to feel comfortable on his throne.

The shah of Persia, whose position has been for centuries analagous to that of the sultan, except that he has not caused such rivers of blood to flow, must in the present unsettled condition of affairs in his own country find plenty to give him the pause in the downfall of "Abdul the Damned."

It has taken the people of the East thousands of years to learn. Their governments were old when the most venerable of modern nations were in swaddling clothes. An antedated idea of government held progress in check, made the people little better than serfs, stifled progress and opened the way for untold crime and brutality.

Mehmed Effendi, the new sultan of Turkey.

Still loyal to the old idea they submitted. The sultan, the shah, the khedive were ancient titles so awesome that even to think of revolt was to commit a frightful crime, not only against the ruler of the nation, but against the gods of their faith.

The other nations of the world, excepting possibly China, know no parallel for the reverence in which the sultan and the shah were held by their peoples.

Bound by Superstition.

A Turkish father would have stood by and watched soldiers strike down his wife and children without daring even a word of protest if he thought the order came from the sultan. Superstition had so deeply bound their worship with the person of the ruler of the country that he really became one of the gods.

The foxy old sultan, Abdul, who thought he might represent an ancient ideal, was very modern in his diplomacy and politics, knew this feeling, and constantly traded on it for his safety when extreme outrages had from time to time put his throne and his person in danger. He never believed that a time would come when popular reverence for him could brook any violence to his person.

Europe has thought the same. Those statesmen who, to their eternal discredit, were several times responsible for keeping the other nations of the world from interfering to prevent the slaughter of the helpless, never entertained a serious thought that the revolt which should end the career of the most ferocious of surviving rulers would come from the people of his own country.

The forces that brought about the downfall of th esultan spoke of as the "Young Turks" were at the start only a handful of the population of the country. In fact, the Turks themselves only stand in the proportion of about one to four of the entire population.

Young Turks Students.

The Young Turks were mostly students, and it is an eternal credit to the liberal governments of Europe and to the republic of the new world that they gained their ideas of a freer and better form of government through association with Europeans, especially Englishmen and Americans.

These students worked quietly and skillfully. To their side their enthusiasm drew as many as were open minded. The radical sultan worshipers they made no attempt to win over.

Recognizing from the first that the basis of the power of the autocrat rested on his control of the army they cleverly, yet legitimately, using no arguments that were not true, sowed the seeds of discontent among the soldiers.

They showed that the rulers of other nations had some consideration for the military. That the soldier got fair wages, and when he retired was able to go home with his family and live in comparative comfort. This was a new thought for the soldier of the sultan, who did not know what the word pay meant, was kept in the service till he was useless for anything else, and when finally he was sent off he returned penniless to find his parents' farm hopelessly run down in the interim and himself forced to work in the field with the most primitive instruments to make the barest kind of a living.

He could, of course, confiscate the property of his Christian or Jewish neighbor, but this procedure had increased in peril, and was the signal for all kinds of excitement in Europe, and moreover, even though he did this, he would have to give so liberal a share to the official above him that little would remain for himself.

The officers were no better off. Gallant old heroes of the Russo-Turkish war often were known to pawn medals won in that conflict in order to get food for the children and wives.

Morale of Army Affected.

The morale of the army was cleverly affected in this way by the unceasing efforts of the Young Turks, and their work was so quietly done that none knew the state of mind of the soldiers till the test came, and they failed the tyrant when most he needed them.

In their battle to dethrone despotism the worst foe the Young Turk had to deal with was the system of espionage which covered the whole country with the spies of the sultan. For a disrespectful word against the monarch its author was likely to be exiled, his property confiscated, or if Abdul felt in a sanguinary mood, his life might pay the forfeit.

For this reason the Young Turk avoided having a recognized leader, for he soon would have paid the price with his life. Every Turk belonging to the order took oath on the Koran. There were taxes on the members to raise needed funds to carry on the work, the families of those who died in the fight were cared for by the organization, and penalties were imposed on the recreant.

It was a most amazing instance of working in the dark, of fighting craft with craft, and its success has shown most impressively what can be done in this line.

The example of Turkey has not been lost on the discontented of Persia. Here for a long while has been existing a condition somewhat similar to that of Turkey.

Also Absolute.

The shah stands in the same relation to Persia as the sultan does to Turkey. There is no law to limit his power. His spies overrun the country, he possesses absolute authority over the lives and property of his subjects. With a wave of the hand he can take any life in the realm, without exciting even a protest, that property he covets for his extravagances is his merely by expressing the word.

But, worse still, this same absolute power has been delegated to the deputies of the shah, the governors and officers of the provinces and the districts. Oppression of the working classes under such a form of government is inevitable, for there is virtually no punishment for the greedy or tyranical governor who seeks to grow rich on the sufferings of those beneath him. Nominally the acts of these officials is subject to revision, but as long as they make a proportionate return of their stealings to the throne, they are immune from justice.

The grand vizier used to be the shah's chief of staff in conducting the affairs of state, but signs of unrest in the country, symptoms that are constantly increasing in power, finally led the shah to substitute a council of state, modeled on somewhat European lines, with a president of the council standing in the relation of premier or secretary of state.

The khedive of Egypt.

But this reform has been in name only. Robberies of the poor continue. The bastinado and death by decapitation, stabbing or torture continue to be imposed for minor offenses.

But the lesson of Turkey will probably not be lost on the shah, and that other absolute monarch of antiquity, the khedive of Egypt, is likely to rejoice that he is protected as well curbed by the English protectorate.

LOU DILLON WILL GIVE SPEED TRIAL IN BERLIN

Before the royal eyes of the emperor of Germany and the crown prince the greatest of American horses is to show her speed.

At the express request of the emperor, Lou Dillon, queen of trotters, will give a special exhibition in Berlin June 13, with her noted owner, C. K. Billings, holding the reins.

The kaiser has long been anxious to see the noted flyer, who was the first horse to get the coveted two minute mark for trotters.

Lou Dillon will not enter in any races, but will make a trial against time in order to let his majesty and German experts study her stride and form. Whatever money accrues from the exhibition Mr. Billings will hand over to Berlin charities, as his only motive is to let the old world see the kind of trotter that Uncle Sam can produce.

The occasion for Lou Dillon's appearance is the opening or the superb new racing stadium at Ruheleben, near Berlin.

In a desire to give an international flavor to the affair, noted horsemen of the nations were invited to send their best flyers to the capital. Trainer Tanner, who has charge of the Billings horses, is now in Berlin with a string of nine good ones, and Mr. Billings himself is due to arrive in Berlin about the first of June.

Warm Welcome Assured.

He is assured of a warm welcome in the German capital, and the appearance of Lou Dillon in action is certain to be the sensational feature of the opening of the new track, for public interest is keen to see the much discussed mare.

And Mr. Billings can drive her, too. His fame as a horseman is by no means confined to the possession of this one notable champion. He has had a score of them, and he has almost as many superb stables as the emperor of Germany, his host, has castles.

Latest and best photograph of Lou Dillon.

In his enthusiasm for blooded horse flesh he has invested more than a half million dollars in stables. He has two in New York city, one in Madison avenue for his high steppers; another near Fort Tyron for his trotters. The latter is one of the largest and finest appointed stables of its kind in the country.

In Chicago Mr. Billings has a fine stable in the rear of his Washington Boulevard residence. He built another a few years ago on the trotting track at Memphis, and also put $10,000 in a private stable for his horses at the Cleveland track. He has a farm for his horses at Stevens Point, Wis., and a residence stable at Colorado Springs, where often his horses than Mr. Billings has dis-

Not often has there been a more genuine and unselfish enthusiasm for horses than Mr. Billings has displayed.

Stirred by Friendly Rivalry.

It is said that his love for the game was first stirred by a friendly rivalry with another millionaire, E. E. Smathers.

At first Mr. Smathers had the better of this contention. For several years Lord Derby beat the best horses that Billings could obtain, the most notable being The Monk. At one time in fact Mr. Smathers held 90 per cent of the important harness horses.

But when in the winter of 1902 Mr. Billings bought for $12,500 the promising filly, Lou Dillon, he paved the way to his most notable triumph over his rival.

It is characteristic of Mr. Billings' liberality in his devotion to his fad that he declined to race Lou Dillon on the grand circuit when he became confident that she was the best horse of the year, and could clean up nearly all the big purses.

She had shown an ability to trot a 2:06 gait, which would probably have been fast enough to carry her to triumph in most of the events, valued at $85,000, for which she was contracted.

But Mr. Billings had a greater thought for the beautiful trotter. He saw in her the chance to bring out the dream all horsemen had been cherishing since the days of Goldsmith's Maid, a two minute trotter.

He canceled all her grand circuit engagements, and directed every effort for an attempt to develop her speed to the making of a new world's record.

Had she fallen into other hands, and gone down the line for a strenuous season, competing on the grand circuit, is is questionable if Lou Dillon would ever have been known as the champion.

Lou Is Affectionate.

Millard Sanders, who developed ou Dillon and drove her when, for the first time, she reached the two-minute mark, says that at the beginning she was double gaited, and gave little promise of becoming a world beater. She is a chestnut mare, with a left white hind foot, a star and a small snip. She stands 15.1 in height, and in racing conditions weighs in the neighborhood of 804 pounds. She was broken as a two-year-old, and trained to some extent as a three-year-old.

When Lou went into the hands of Mr. Sanders in 1902 she was hardly four years old, and had hardly done any work before she became sick, and so serious was the illness that she almost died. Delicate, nervous, but very affectionate, she presented a most difficult proposition to the trainer, and while he already saw her exceptional speed qualities, it did not occur to him that the mare could be made a successor to the great Cresceus. At the end of her illness Lou got down as low in weight as 500 pounds.

But when she started to mend she progressed rapidly, and when perfect health had been restored the trainer directed himself to correcting her faults of gait.

This was done by shoeing her with ten-ounce shoe and four-ounce toe weight in front, but as Lou progressed in her training, Mr. Sanders gradually cut down the weight tip she needed to a 4 3-4-ounce shoe in front and a 2 1-2-ounce shoe in back.

Astonishing Speed.

By steady and careful work Lou was braught along, and in practice she displayed such astounding bursts of speed that public belief centered on her as the horse to get down to the much desired two-minute figure.

Mr. Billings steadily declined to put the mare on exhibition for money. At his own expense he sent her to Cleveland, thence to Brighton and finally to Boston.

It was at the latter place on Readville track, Aug. 23, 1903, that she finally performed the epoch making feat of bringing the record down to two minutes. She subsequently did even better, but since this was the first time in the history of the sport that the mile had been done in two-minute time, it will ever remain as the most notable performance to the credit of the remarkable mare.

C. K. G BILLINGS
Owner of Lou Dillon.

On that day the California bred mare, by Sidney Dillon, Lou Milton out of Milton Medium, before a crowd of 6,000 frenzied spectators cut 2 1-4 seconds from the world's record held by Cresceus. The quarters were done in 30 1-4, 30 1-2, 30 1-4 and 29 seconds. It was the wonderful burst of speed at the finish, the great last quarter, that brought the trial to this record-breaking finish.

But sweet as was this triumph to Mr. Billings, it was probably less than the joy he got out of the race for two minute trotters between himself and E. E. Smathers at Memphis.

Makes Two-Minute Record.

This was the first time in the history of trotting that there had ever been a two-minute class, and to the outcome of the contest hinged the trotting championship of the world, and also the premier of gentlemen drivers, for the two owners held the reins themselves.

Major Delmar had been going along in a manner similar to Lou Dillon; piling up all kinds of records, and there were many who thought he could show a clean pair of heels to the Billings horse in a race.

But Lou Dillon was there in a race just the same as in a time trial and won most decisively.

The mare is in fine shape now, and will be able to display quite a burst of speed for the pleasure of the German monarch and his guests.

First Fare on the Comet.

Dr. John Inglis remembers a conversation with an old gentleman who claimed to have been the first to pay passage money on board the first passenger steamer in Europe—the historic Comet. The voyage undertaken was from the Broomielaw to Dalmuir—fourpence now by tramway car—and the fare was four shillings! It was taken by Henry Bell himself, the Comet was stopped and waited for half an hour till Bell and his passenger adjourned to an inn, where the first fare wet the toast of prosperity to the pioneer passenger steamer.

IN SPLENDID HOME

ADMIRAL AND MRS. DEWEY OCCUPY SPACIOUS MANSION.

House Has Long Association with Social Memories and Is Filled with Art Treasures from the Orient.

The home which Admiral and Mrs. Dewey now occupy is one which is noted in Washington social annals through long association with hospitable cabinet homes. Mrs. Dewey resided there when she was Mrs. William Hazen, and afterwards it was leased by Russell A. Alger when he was secretary of war, and from him it passed to Ethan Allen Hitchcock, for eight years secretary of the interior. It is on the corner of Sixteenth and K streets, and latterly has been in the limelight because it immediately adjoins the house where William Howard Taft lived while he was secretary of war. It is a spacious red brick mansion, roomy and well proportioned, and affords an excellent environment for the household treasures which the admiral has accumulated. The Rhode Island avenue house, which was presented to the hero of Manila by a grateful American people, proved much too small for comfort either in entertaining or for the proper display of the exquisite gifts which are constantly bestowed on the admiral. On the second floor, which is entirely given over to the drawing rooms and the banquet hall, are the entire collection of Phillippine trophies and gifts which have been made since that May day of 1898. Lucky, indeed, is the guest who has the Admiral and Mrs. Dewey to recite the history of these interesting possessions. The admiral has to a degree that charming quality of boyishness which lends interest to everything he says. The flags, the pennants, the swords and queer-shaped daggers all have a history, some as thrilling as those which figured in the days of the Spanish buccaneers.

There are silver urns and loving cups and goblets and bowls all inscribed and carefully placed to show to best advantage the exquisite chasing. There are quaint chairs and cabinets of curios, centuries old ivories, jugglers and gods from Siam and Burmah, a set of chess on ivory which is as wrinkled as a mummy. As for tiny silver ornaments, probably no collection in the country has as many choice pieces in filigree as the admiral's. He has a regular study in ethnology in these dainty pieces, some of them very old and of an artisanship no longer known. Mrs. Dewey takes the greatest pleasure in these pretty things and she has a world of entertaining information about the arts and crafts of the orient. Then the admiral has some rugs which are the envy of his friends, many of which he purchased and some which were presented. The entire show portion of the house is suggestive of the subtle air of the tropics, especially of the country which is identified with his fame. The fiber goods of Manila and the lesser cities in their soft colors which seem to rival the rainbow are in evidence in rugs and mats and baskets and vague tinted painting in oriental frames are a delight. If one wishes to study the arts of the defense as practiced by the Filipinos, Mrs. Dewey can give some excellent instruction just in explaining the various arms which occupy the entire wall space in one of the inner drawing rooms.

The Presidential Occupation.

Quentin Roosevelt, the president's youngest son, has just begun to attend school in Washington. Before entering school he was told at home that he mustn't let the fact that his father is president give him any airs; that it had nothing to do with his standing in school; in short, that he was not to mention it at all.

On the first day the pupils were asked to tell where they lived and what their fathers did for a living. It came Quentin's turn.

"Where do you live?"

"At the White House," he replied, after a pause.

"What is your father's business?"

The admonition not to mention that his father is president stuck in Quentin's throat. He made no reply at all.

"Well?"

Still no response.

"Come; you have to answer, you know. What does your father do?"

The youngest Roosevelt looked the teacher squarely in the eyes, and replied:

"He's it!"

Old Home Without Tenant.

I guess it has been almost a couple of centuries since Clean Drinking Manor was without a tenant, says a Washington correspondent. But it is surely that way now. After living for years in the ramshackle, tumble-down house which represents all that is left of the one-time grandeur of this old feudal manor, Nicholas Jones, who is called by his neighbors "Gentleman Jones" or "Hermit Jones," but who signs himself "Nicholas Jones, Gentleman," has finally been forced to quit and to take up his residence with relatives. Rheumatism got to him in fierce shape, and although he fought against the proposition of a change of home he finally had to give in.

Known as Scholar and Jurist.

Judge Mayer Sulzberger of the court of common pleas of Philadelphia, who has declined the ambassadorship to Turkey, proffered him by President Taft, was elected in 1894. Previously to that time he had gained wide prominence as a lawyer, and has added to his reputation since then by his work as a scholar and jurist. He is a versatile linguist and has a wide knowledge of Oriental history and customs. His private library is one of the largest in Philadelphia, and contains many rare works in the Semitic languages, as well as a choice collection of English literature.

DYEING AND FINISHING

The Manifold Processes the Goods Go Through.

Very few persons outside the trade have any idea of the process through which a plain piece of cotton, wool or silk fabric has been between the time of its creation, either in the cotton fields, on the sheep or the silk worm, as the case may be, and the time of its purchase in the form of a finished product in the dry goods stores.

Goods are received at the dye or print works in the form of bales directly from the mill. The bales are opened up and the ends of several sewed together, so that if all are ordered of the same finish miles and miles of one fabric is run through the first stage in one continuous length. This long band passes over hot plates or through flames that singe off all the fuzz or nap that has been picked up in the weaving. Then the cloth is run into boilers or keirs, as they are called, where it is pleated down in rope form for the scouring.

This consists of a boil in alkaline liquors which saponify and dissolve the oils, greases and dirt in the cloth and reduces the cotton to its natural color, thoroughly cleansed. From these boilers the cloth, still in its continuous length, passes through the bleaching process, in which decolorizing takes place by chemical action set up by the various baths of diluted acid and bleaching compounds, combined with exposure to the oxygen of the air.

The Lord He Served.

Judge George F. Lawton of the Middlesex probate court told me a story the other day of an American minister who was spending his sabbatical year traveling abroad. Arriving in London, he made every effort to get an intimate view of the two branches of parliament in session. Of course no stranger is allowed on the floor of the house of lords, but the minister, not knowing this, and with the usual amount of American push, tried to make his way in. There is a rule, however, that servants of the various lords may be admitted to speak to their masters. Seeing the minister walking boldly in, the doorkeeper asked:

"What lord do you serve?"

"What lord?" repeated the astonished American, 'the Lord Jehovah!"

For a moment the doorkeeper hesitated and then admitted him. Turning to an assistant standing near, he said:

Canary Birds.

During the past year the export of canary birds from Hanover to the United States amounted to $130,155, as against $136,354 in 1907. It is estimated that there are not less than 5,000,000 canaries in the United States.

FIGHT WITH DEVILFISH

A party of English fishermen had an unusual and most exciting experience in the Panuco river with a large sting ray or devilfish. It is very rarely that these fish are seen in the river, for they are suposed to confine themselves to the sea, although they are often encountered near the coast along the south Atlantic and in the Gulf of Mexico. Occasionally a small devilfish is taken by fishermen near the coast of Florida, but their appearance in the Panuco river is something unheard of before.

The party of fishermen in question consisted of Capt. A. Paget, Capt. Molyneaux, Sir Charles Cost, Maj. Ramsden, Capt. Robert Duff and Lady Juliet Duff, who were out in small boats in quest of tarpon, when three of these monster rays were encountered. One of the boats being supplied with a small harpoon threw it into the nearest ray. The other boats came to the assistance and made fast in an effort to keep the first boat, which was being fast towed seaward by the monster devilfish, but the five boats and a launch which had come down the river with as little effort as if they had been mere toys invented for the playthings of this queer shaped monster. After several minutes of the wildest excitement which has ever been experienced by fishermen in the Panuco they succeeded in dragging the monster into comparatively shallow water and were congratulating themselves on the probable capture of the great fish when the monster gave a mighty flop that threatened to engulf all the small boats, dashed under the launch, almost capsizing it, and succeeded in tearing out the harpoon and thus escaped. The fish is said to measure at least eighteen feet from tip to tip of its wing-shaped fins, or flippers, while the two others from the glimpse gained were nearly the same size.

Test for Fine Muslin.

"None of this is fine enough," he said. "In the turban I have on there are forty yards. But forty yards of this would give me a head like a Saratoga trunk."

"Indian muslin is very, very fine. It must be fine enough to disappear if it is to pass our A1 test. Yes, fine enough to disappear."

He smiled.

"It is true," he said. "The test is this: The muslin is spread on grass over night. In the morning, when everything is dew drenched, if the muslin isn't practically identical with the dewy gossamer covering the lawns—in other words, if it isn't invisible—it is discarded and must be sold as 'seconds.'"

MOTHERS WHO HAVE DAUGHTERS

Find Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Winchester, Ind.—"Four doctors told me that they could never make me regular, and that I would eventually have dropsy. I would bloat, and suffer from bearing-down pains, cramps and chills, and I could not sleep nights. My mother wrote to Mrs. Pinkham for advice, and I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After taking one and one-half bottles of the Compound, I am all right again, and I recommend it to every suffering woman."—MRS. MAY DEAL, Winchester, Ind.

Hundreds of such letters from girls and mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them have been received by The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

Girls who are troubled with painful or irregular periods, backache, headache, dragging-down sensations, fainting spells or indigestion, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences and be restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Thousands have been restored to health by its use.

What a Man May Do.

A. Barton Hepburn says in the Century: I know of one conspicuous example of what may be done by men of inherited fortune. A young man of ample means who did not wish to engage in any business pursuit thoroughly educated himself here and abroad at the universities. He then made himself master of a technical pursuit by the study of forestry abroad. After a year or two of professional work he relinquished it to accept a responsible position in the government, where he is now rendering great and highly appreciated service in working out the best policy for conserving our forests and other natural resources.

KING EDWARD'S HATS.

The king, besides setting the fashion in the wearing of hats, is an inventor of headgear. In an entertaining little book called "Hints on Hats," written in 1865 by Henry Melton, the royal hatter of the period, assisted by George Augustus Sala, a felt hat is described and illustrated which was designed by the king, then prince of Wales, as an improvement, on the round crowned hats then in vogue, says the London Daily News.

In shape it very much resembles the soft felts of the present day, but was covered with plaid of the same color as the shooting suit it was to accompany.

At this time the majority of hats were made very heavy and strong. The earl of Harrington, for instance, whose life had once been saved through his wearing a particularly hard hat in the hunting field, used to test the quality of his hats by standing on them, and rejected any that could not bear his weight without a dent.

He was peculiarly sensitive about their color, and his eccentricity led him to adapt his taste in that particular to the object he had in view. When walking in his garden, says Mr. Melton, he would wear a sage green hat, so as not to frighten the birds!

Ate a Chick With Big Eyes.

A trainman is telling an incident that occurred on a Mohawk and Malone train up in the woods the other day, says the Utica Observer. The train was standing on a siding waiting the arrival and passing of another train when an Italian walked through the coach, his hands crossed on his stomach and his head wagging from side to side in a doleful manner.

"What's the matter, John?" some one inquired.

"Oh, me sick—me sick as dev," replied the man, rolling his head still more distressingly and continuing the rubbing of his stomach.

John had killed an owl the night before and it didn't agree with him.

BEAVERS DESTROY FENCES.

Make Away With Half-a-Mile for Ranchman in Colorado.

Beaver have been accumulating in the state to such an extent that they have destroyed property in some instances and the owners of the property have had to apply to the game commissioner's office for permits to kill them, says the Denver Republican.

Arthur Sneeve, a wealthy cattleman living fifteen miles up Brush creek from Gypsum, Colo., secured a permit recently and brought in ten hides a few days ago. He built a half-mile fence from quaking asps last fall on one portion of his ranch, but the winter being long the beavers' supply of food ran out. They sallied forth and found the fence a tempting morsel. Every post was cut off close to the ground and the beaver then cut the rails into short lengths, stowing them in their huts until they were ready to eat the bark. Then they carried the wood out and floated it down stream.

A Mrs. Bond, living half a mile below Pine, in Platte canon, also secured a permit to kill a beaver colony on her place. She planted a handsome grove of shade trees a few years ago and they are now in a flourishing condition, but a colony of beavers built a dam in the Platte during the late winter and they insist upon stealing her nice, soft shade trees unless she stands over them with a club nearly all the time.

MAKING SUNSHINE

It Is Often Found in Pure Food.

The improper selection of food drives many a healthy person into the depths of despairing illness. Indeed, much sickness comes from wrong food and just so surely as that is the case right food will make the sun shine once more.

An old veteran of Newburyport, Mass., says: "In October, I was taken sick and went to bed, losing 47 pounds in about 60 days. I had doctor after doctor, food hurt me and I had to live almost entirely on magnesia and soda. All solid food distressed me so that water would run out of my mouth in little streams.

"I had terrible night sweats, and my doctor finally said I had consumption and must die. My good wife gave up all hope. We were at Old Orchard, Me., at that time and my wife saw Grape-Nuts in a grocery there. She bought some and persuaded me to try it.

"I had no faith in it, but took it to please her. To my surprise it did not distress me as all other food had done and before I had taken the fifth package I was well on the mend. The pains left my head, my mind became clearer and I gained weight rapidly.

"I went back to my work again and now after six weeks' use of the food I am better and stronger than ever before in my life. Grape-Nuts surely saved my life and made me a strong hearty man, 15 pounds heavier than before I was taken ill.

"Both my good wife and I are willing to make affidavit to the truth of this."

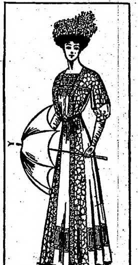
FROCKS AND HATS

FLOWERED EMBROIDERY MUCH USED FOR ADORNMENT.

In Conjunction with White Batiste, with Flat Arrangement of Tucks, It Forms a Yoke Below the Dutch Neck.

Lace and embroidery bandings are not easy to apply in effective designs on the new summer frocks with their shortened waists and rather scant skirts. Every line of the trimming shows with a distinctness that makes straight bands look stiff unless they are daintily applied, while frequently curved insertions and applications have an equally unpleasing effect. In the illustration rather wide strips of flowered embroidery in a somewhat solid pattern are used to outline both sides of the front section of a simple wash dress. Between the two strips white batiste is inserted with a flat arrangement of tucks to form a yoke below the Dutch neck. From the yoke the material is pouched ever so little into a silk belt coming an inch or more above the old-fashioned waist line. The skirt hangs in graceful folds, being held in slightly at the hips by means of narrow tucks. The bands of trimming are narrowed considerably above and below the waist and both are bordered on the inner side with a two-inch strip of braided trimming, a washable soutache being used for the braiding.



A Flower Trimmed Summer Costume.

Around the bottom of the skirt almost its own width above the edges is a broad band of tucking made with vertical tucks and banded on both sides with braided batiste.

The over sleeve is decidedly new. It is a part of the side body of the gown, and the wide batiste banding is crossed horizontally twice by the soutache trimming, once on a line with the lower cross section of the yoke and again on the top of the shoulder. The first cross band terminates at the armhole, while the shoulder one continues on down the circular sleeve cap to a point just above the elbow, where the over sleeve ends to show below it a puffed batiste sleeve.

The hat worn with this simple muslin frock is unusual on account of its smallness, but it is a style much liked by women who do not find exaggerated millinery creations becoming. The entire toque is massed with flowers, roses outlining the edge and sprays of small white blossoms filling the crown, with a taller cluster of the two combined for a trimming and placed at the left of the front.

THE SCARF MUCH IN EVIDENCE

Multitude of These Fashionable Accessories a Necessary Part of Summer Wardrobe.

It is going to be a scarf summer, and girls who have not a variety of these fascinating accessories to their toilet should acquire them as rapidly as possible. A satisfactory feature of them is that if one's purse is not long enough to indulge in the costly kind they can be beautifully made at home in infinite variety. Any material is suitable, though for evening wear the smartest thing is to have the scarf of the same fabric as the frock. When a hat is worn the scarf may be of any material, but in color it must precisely match the chapeau. Great originality and cleverness can be displayed in fashioning these scarfs, which are either heavily bordered with trimming or shot all over with a delicate design. Much broader and longer than those of last season, these scarfs are immensely becoming to all types of girls.

The Toilet Table

Honey is said to be a good substitute for cod-liver oil.

To take the soreness out of a soft, painful corn, try binding it up each night with baking soda, moistened with a little water.

If the hands are large, do not wear tight sleeves. The pressure on the arms will make the hands swell. A tight wristband is as unbecoming to a large hand as a low heel is to a large foot.

An excellent home remedy for burns is pure vaseline. Olive oil will serve the same purpose. The point is to exclude air and dirt from the burned surface, and this either oily substance will do.

Many persons do not know that callous places upon the feet may be kept smooth by the use of the pumice stone. It must not be rubbed heavily, nor must it be allowed to remove too large a callosity. If you employ it daily you will get the best results, and you should buy the smoothest procurable.

TIES OF PIQUE ARE SMART.

Worn with the Tailored Shirtwaist Cut in the Shape of a Four-in-Hand.

Among the smartest of the new ties to be worn with the tailored shirtwaist is one of pique cut in the shape of a four-in-hand, but with the points shaped and embroidered.

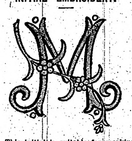
The ties can be shaped from a man's four-in-hand and can either be made double or the edges to the shaped ends can be turned back in a narrow hem, stitched on a machine in a color to match the embroidery.

The ends can be finished in any desired shape. Some of them are oval, finished with a straight line of buttonholing with a small motif of eyelets and scroll on the inside. Others are wedged shape with an open edge of Venetian ladder work and a round medallion of the ladder work in the center.

One good looking tie had ends with half-inch projections from each side of the hemmed pique strips and the linen was cut down from the projections in two straight parallel lines for about two inches, sloping from there to a point.

These ends were outlined with a tiny buttonholed scallop, in the center of each being a small dot worked in satin stitch. An oval medallion of dots was worked on the inner part of the ends with a few scattered dots above it, reaching to the half-inch projections.

INITIAL EMBROIDERY.



This initial is suitable for marking any article of household, or underlinen for which a distinct yet ornamental letter is needed; it is worked in satin stitch, for which white or ingrain colored embroidery cotton may be used.

RELIEF FOR THE TIRED FEET

Frequent Bathing with Cologne or Alcohol Will Make Life More Endurable in Summer.

The girl who suffers with her feet as soon as summer comes will often find relief by bathing them frequently with cologne or alcohol.

Do not begrudge the time spent in removing shoes and stockings to bathe the feet whenever especially tired. To suffer with the feet is a greater strain on the nervous system, not to mention one's temper, than most women realize; nothing should be counted too much trouble that will give even temporary relief.

Besides cologne rubbing, the woman of sensitive feet should be particular about her shoes and stockings. Counting cost with footgear is the greatest mistake she can make. Probably she can find moderate priced ready-made shoes that will fit her; but if she cannot, hunt some one who can combine comfort with style, and have shoes made if they are three times as expensive as she is accustomed to pay.

If darns hurt her feet it is not economy to darn. Buy cheaper stockings and throw them away as soon as holes appear; or turn them over to some member of the family who knows not the meaning of sensitive feet.

Another relief will be found by holding the feet under the cold water spigot for five or ten minutes each morning.

Soft Folds Hide Fullness of Skirt.

Only the exceptional model displays its new fullness frankly in soft falling folds all around the skirt, but the fullness creeps in in one way or another in soft, clinging drapery, in plaits or flounces set into clinging skirts, in yoke and flounce effects, or in narrow shirred backs combined with plain front and side lines.

This last arrangement is the compromise which is likely to be most generally accepted for spring and summer. It marks the frock as essentially of the new season's vintage, and yet it does not depart so radically from accustomed lines as to seem conspicuous or startling.

SEVEN SMITHS IN CONGRESS.

Three of That Name Are Members of the Senate and Four of the House —Two from Michigan.

Senator Smith, newly sent to the upper house of congress from South Carolina, is having trouble with his mail. He complains that he is not getting all that is coming to him. He will soon learn that the lack of letters is not the least of a legislator's worries, and often he will wish that most of his mail went astray. But that is beside the mark. The point of importance is that the South Carolina senator brings the roll of congressional Smiths up to seven, three in the senate and four in the house. The states contributing the seven Smiths are Michigan, which gives two; Maryland, Texas, Iowa, California and South Carolina. Thus an association composed of the congressional Smiths would be widely representative, sectionally, and it may be that many an important legislative question could be decided to the country's interest as a result of coherent action on the part of these seven, so closely linked by a strong bond of sympathy. Michigan, by the way, has always been somewhat liberal in its bestowal of Smiths upon the country. At one time there were three serving simultaneously in the house. The newly-seated Smith may be confused for a short time after his legislative advent, but he soon learns how to combine dignity and distinction by the use of all the names bestowed upon him at baptism. Thus the three-jointed Smith is regarded as the only normal Smith in congress, and soon the public will grow accustomed to the South Carolina statesman by his full title, which begins with Ellison and includes a middle name beginning with B., which has not yet been completely revealed.

WASHINGTON TO BE HIS HOME.

Perry Heath Is Building House in Washington and Will Permanently Reside There.

Perry Heath is building a handsome house in S street, Washington, on the corner of Connecticut avenue, where he has decided to establish his Lares and Penates, and pass the remainder of his life, at least, when he is not globe trotting, a pastime of which he is particularly fond. Everybody in Washington knows Perry Heath for he was first a clerk in one of the departments here, then a newspaper correspondent, and, finally, first assistant postmaster general in McKinley's administration. Mr. Heath is a big, square man, with a strong face, a Hoosier by birth. This fact he is excessively proud of, as is shown by the title of the one book he has published, "A Hoosier in Russia." No mention of Perry Heath would be adequate that did not announce that in the 50 years of his life he has been able to amass a goodly fortune. That he has come to Washington to spend this fortune his friends regard as an evidence of his good taste, good judgment and wisdom. Mrs. Heath, who was a Miss Ella Conway of Louisville, Ky., is an extremely charming woman, and will be a valuable addition to the hostesses of Washington.

Gayety at the Capital.

Mrs. Taft's wish to make the speedway, to be known in future as Potomac Drive, a panorama of fashion and beauty on the two afternoons in the week, bids fair to be a huge and permanent success. She rides out each afternoon in state in her big automobile, and the president either accompanies her or rides out on his favorite horse and stands by her carriage during the playing of the Marine band. Last Saturday he played golf all afternoon, however, and the crowd waited in vain for his appearance. Mrs. Taft was accompanied by Mrs. Ellis and her small black Manchurian poodle. Wednesday afternoon she had with her in her electric landaulet Mrs. McClintock, an old Washington friend of the first lady of the land. Mrs. Taft has arranged a number of garden parties, and although it makes people shiver to accept the invitations, of course they will all be accepted and society in its best frock will be there. Garden fetes were Mrs. Roosevelt's favorite entertainments and she had many pretty ones in the White House grounds. The last one was given for the visiting governors and their wives, who came here at the special request last spring of President Roosevelt. But this one was held indoors.—Washington Cor. Detroit Free Press.

Like a Country Dance.

A complete list of those present would read like a social register of the national capital or the guests at a most exclusive smart function. Among the fashionable young men and women of the smart set who relished sauerkraut, frankfurters and leberknoedel while a gypsy orchestra discoursed music of a distant land and time were . . . . Merriment was at its height, dull care was on an extended leave of absence, and the atmosphere was surfeited with good fellowship and congeniality. The young women were in most fetching attire and blithesome mood, and their escorts had their wits whittled to needles' points. Throughout the two hours the feast was on there was a constant flow of merry quips, personal gibes and jests and an equal number of retorts and parry thrusts.—Washington Post.

Our friend T. Ewing Riddel, who is in the business of promoting and selling patents, has got out a new card. It has on the back: "Some new companies just incorporated, the Artificial Bird Seed Trust, for the manufacture of artificial bird seed for the feeding of cuckoo clocks; the Woodpecker Punching Company, a new process for punching holes in the tops of salt and pepper shakers, the punching is done by trained woodpeckers; the Direct Butter Producing Company, butter direct from the cow. We inoculate the cattle with St. Vitus dance germs—and they do the churning."—Newark

Miss Grace Gervais, who has spent the winter here with her sister, Mrs. A. L. Brunelle, left this afternoon for her home at Reiner. She was acompanied by Mrs. Brunelle who will remain for a visit.

Chas. N. Bourdon and family have gone to their cottage at Maple lake. Mr. Bourdon will make his headquarters there and the family will spend much of the time during the summer at the lake.

A. J. Lafreniere, formerly a newspaper man of Red Lake Falls, now employed on his brothers' praper, the Grand Rapids Independent, is spending the week with relatives and friends in town.

M. and Mrs. P. F. Pouliot returned from their wedding trip Sunday evening, and Mr. Pouilot is back at his work in the Merchants State Bank. Mr. and Mrs. Pouliot have gone to housekeeping in the Pouliot cottage on South Main street.

Mrs. Frank Serious and Mrs. L. Vaudrin left for their homes at Big Falls Tuesday morning after a visit with relatives here. They were accompanied as far as Crookston by Misses Cora and Eva Paul., who returned home the same day.

Clem Brunelle was at Maple Lake Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday evening he played with the Fertile orchestra which is making a reputation as a musical organization and of which he is the director. On Sunday he played with the Crookston band.

Mrs. F. E. Hunt and family and Mrs Argue have gone to Maple lake and will spend much of the time at their cottage there during the summer. Messrs. Frank E. Hunt and Sam E. Hunt and Dr. Argue plan to spend the end of each week and Sunday at the lake.

Jos. Beliar, representing the new tile works at Thief River Falls, went to the up-river town Tuedsay. He was accompanied by several members of township board, Messrs. Barril, Roepell, Huot, Anderson, Nauman, Senushal and Ducharme, who went for the purpose of inspecting the plant and its product.

The Winnipeg Industrial Exhibition which will be held during the second and third weeks of July, this year, will have a greater variety of exhibits in nearly all agricultural and commercial departments than ever before. A grand military and pyrotechnic spectacle, "The Siege of Sebastopol," which will be presented in the track field every evening of the Exhibition, will employ over five hundred men in its military and band formations, and will give the greatest exhibitions of fireworks ever seen in Canada.

Sam S. Haislet, good newspaper man and good fellow, and fomerly a manipulator of the paste pot and shears in Red Lake Falls print shops, is "in our midst" today. Mr. Haislet has purchased the newspaper press that has been stored in the old Gazette building and the machine will become a part of the equipment of his Lankin Reporter print shop.

Geo. F. Fuller and Geo. E. Perley of Moorhead and H. L. Moore, treasurer of the Minnesota Loan and Trust company of Minneapolis are here this week, In company with J. A. Duffy they are looking over the farming counrty in Red Lake and Polk counties. They go into the country for an automobile trip every day. They say that everything looks good to them and that the prospects are that there'll be a bumber crop in the Red River Valley.

E. G. Buse and Ed. Nelson armed to the teeth, went into the wilds Monday a la T. Roosevelt. They were in quest of crows—wild crows and black. They espied what they believed to be a crow's nest. They concealed themselves until the old bird flew away and then one of them, braver than the other, climbed a tree and with a worm attached to a long pole tempted the squabs until in their blind efforts to get a square meal they fell from the nest. Then the other brave hunter went to it with the big stick. It was a great day for crows for in that nest there were thirty-two by actual count and those fellows are good counters. The next day some one "swiped" the thirty-two crows and traded them to the county game and fish department for forty cents bounty—ten cents a crow. Buse and Nelson aren't crowing any now.

Dr N. M. Watson returned Monday from a trip into the primeval forests of northern Minnesota along the Vermillion river. He was a member of the party made up of Frank A. Day, private secretary to Governor Johnson and general manager of the democratic and unattached political forces of the state, John E. King of Red Lake Falls and St. Paul and Marcus Johnson. At Tower the brass band and a committee of leading citiznes and the populace in miscellaneous array got out to do honor to Mr. Day, "one of our foremost citizens." Mr. Day was very much touched—in fact the well spring of his flow of oratory had been sprung, almost to the point of breaking, and great was the flow of the stuff that has made Lincoln, Neb., famous. Mr. Day expressed his appreciation of the demonstration in the greatest oratorical effort of his life. It wa a great day for Day. Of course he made a great bit with that speech and the crowd was his after that, but the enthusiasm displayed before the speech had been purchased for a price. The members of the party had hired the band and had arranged for the loud and long cheering stunts to be pulled off at the right time. But the governor's secretary is some speaker, anyhow.

PERRAULT STATION.

Mr. Mose Ducharme and wife were city visitors last Friday.

Miss Eva Lachance was a visitor to Mr. Ducharme's last week.

Homer Parenteau was a caller among friends in Terrebonne last Sunday afternoon.

Mose Ducharme attended the farmer's institute at Thief River Falls last Tuesday.

Messrs. Theo. and Albert Ducharme got back last Friday from the ditch upon which they have been working for A. Perusse in Stephen.

There was a jolly crowd of Perrault Stationers at John Luxenburger's last Saturday night. The time was enjoyed in dancing and other pastimes.

Ovilla Payment went after a load of coal for the Perrault & Lacousiere cheese factory. The factory made a shipmenrt of thirty boxes of cheese to Chicago last Monday.

H. H. Zaiser went through here Tuesday morning with an automobile to make the train in Dugdale for Grand Rapids. At Delorme's station the machine bucked, and Mr. Zaiser had to walk back to Perrault station to phone for a livery rig to fake him back. He reached Perrault station just in time for he was winded and footsore.

Like Play.

"Going to send your son to art school?"

"What do they do there?"

"Just make pictures."

"I should say not. I want him to learn something."

An Oversight.

"I don't know. Several men have gone by, but I didn't think to ask any of them if they were horse thieves."

No Satisfaction.

"I am afraid I will have to give up smoking."

"The doctor order it?"

A VERY SIMPLE DETECTIVE CASE.

By BERTHA DALSOP.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"Waiter, call a cab."

So spoke Walter De Forest while sitting in the cafe of his club. In a few minutes the waiter announced that the cab was at the door. De Forest went out, gave a street and number to the cabman and got into the cab. There, before him on the seat, lay a package.

"Ah," exclaimed De Forest, "some one has lost something."

Taking up the package, he opened it and saw on the top a bank bill for $1,000. He opened his eyes very wide. Lifting the bill, he came upon another for the same amount. He opened his eyes wider. Fifty bills, each for $1,000, were in the parcel.

He looked at the wrapper. There was neither name nor mark on it to give the slightest clew to its ownership. He tied up the package and put it in his pocket. On reaching his destination he said to the driver:

"Who was the last person in this cab before me?"

"A young lady, sir."

"What name?"

"I don't know, sir."

"Where did she engage you?"

"She called me from the sidewalk."

"Where did she tell you to drive?"

"To 84 Union street."

Mr. De Forest started. "Did you take her there?"

"No, sir. A pair of horses were plunging in the crowd of vehicles beside us. I drove on, but when I got down to open the door there was no one inside. I think the lady got scared and slipped out."

"Did you go to the location she gave you to collect your fare?"

"Not yet, sir."

"How much does she owe you?"

"A dollar."

"Thank you, sir."

The coincidence was a strange one. Julia Drayton, aged twenty-one, that day had been paid in bills a legacy of $50,000. She had stepped from a bank to the sidewalk, got into a cab, suffered from a fright, jumped out and left her fortune inside. Walter De Forest was an admirer of hers and had at the time made up his mind that he would marry her if he could. Money was no special object to him.

The next morning he saw an advertisement in the papers of a large reward for the lost money. In the evening he called on Miss Drayton. The servant who received him said that her mistress was indisposed.

"Tell her that I have called to speak to her about her loss," said De Forest, and in a few moments Miss Drayton came down. She was much agitated.

"I saw an advertisement this morning," he said, "which from its reading I think must be yours."

"I have lost my inheritance."

De Forest asked her to tell him the story, which she did.

"I am very sorry for you," he said when she had finished, "indeed so sorry that I am going to exercise my ingenuity to find who has the bills. I have a plan that I will put into operation, and if it succeeds I shall recover your fortune."

"All of it?" she gasped.

"All or none."

"But there is the reward."

"That we may talk of after getting the bills."

Mr. De Forest called often to report progress. Miss Drayton begged him to tell her of his methods, but he assured her it was not best. Though at times he spoke encouragingly and at times the reverse, he continually kept her up by a steadfast hope.

One evening De Forest left the young lady conscious of the fact that he might as well bring his detective investigations to a close. A few days later he showed Miss Drayton a piece of paper on which was scrawled by some illiterte person an agreement to return fifty $1,000 bank bills provided that immunity were guaranteed. Miss Drayton caught her breath. But De Forest reminded her of the many frauds in such matters and warned her not to feel too sure. Nevertheless she wrung his hand.

A week passed, during which Miss Drayton suffered alternate chills and fever—chills of despondency and fever of hope. And all the while she was thinking of that good, kind man who was devoting his time, his energies, his genius, for investigation to the return of her lost fortune.

One day she received a note from De Forest notifying her that if her doorbell rang between 7 and 8 that evening she would do well to answer it herself. At a quarter to 8 the bell rang. Miss Drayton opened the door. A man in working clothes handed her a package and without a word hurried away. Turning to the light, she opened the package and saw her lost bills. Counting them, she found all she had lost.

She was still in a delirium of joy when the bell rang again. She flew to the door and admitted Mr. De Forest. She could not control herself. Throwing her arms around his neck, she wept for joy.

There was one and only one matter to be settled between them. That was Mr. De Forest's reward for his patient labors. Miss Drayton asked him to name it and it should be his.

Then he told her that the reward he had been working for was herself. She kept her word.

Easy of Access.

The path that leads to trouble
Is not so hard to find,
And one may stumble on it
If he is so inclined.
Just let him own an auto,
And I have got a hunch
Most any road he travels
He'll find it in a bunch.

But that is quite expensive.
There are some cheaper ways
If he will go about it
To find where trouble strays.
If in a family racket
He tries to smooth things o'er
He'll get enough, I'm thinking,
To stock a good sized store.

Or he might slyly venture
To kick a neighbor's cat
If he would in a hurry
See trouble come to bat.
He might when some one warbles
Upon the patient air
Express his true opinion
And get it then and there.

He need not run a circus,
He need not own a goat,
Alone he need not venture
To price a lady's coat,
He need not buy an airship
And flutter in the air,
He need not lift a finger—
There's trouble everywhere.

The Lowly Singer.

The humble poet goes about
In very modest raiment.
If he could coin his tuneful words
He'd gladly make a payment
On rags that glisten as the sun
And raise an awful holler,
But now he has to be content—
He hasn't got a dollar.

For him the sun unfolds its light,
For him the stars are gleaming,
And so he cannot waste his time
On profit making scheming.
He must remain content to get
The robin's morning greeting
And not disturb his high flown thoughts
With vulgar things like eating.

Were he disposed to drop a peg
And lower his profession
Things might be drifting round his way
In quite a long procession.
Would he write ads. instead of songs
Extolling pills or bacon
He'd rake in coin; but, oh, his art
Would have to be forsaken!

No; he will go along his way,
Wrapped in his inspiration.
Let sordid poets sing of soap;
His theme is all creation.
So take him gently by the hand
And lead him to the table,
And then the poet's appetite
You'll find was but a fable.

His Dreadful Price.

"I have just had some swell photographs taken."

"I hope that they do you justice."

"Thanks, awfully, but that's not what's troubling me."

"What is?"

"How I am ever going to do the photographer justice?"

An Oversight.

"The constitution is a grand old document."

"Yes, but they wrote it too soon."

"Why so?"

"They should have waited until automobiles had been invented and made it unconstitutional to run a fellow down."

Coming.

When flying is perfected
And men go on the wing
A Wilbur Wright elopement
Will be the proper thing.

Man From City Hall.

"Why does the man scrutinize his features so closely in the mirror?"

"What for?"

"Doubtless he desires to arrest it."

Her Opinion.

"Mr. Footprint, you are the most graceful dancer in the room," said the sweet young girl to the awkward guy who was falling all over her.

"A fine compliment, I am sure."

"No; Just a knock on the other dancers."

Himself being judge, any man is somewhat above the average.

A girl feels greatly encouraged to like a man soon as he is severely criticised by her mother.

If it were true that supply follows demand, would we have hoboes suffering for either beer or money?

Some complainants insist most strongly on being judge and jury besides.

BOYS WILL RUN AT CROOKSTON

Athletes of Fire Department Will Go After Association Trophies.

Meeting of Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament Association July 5, 6 and 7.

The athletes of the local fire department have decided to participate in the contests to be pulled off at Crookston July 5, 6 and 7 when the annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament association will be held. At the tournament there will be teams representing Bemidji, Crookston, Warren, Hallock and other northern Minnesota cities.

The Red Lake Falls boys took most of the money in the races last year and made some very fast time. Their supporters expect to see them make a fine showing again this year. Owing to the late decision to get into the races the training has been neglected, but from now until July 5 there will be some good work done and the boys expect to make the teams that can beat them run some.

Wind at Greenbush.

It has been reported that a heavy wind did considerable damage at Greenbush last Saturday. Trees were blown down and roofs blown from buildings. It is reported that there was a heavy wind at Warroad also.

Rural Phone Line.

At the quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the Red Lake-Eastern Marshall Farmers' Telephone company, at this place, there was a good attendance, and some impotant business trransacted. The line between here and Grygla was divided up among the directors and work will be commenced on it at once, while between Erie and Thief River Falls a contract will be let next week to build the same.—Eleven Towns.

Killed By Vicious Bull.

Ole Swenson was instantly killed at his home in Section 1, of Garnes township, on Sunday evening by a vicious bull. Mr. Swenson was working with his stock in the farm yard when the animal attacked him unawares. The bull struck Mr. Swenson in the breast with such force that the man's neck was broken and death was instantaneous. Members of the family who saw the beast attack frightened him away at once and Dr. Clark was called out from here to see if anything could be done for the victim. When the doctor arrived Mr. Swenson had been dead for some hours and beyond the broken neck, the body showed no marks. Mr. Swenson had purchased the bull a few months ago from Thos. Pugh, of Mayfield township, and while he knew that the animal was inclined to be ugly in temper, he was not afraid of him and had decided to keep him as he was quite well bred.

Deceased was a prominent farmer and has been engaged in the business of buying and shipping cattle. He was about 45 years old and leaves a widow and eight or nine children to mourn his sudden death. The funeral was held on Thursday.—Plummer Pioneer.

Government Officials Here.

Prof. E. F. Chandle of Grand Forks and Govenment Inspector Richards were in Red Lake Falls Monday taking soundings of the Red Lake river. Their purpose was to determine the volume, depth and velocity and get other detailed information.

Drowned at Thief River.

Frank Furstnau was drowned in the Thief River near the round house at Thief River Falls, Thusrday evening, a short time after six o'clock. In company with three other men he was in bathing when the accident happened. The deceased was formerly a resident of Excel, his parents having resided there for the past twenty years, and made his home in Thief River Falls with his brother-in-law, Otto Bessler. About a month ago he went to Thief River Falls and was employed with the car-repairing crew on the Soo line. He was 24 years of age.—Thief River News.

BOYS IN RELAY RACE

To Grand Forks Greeting:—

In this race lies a prophecy, that the boys have found a plan to bring Fargo and Grand Forks closer together, and that the boys of today are the men of tomorrow.

PETER ELLIOT, Mayor.

The above message, enclosed in a metal tube, was started from Fargo by John Keyle at 19 minutes after 10 Wednesday morning and handed from boy to boy without a second's rest, until Cliff Dunham, running for Grand Forks, brought the message to the Y. M. C. A. building at Grand Forks at exactly 7 o'clock to be presented to Acting Mayor Geo. Buckingham.

Every Grand Forks boy who ran feels that he had one of the best times of his life, and any driver of an automobile who followed the race will aver that he never saw 40 boys enter upon any task with more enthusiasm, grit and energy than did 40 Grand Forks boys Wednesday when binging Mayor Elliot's message from Hillsboro to Grand Forks.

Fargo ran fifty miles in good shape, and both associations were handicapped by rain and by having a few boys who had to run long distances. Fargo had five boys who had to run four miles apiece at the end of the race, but Grand Forks' first ten men had an unusual distance to run and several of them ran between three and four miles The performance of the Grand Forks boys can elicit nothing but surprise.

Fargo ran 50 miles in 5 hours and 31 minutes, or at the rate of one mile in 6 minutes and 36 seconds, while Grand Forks ran 43 miles in 3 hours and 10 minutes, or at the rate of a mile in 4 minutes and 26 seconds. That is, Fargo ran over their whole course at the rate of 9.4 miles per hour, Grand Forks covered their whole course at the rate of 13.6 miles per hour, beating Fargo's time by an hour and a quarter. Both associations had their men cover short distances in quick relays which enabled the boys to sprint and keep up a great pace all the way. The first ten miles from Hillsbor out were covered by the first ten Grand Forks boys in 40 minutes, run in mile, half-mile and quarter mile stretches.

Notice of Application for Transfer of Liquor License.

State of Minnesota }
County of Red Lake, } ss

Notice is hereby given that application has been made in writing to the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, and filed in my office praying for transfer of license to sell Intoxicating Liquors for a term commencing on the twelfth day of July, 1909, and terminating on August twenty-fourth, 1909. By he following person as stated in said application respectively, to-wit. John J. Soll to

ANTON ANDERSON.

In that certain one story frame building with one front and one rear entrance situated as follows to-wit: Commencing 522 feet south of the North East corner of section 25 in Township 152, Range 45, and 133 feet west of Range line between Ranges 44-45 thence West 50 feet, thence South 150 feet thence East 50 feet thence North 150 feet to place of beginning.

For the reason that John J. Soll has sold his saloon business to said Anton Anderson, said business to be continued in the same location provided for in the original license.

This application and any remonstrance or objection to the transfer of the same will be heard and determined by said Board of County Commissioners at their next regular session on Monday, the 12th day of July, A. D. 1909, at the County Auditor's office in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

County Auditor,
Red Lake County, Minnesota.

Explained.

"What's his business?"
"He has none."
"How does he live, then?"
"His wife is a milliner."

THE DAY WE CELEBRATE.

Legal Holiday This Year Will Be the "Day After."

Minnesotans will not be cheated out of their Fourth of July holiday, even though July 4 this year falls on Sunday. The law makes the following day a legal hoilday, and July 5 will be celebrated in most cities of the state in appropriate manner. The observance will not be uniform, as many towns have planned to celebrate July 3, preferring Saturday because it is a better day to get the farmers into town.

The holiday is fixed by chapter 345 of the session laws of 1905, which says that "when Sunday and one or more legal holidays fall on the same day, the following day shall be deemed a legal holiday."

JOS. JOHNSON COMMISSIONER

Resident of Star Township Elected Member of County Board.

The chairmen of the boards of supervisors of the townships of the Fourth commissioner district and the mayor of Thief River Falls met at the auditor's office last Saturday to elect a member of the county board to succeed Daniel Shaw, resigned.

Nine men were entitled to vote at the meeting and all were present and voted. On the first formal ballot, Jos. Johnson, a resident of Star township, received five votes and was elected. Chas. P. Quist received two votes and Nels Anderson two. On the informal ballot, taken just before the formal ballot, Johnson received four votes, Quist three and Andersn two.

Mr. Jhonson is a man well qualified for the office of commissioner and his election is no doubt satisfactory to the people of his district.

The various towns in the district and the cityo f Thief River Falls were represented at the meeting by the following people:

T. P. Hamre—Thief River Falls.
Herman Ortloff—Sanders.
Ellef Gandlie—Norden.
H. R. Williams—North.
Anton E. Peterson—Silverton.
Edward Iveson—Clover Leaf.
E. H. Besancon—Goodridge.
Lewis S. Rosland—Riener.
Oluf O. Onlid—Star.

H. E. IVES SWORN IN

New County Treasurer Assumed Duties of Office Last Saturday.

Harry E. Ives was sworn in as county treasurer last Saturday, the bond having been secured and the accounts of the office audited. The auditing of the accounts shows a balance of more than ninety thousand dollars in the treasury. Treasurer Ives says that is a bigger balance than the St. Hilaire Spectator has had for months. Miss Ida Tandberg is employed as a deputy in the treasurer's office.

SOME GOSSIP FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Our New Special Correspondent Notes the Development of St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 21.

Whatever changes in the editorial policy of the Pioneer Press the future may witness, there can be no doubt that the business policy of the corporation will be revolutionized. The announcement has arleady been made that the manufacturing department has been disposed of to Walter J. Driscoll and Mr. Bigelow of the firm of Brown and Bigelow. I learn that manufacturing business will be carried on under a coporate name and that there will be other stockholders including some of the present employees. I am also infomed that the Northwestern Newspaper Union, which since it was established has been the property of the Pioneer Press company, has also been sold, the Western Newspaper Union, which recently bought the business of the Kellogg company, being the purchasers.

Newspaper Changes.

It seems probable that the Pioneer Press building will also revert to other ownership. At all events it will not continue to be the home of the Pioneer Press. That paper will be published from the Dispatch building. Accommodations will be found there for the editorial force and both the Dispatch and the Pioneer will be printed in the Dispatch press room. The economy of such an arrangement is apparent. The amalgamation of the two papers has resulted in a large reduction of both the editorial and the office force. Rehse no longer makes the Pioneer cartoons, those now used being copied from the New York Herald. Newsboys are also affected, many youngsters who have become familiar figures on busy corners have lost their jobs, to say nothing of the reduction in the force of carriers. Few business changes have ever been made in St. Paul which in so great a variety of ways affect so many people. What the political effect will be remains to be seen. It is claimed that the new management is in no way amenable to corporation control. A good many people are sceptical about this alleged enfranchisement, and say that convincing evidence of it is still lacking.

Trouble in Beltrami.

Nevertheless we learn a good many things from the Pioneer-Dispatch, perhaps more properly the Dispтch-Pioneer. We guess important things from what they don't tell us. For instance there's the trouble of the officials of Beltrami county who were recently indicted for malfeasence. There's politics in it, the Dispatch-Pioneer tells us, and as on futher inquiry it is learned the attorney general went up there to smooth things over, that looks true. While the deputy public examiner was digging out incriminatnig facts he doesn't appear from what evoluted to have had the state's legal department behind him. Mr. Simpson's mission I learn was one of peace and compromise. Now if it should turn out that the accommodating county commissioners and the obliging auditor were merely catspaws of the lumber barons, I wonder if that would have any bearing on the rumor that the Weyerhausers financed the Dispatch-Pioneer deal or the attitude of the state's legal department towards certain powerful interests of which something has hitherto been heard?

The Newspapers and the Tariff.

It is not yet apparent that either paper is taking sides, or even giving publicity to the political speculation which is a characteristic feature of this off yer. True just now both the Pioneer Press and the Dispatch are vigorous in their denunciation of the abortion which in the name of a revised tariff the Republican leaders in congress are attempting to foist upon the country in defiance of the well-understood wishes of the great bulk of the voters and in violation of reiterated Republican pledges. But by long experience we have learned to be skeptical of the opposition of Republian papers to Repblican policies in off years. It has never failed that at critical times when their sincerity has been put to test both Republican leaders, with some notable exceptions, have been whipped into line, and it would only be in accordance with precedence if some of those whose denunciation of the Aldrich bill are the most violent would, once it is enforced as a law, become its apologists. The Pioneer Press would not be true to itself if it did not support durig an election campaign that policy which when the editor wrote so to speak, off his own bat, he made it plain he had no use for.

Republican Incapacity.

But no matter what the attitude of the St. Paul papers may be it is every day becoming more plan that in each year's campaign the tariff issue will overshadow everything. As congress is at present constituted there is no reason to anticipate that a tariff bill will be enacted that will prove satisfactory to the people of the middle west. The responsibility for failure will be put where it belongs, up to the Republican party. The people have done what they have long been advised to do they have entrusted the revision of the tariff to the friends of the tariff. It is seen now how that works. Next time they will try another tack.

Tawney's Troubles.

That's going to be bad for some people. In the First district the glimpse Congressman Tawney caught of the hand writing on the wall appeared to have been sadly misinterpreted, and he has since pursued a fatuous policy. His ill-advised suit against the Albert Lea Tribune, his open antagonism to President Roosevelt, and his more recent declaration at Washington, after an extended visit to his district, that "Stop right there, Hiram!" interrupted Mrs. Curtis. "Not another word of that murderous, stealing game before the children! And if you ever spend another 50 cents on base ball I'll put your whole monthly allowance in the foreign missionary collection."

BIG DITCH ESTABLISHED

Ditch No. 35, in Silverton and Smiley, Nearly Seven Miles Long.

Many farmers interested in the establishment of proposed county ditch No. 35 were in town last Saturday at which time the matter of the establishment of the ditch came up before the commissioners. There was some lively debating and it was not until the board had given hearing to many claims that final action was taken.

After the debate ended the board decided to establish the ditch according to the survey of Engineer Martz and everybody went home happy. The new ditch will be constructed in the towns of Silverton and Smiley. It will be nearly seven miles long and will drain much low land.

GLAD NEWS FOR HOMESTEADERS

Settlers on the Eleven Towns Will Not be Required to Show Cause.

Those Complying With Law as to Residence and Cultivation Are Safe.

The Gazette has received the following self-explanatory letter from R. J. Montague, register of the land office:

The commissoner of the general land office yesterday telegraphed this office not to issue the notices proposed to be issued requiring homestead entrymen on the Eleven Red Lake Towns to show cause why the entries should not be cancelled by reason of their failure to pay past due installments, so such notices will not be issued. The reason is that Mr. Steenerson has introduced a bill in congress extending time to make such payments by all persons who are complying with the law as to residence and cultivation on those lands. It appears certain that no person who is complying with the law as to residence and cultivation will be troubled or bothered in any manner on account of failure to make payments until after Congress next winter shall have time to act on the matter. The bill in some form will in all probability be passed during next winter.

All Over the State

STATE FACES A DEFICIT.

Legislative Expenses to Blame for Half Million Decrease.

The state treasury of Minnesota is likely to face a somewhat heavier deficit this fall than it has for the last three years or so. When the railroad taxes are paid in the winter there is always a large surplus, and in the fall the treasury runs low, so that the state has to borrow. Four years ago the state had to borrow considerable sums, but the increase in the gross earnings taxes relieved the situation somewhat, and the last couple of years the deficit has been very small.

The cash balances in the treasury at the close of business for May are considerably less than a year ago. The total of all funds Saturday morning was $1,563,400, while at the same time last year it was $2,148,227. Of this amount the general revenue fund contains $961,376 this year, while a year ago it had $1,298,106.

A decrease of about half a million in the receipts from railroad taxes, due to the smaller amount of business last year, accounts for part of the decrease. The fact that the legislature met this year, spent the usual $200,000 for its own expenses, paid itself $91,000 for next year's salary and made various other appropriation available immediately, also has something to do with the decrease in the state's funds.

NEEDED IN MINNESOTA.

Governor Would Like to Name a Conservation Board.

Minnesota's absence from the list of states which have commissions, as suggested by Former President Roosevelt, for the conservation of natural resources is regretted by Gov. Johnson, but, until he can find three men willing to work for nothing, the state will have to continue to be among the missing.

"There can be no official commission," said the governor, speaking of Minnesota's failure to join in the work, "for the reason that nothing was done by the legislature. Such a commission was not even sanctioned.

"The work contemplated takes time and money, and if I can find some one willing to take up the task with the knowledge that what he may do will be entirely gratuitous, I shall certainly avail myself of his services. There is no money, not even for expenses. I have in mind now several persons whom I shall ask to serve as commissioners, but I have no knowledge that they will accept."

WANT TIMBER LANDS.

Inquiries Are Coming From All Parts of the Country.

There is more interest than ever before in Northern Minnesota timber lands, according to George Welch, state immigration agent. Mr. Welch has received a letter from a Belle Plaine, Iowa, real estate man, who had received a copy of the department's book on "Minnesota Timber Lands," and asks that a large number of the books be shipped to him by express. He said that the interest among land seekers there is rapidly turning toward the half-timbered lands of Northern Minnesota.

Mr. Welch said that is only a sample of hundreds of letters he is receiving from different parts of the country. There has been demands for so many thousands of the book that the department is able to supply only a small part of them with the limited appropriation. Inquiries come from all parts of the country, but Iowa, Illinois, Wisconsin, Ohio and Pennsylvania supply the largest number.

MILLION IN SMOKE.

Fire Losses in Minnesota During May.

Fire losses of over a million were reported to State Fire Marshal Edward Peterson for May. This is considerably larger than last year, but officials in the department say that this does not indicate greater fire losses. They had considerable trouble at first to get the fire departments of the smaller towns to report fires, but believe that now the officials are getting into the habit of reporting, so that practically all the fires are reported. The number of losses during the month was 171, the loss on buildings, $1,002.566; the insurance on buildings, $528,832; the loss on contents, $134,294, and the insurance on contents, $236,720.

LIKE NEW GRAIN TAX.

Country grain men are not disposed to fight the new bushel tax on grain, as many of them find it cost them less than by the old system. An instance was reported at the state capitol recently. The Farmers' Elevator company last year paid taxes on 1,000 bushels of grain on hand May 1, and the tax was $18. This year the elevator reports 96,000 bushels passed through it in the year preceding March 1. The bushel tax on this is only $11.

USE OF PARDON BOARD.

Gov. John A. Johnson and Chief Justice C. M. Start have taken issue with each other on the proper method of administering the pardon power. Gov. Johnson does not think the state pardon board is any improvement over the old scheme which gave the whole power to the governor. It has not reduced the number of pardons, he says, but they have actually increased under the board plan. On the other hand, there is little chance for a prisoner to get pardon or commutation unless he has an attorney to represent him at a meeting of the board. Deserving cases in this way may be overlooked. "If I had the sole responsibility for exercise of the pardoning power," said Gov. Johnson, "I would make personal visits to the penal institutions and investigate cases to find these men who are worthy of clemency, but fail to get it because they have no one to lay their case before the board."

Chief Justice Start says there may be more pardons under the present system, but there are also more prisoners. When the governor had the sole power there were no records, no hearings, and often the first that home people knew of a pardon was when the prisoner showed up with his pardon papers. The chief justice does not think applicants need an attorney. If their story shows a meritorious case they can get justice from the board. As to the plan of visiting institutions to look up worthy cases the chief justice says:

"I know of no rule or provision of the law that would hinder the governor from doing that under the present system and laying his information before the board. His recommendation would surely have great weight with the board."

LONG COURT TERM ENDS.

Ten Prisoners Sentenced at Pipestone to Stillwater and St. Cloud.

A term of district court has just come to a close at Pipestone, after having been in session since May 4. There was but one civil case for jury trial and four cases for court trial, but the grand jury returned twenty-two indictments, and the criminal work took up all but two days. At the close of the term Judge Brown sentenced the prisoners as follows:

George Barkley, grand larceny, five years at Stillwater; Dell Gillard, grand larceny, twenty-three months; Clarence Strong, grand larceny, sixteen months; Ed Quinn, grand larceny, one year; Nelse Nelson, grand larceny, eleven months; Eli Totman, grand larceny, six months; Thad Kelley, Alvin Brown and George W. Jones received sentences to the St. Cloud reformatory, and William Simning, charged with having sold mortgaged property, paid a fine of $100.

DEFENDS DAIRY LAW.

State Commissioner Says Amendment Is in Interest of Cleanliness.

Andrew French, state dairy and food commissioner, comes to the defense of the late legislature for the amendment which requires persons selling milk from a single cow to take out a license.

"The change in the law was necessary," he said. "The old arbitrary rule which only required licenses from owners of three or more cows was class legislation and would have been knocked out, if it ever got into court. The law is not so broad as some people think. It only applies to persons selling milk in municipalities, and not to country producers and shippers."

Mr. French says that his department is not concerned with the tuberculin test, but makes sanitary inspection of every dairy. The value of the license is to enforce sanitary conditions in all dairies, without which the license may be revoked.

BIG PURSES FOR RACES.

Superintendent of Speed George Atchinson of the Minnesota state fair is making every possible effort to interest racing men all over the country in the races scheduled for the state fair, Sept. 6 to 11 this year. There will be two $5,000 purses hung up, one the Minneapolis stake and the other the St. Paul stake. Altogether there will be $25,750 hung up for purses, and there are on the schedule twenty-seven different events.

The races this year will be held under the old "two in three" and "three in five" rules, instead of under the "every heat a race" system, which was tried and found wanting last year. All entries will close the night before the race, and if any race is called off by the association the entry money will be refunded.

STATE BUYS FARM.

Land for the state hospital farm for inebriates has been purchased by the state board of control near Willmar. A farm of 462 acres is acquired from D. N. Tallman of Willmar for a consideration of about $39,000. The farm is well improved, having buildings appraised at about $20,000, and is the one which took the J. J. Hill prize in the tristate competition last year. A side track will be put in for supplying fuel and for loading out farm products.

IN THE SCANDINAVIAN NORTH

Gleanings of Important News of Norway, Sweden and Denmark, with Occasional Comments.

By MARTIN W. ODLAND.

NORWAY.

I have referred more than once to the proposed "Mindegave"—a memorial gift from Norwegian-Americans to "Moder Norge," to be delivered May 17, 1914, the one hundredth anniversary of Norway's natal day. I have stated that the idea originated at a 17th of May celebration in Minneapolis some years ago; that a "Mindegave" convention was held in Chicago a couple of years ago, where it was decided that the form of the gift should be a big sanatorium for the treatment of consumptives and a home for "National-forbundet" in Christiania; that a "Mindegave" committee was appointed to solicit the necessary funds; that dissatisfaction arose among the Norwegians both in America and Norway as to the form of the gift; that, in recognition of this dissatisfaction, the committee decided to call another convention to reopen the question and, if possible, agree upon a gift that would meet with general approval on both sides of the Atlantic.

Such a convention was held in Minneapolis June 2 last, and it was attended by over a hundred representative Norwegians, who were sent as delegates by various societies and institutions and by mass meetings held in a number of cities where Norwegians were numerous. The discussion was long and animated, but friendly, and it developed that most of the delegates were in favor of raising money for the creation of a permanent fund or legacy, to be placed at the disposal of the storthing of Norway, the principal to remain intact for all time to come, but the earnings or interest of the fund to be used for humane and worthy purposes of various kinds, such as educating the children of the poor, helping communities stricken by calamities, draining moors and marshes, reforesting cut-over lands, cut-over lands, aiding young and struggling artists, poets, scholars, and assisting deserving institutions. It was also decided to set aside a fund of 250,000,000 crowns for the restoration of a part of the Trondhjem cathedral, or "Demkirke," now in ruins. When the matter was put to a vote all but one of the delegates voted in favor of such a gift as I have here described, and the convention adjourned, sine die, amidst general enthusiasm.

Senator L. O. Thorpe of Willmar, Minn., a well known and very highly respected gentleman, was elected chairman of the "Mindegave" committee in place of Prof. H. G. Stub of Hamline, Minn., who declined a reelection. Editor Grevstad, of Skandinaven, Chicago, was elected vice president, and Halward Askeland of Minneapolis, was elected secretary, and an executive committee composed of about a dozen prominent Norwegians of America was chosen to carry on the work of arousing interest among the people and to direct the affairs of the committee.

It is thus decided beyond a shadow of a doubt that there will be a "Mindegave," but the extent of it cannot now be determined. The most zealous say that the gift will amount to millions of dollars, a sum not too large to raise, considering the large number of Norwegian-Americans, but it is probable that the fund will contain less than half that amount. There will be a great deal of discussion as to this interesting proposition, and it will be one of the principal themes of the Norwegian-American newspapers from this time till 1914. In my opinion the Minneapolis convention acted with great wisdom, agreeing upon a form for the memorial gift on which all patriotic Norwegians, who love the land of their fathers, ought to be able to agree.

DENMARK.

The election of members of the folketing took place recently, but at this writing the result is not definitely known, only meager press dispatches being at hand. Judging by these, the outcome was not decisive. The principal issue was the question of the national defense, about which I have frequently written. On Feb. 12 Premier Neergaard submitted the plan of the government, and Former Premier Christensen opposed it with vigor, and submitted another plan, differing from it quite radically. It appears from the press dispatches that thirty-eight members favorable to Neergaard's plan were elected to the folketing; thirty-four members favorable to Christensen's plan, thirty-nine Socialists and Radicals, opposed to the defense proposition altogether, and eleven who are not committed. If this is the actual result of the election, it is evident that the administration will have hard work getting its plan adopted by the next rigsdag, having less than one-half of the members under its control.

MANURE SPREADER PAYS FARMER BIG PROFIT

Is Easier and Gives Much Better Results than Is Possible by Old-Fashioned Method of Using Pitch Fork.—By C. Miller.

(Copyright, 1909.)

We have never yet heard of a farmer who used a manure spreader who went back to the old-fashioned way of pitching the manure out of a wagon with a fork. The advantages of the spreader over the old way of using a fork are so numerous and so plain that no argument can overcome them.

A Manure Spreader in Operation.

In the first place, spreading manure from a wagon is a dirty and disagreeable job. In the next place, it is utterly impossible to distribute the manure evenly by this method.

By the use of a spreader a man can get over a great deal more ground and the manure will go very much farther because it is evenly distributed.

If you will observe the meadows where you have distributed manure by the forkful, you will see that field presents a spotted appearance, the grass being rank in those places where the manure struck the ground, but scanty and sparse where no manure reached it.

By the use of a wagon a man must stand on the manure while distributing it, and the starting and stopping of the team takes time, and altogether the job is unsatisfactory.

With a manure spreader all that is necessary is to back the machine up next to the back of the barn under the stable window and empty the manure into it daily and then when the box is full mount the wagon, drive out into the field, and without touching the manure with a fork it is quickly and easily distributed.

Spreaders are so arranged that by a little pressure on a lever the amount of manure can be increased on the bare spots and shut off where not so much is needed.

There are plenty of two-horse manure spreaders, but most of them require three horses and sometimes farmers use a double team for the purpose. A good form of spreader is the wagon box type. It is simply a box fitted with the machinery and which will go onto your wagon trucks. They are quickly attached and are light and handy, because they will go anywhere that a wagon will go.

These wagons can easily be handled with two horses. A good way to use this spreader is to have two supports on the outside of the barn near the window upon which the box spreader is placed. But a better way is to suspend the spreader from supports by means of ropes and a pulley and when the box is full run the trucks under, let down the box and drive off.

These machines are somewhat cheaper than the regular spreaders, the difference being from $40 to $60.

GOOD CONDITION BEFORE LAMBING

Before and After Anxious Time for Raiser.

Both before and after lambing is an anxious time for the sheep raiser, as he stands to lose considerable or to gain a great deal.

Much is written about the treatment of ewes after lambing and too little is said about giving them extra care beforehand.

If the ewe is thin and weak the lambs always make a bad start, for if the milk is deficient both in quantity and quality they are badly nourished. If only one is to be raised it may succeed better than twins, but even a single lamb will have a hard time of it if the ewe is poor.

I know there is danger in having some kinds of stock too fat at the time of producing their young, but very few ewes suffer from that.

It is most undesirable to have the strength of the ewe impaired at this time, as strength is needed to lamb successfully and condition is wanted to provide amply for the lambs. For this reason it would be well to put the breeding ewes under careful surveillance for a time before lambing.

A heavy coat of wool may give them a fat appearance, but if the bones are prominent it is not a good sign. Extra care and superior food daily are really necessary if one would be quite sure the ewes are in proper condition.

It is much chepear and more satisfactory to do this than to make great efforts to improve them afterward.—W. R. Gilbert.

In Weaning Pigs—Take them away in detachments, beginning first with two or three of the plumpest, largest and strongest; then the next strongest batch, leaving the poor ones of the litter to complete the drying off.

The boar ought always to be kept in a pen by himself, preferably away from the other hogs. He should have a good-sized yard in which he can exercise.

If allowed to run with the other hogs he is likely to injure them badly.

Keep him thrifty, but not too fat, or his get will be puny.

Good pigs are not grown and fattened on wind and water.

Good breeding and good feeding are so closely allied that they must go together. One is useless without the other.

Value of Good Milkers.—A poor milker will make a good cow unprofitable. Gentleness, quietness, the same milker day by day and regular hours for milking all play an important part. Having attended to these things, test the cows thoroughly. It may be some trouble, but there is work in everything that pays. Having found the per cent. of butter fat, weigh or measure the milk and observe whether she keeps up the maximum quality or falls off in a little while after freshening, and whether she goes a long time dry. Sometimes the owner is to blame for this, not having fed properly. Sell all that, given a good test, are found wanting. The profit on a good cow isn't large. We can afford to keep no drones in our dairy hives.

Adulterated Seeds.—Good work in detecting adulterated seeds is being carried in by the departmeut of agriculture. Of 1.471 samples of seeds taken last year, 102 samples were found adulterated or misbranded. The department publishes the results of the test together with the names of the firms that sold the seed. It is claimed that since this work began the trade in adulterated seeds has greatly fallen off.

Value of Poultry.—The hen and her egg are depended upon to pay more grocers' bills than all other agricultural crops. We are told that poultry literature is read by more people than all other experimental literature put together, and I believe that there will be in time a greater demand in New England for poultry education than for any other two agricultural branches combined.

The Delirious Kind.

H. K. Adair, the detective, was being complimented in Grand Rapids about an absconding banker he had run to earth.

"Oh, the man gave himself away," said Mr. Adair. "He shied too much. Everything seemed, in his morbid mind, to point suspicion at him. He was like the old widdy woman.

"'He was very, very, very good to me,' she said. 'And I'll have a coffin of the best yellow pine.'

"'Yes, madam. That'll be $14,' said the undertaker. 'And what kind of trimmings will you have on the coffin?'

"'Trimmin's!' cried the widdy woman. 'And right well ye know, ye spalpeen, that I'll have no trimmin's at all when it was the trimmin's that the poor lad died of, bad luck to 'em!'"—Detroit Free Press.

United States Postage Stamps.

Uncle Sam's postage stamps are manufactured by the bureau of engraving and printing at Washington; the stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers are made under departmental supervision, under contract, by a private corporation whose factory is lovated at Dayton, O., while his postal cards are made under similar conditions at Rumford, Me. From these points distribution is made to post offices throughout the country, upon requisition of postmasters. Postage stamped paper issued during the year aggregated $176,974,190.24, an increase of $3,967,713.97 over 1907. The total number of pieces of stamped paper was 9,772,059,664, an increase of 440,140,609; books of stamps, 18,213,310, an increase of 526,510. That the issue of postage stamps will cross the ten billion mark during the fiscal year 1909 is confidently anticipated.—A. L. Lawshe, in National Magazine.

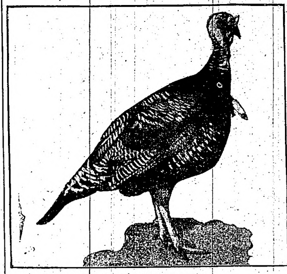
TURKEY POULTS NEED MUCH CARE AND NURSING

Dark, Damp Quarters and Vermin Responsible for Much Disease and Death Among the Young Ones. —By Anna Galigher.

(Copyright, 1909.)



A Prize Winning Turkey Tom.

Turkey hens begin laying early in the spring, and as they usually make their nests on the ground, it is not advisable to let them hatch the first lot of eggs, unless one can get them to sit in some sheltered place.

If the hen sits in a cold, damp nest the eggs will not hatch well. This is often the cause of weak, sickly poults.

While turkey hens make the best mothers, it is a good plan to hatch the first clutch of eggs with chicken hens; then by the time the turkey hens have finished the second laying the weather is somewhat warmer and they may be allowed to sit.

See that the hens have good nests and are kept free of lice. If the hens are allowed to sit in old nest-boxes they will soon become regular louse incubators. Then when the little turkeys come out your trouble will begin in earnest.

It doesn't take many lice to kill a young turkey. A young turkey cannot endure these life-sapping creatures as long as a chick can.

If the feed is all right, and still they do not seem to thrive, the chances are that they have vermin of some sort.

Spread the wings out and examine well on both the inside and outside. The latter is a favorite hiding place, and it sometimes happens that no lice can be found anywhere else. However, it is not uncommon to find the large lice wherever there are pin-feathers. Head lice attack little turkeys almost as soon as they are hatched.

Last year we pinned our faith to a so-called "louse-killer," and before we knew it our turkeys and chickens were literally alive with lice. Whether it has lost its strength or was bogus we are not prepared to say, but every time it was applied the little fowls became so sick that some of them came near dying.

It had a worse effect upon the turkeys and chickens than it did upon the lice. Then we began to use lard, as we used to do years ago, before "louse-killers" came into general use.

Up to this time we had lost 15 turkeys and twice that number of chickens, all because the "louse-killer" failed to kill lice. No more turkeys or chicks died, but thousands of lice did. Great care must be exercised lest a little too much is applied. Just a little is enough, and it must be put on where it will reach the lice.

Take a little on the end of the finger and apply wherever the lice are found. Olive oil may be used instead of lard. Lice cannot live long in either, and both are harmless to the little fowls unless too much is used.

The grease should not touch the bare spot under the wings if it can be avoided, and the head should not be greased unless one is certain that either lice or nits are present.

A young turkey needs sunshine Some people make a practice of shutting their turkeys up in close, dark coops for the first week or two after they are hatched.

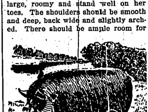
These are the people whose turkeys die "without any cause."

GET RIGHT KIND OF BROOD SOW

Scrubs Never Prove to be Money Getters.

Few things are more displeasing than to see a lot of heterogenous pigs following a scrub sow. They are unsatisfactory to the feed lot and unprofitable to the farmer.

There is no good excuse for keeping scrub sows. The brood sow should be large, roomy and stand well on her toes. The shoulders should be smooth and deep, back wide and slightly arched. There should be ample room for heart and lungs provided by a wide and deep chest, well-sprung ribs and straight, deep sides. A good depth of chest and abdomen are especially important in a sow.



Right Kind of Brood Sow.

If possible the sow should be selected from a large litter. This is apt to insure fecundity. Each sow should have at least 12 well-developed teats, thus providing proper nourishment for large litters.

The sow should show quality, but not at the expense of constitution and vigor. When a sow has shown herself to be a prolific breeder she should be retained as long as her reproductive powers are maintained.

Treatment for Roup.—Roup is a contagious catarrh and will, unless immediately checked, go through the entire flock. Every affected bird should be separated from the rest at once. The swelling on the head should be opened with a sharp instrument and the wound treated with an antiseptic, such as listerine, or one part carbolic acid to twenty parts water. A five per cent. solution of sulphate of copper injected into the nostrils, the cleft of the palate, the eyes and the wounds made by opening the swellings is said to be very good.

Sometimes roup takes the form of diphtheria and is more violent than ordinary roup. Sometimes children take it from poultry. It is very difficult to cure, and if this disease got into my own flock I would kill every affected bird and burn its body. You will save time and probably a part of your flock by killing all the diseased birds and burning them.

Put the rest of the flock in warm, dry quarters, and before putting them in burn a little sulphur in the building, first closing all the openings. Do not put the birds into the building for at least five hours after the burning of the sulphur, during which time it should be thoroughly ventilated.

Pointers on Pea Raising.—It is difficult to secure exhibition peas without thinning the clusters. A pole with a notch in one end is used, which enables the operator to twist them off rapidly. Usually, if the clusters were reduced one-half or more, the crop would be more valuable. Nature does some of this thinning, but not enough. If half the blossoms drop without setting fruit, the orchardist will do well to cut out half of those that remain.

Japanese Cherries.—The Japanese cultivate the cherry tree mainly for its blossom, and have parks and avenues of these trees. When the blossoms are at the height of beauty everybody goes to see the trees, and the mikado gives a garden party to Japanese and European officials for the enjoyment of the sight.

Feeding Calves.—Don't feed the calves too much milk. Don't feed sour milk. Don't feed the young calves cold milk or the digestion of the calf will be in danger, and lack of thrift, scours and so-called calf cholera will follow.

Relieving Choking Cow.—One who has successfully tried it says that a choked cow may be relieved by tying a stick in her mouth to hold it open for a while. Her effort to dislodge it will start the obstruction in the throat.

Alfalfa Adulterations.—The most common adulterations of alfalfa seed are burr clover, yellow, trefoil and sweet clover. Crab grass, rib grass and green and yellow foxtail are also found.

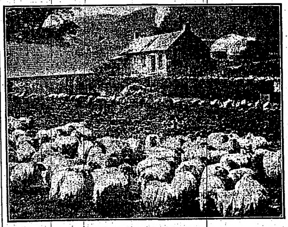
MODERN METHODS OF SHEEP SHEARING GREAT HELP

Many Improvements Over Old Days When Wool Was Gathered by Allowing Animals to Rub and Squeeze Each Other.

The earliest method of securing the wool was to drive the sheep quickly through a narrow passage, and the squeezing and rubbing of one against another loosened and detached the wool. Later, an "improved" plan was adopted, which, in our ears, sounds somewhat inhumane, although, as a matter of fact, if done at the right time, there would probably be nothing painful or severe about it. The sheep were caught, and the wool was pulled from their backs by hand. This practice continued for many hundreds of years, for although Laban and the other great pastoralists of his time clipped their sheep, Pliny tells us that, in his day, when Rome was in the zenith of her glory, "the sheep are not everywhere shorn, but the custom of pulling off the wool continues in some places." It is to the old patriarchs, then, that we must give the credit of having set about getting the wool in a business-like way, and from their day until now practically no change has taken place in the manner and method of clipping.

Most of the clipping on the big Border farms in Great Britain is done by the ordinary shepherding staff.



Sheep Shearing Time.

Very often a helper is engaged for a fortnight or so, to push the work through, but the heaviest part of the burden rests on the shoulders of the permanent hands. Needless to say, it is a busy time while it lasts, for all the other work of the farm has to be carried on simultaneously, and it means, for the shepherds, getting up very early—not later than 4:30, and working late. The permanent hands, having their ordinary work to get through as well, do not, of course, clip so many sheep in a day as a clipper specially engaged for the job. About a score per man, or thereabouts, is considered a very good day's work; a good hand working full time will turn out, on an average, about thirty. Formerly he used to be paid by the day, but it is more usual now to follow the piecework plan.

On both sides of the Border, the Lowland sheep are always washed a week or so before shearing. But many farmers assert that there are other benefits which accrue from it. They say the washing improves the health of the sheep. Some old writers held this view, and Youatt quotes that excellent chemist Vauquelin, who says: "In this respect I am inclined to adopt the opinion of those who think that the washing of sheep, during dry warm weather, may be useful to their health and to the quality of the wool." However this may be, it is beyond question that the practice of washing, previous to shearing, is of ancient date, and it is quite probable that its origin is to be found in the belief that it was beneficial from the point of view of health. In the North Country the clipping is usually done in an open-fronted covered shed, where there is plenty of light. An old sail-cloth, or a covering of boards, is laid over the earthen floor, and these are kept clean by sweeping. The actual method of clipping is very similar, I fancy, in all districts—first the opening out of the head, neck, brisket and thighs, then the curving round the ribs from the belly up to the back, first on one side and then on the other, and then the quarters. A well-clipped sheep should show the rings formed by the shears running in continuous lines all round its barrel and up the quarters; there should be no break along the back where the line traveling up one side meets that coming up the other. These lines, or little ridges of wool, should be small and of uniform size, and they should all be at the same distance from one another. It is quite wonderful how much better a nicely-shorn sheep looks than one which is carelessly and untidily done. And there is more in it than a mere pleasing of the eye. A well-clipped lot of sheep, because of their attractive appearance, will bring, as a rule, an appreciably higher price than another lot done in a slovenly manner; this may frequently be seen in the case of clipped hoggs. There is also no loss of wool in the former case; in the latter, too much is frequently left on the ridges, and this, of course, reduces the weight of fleece.

The use of clipping machines instead of hand-shears has made, as yet, little headway in the north; but more attention is being given to the idea year by year. On some of the larger farms, one or perhaps two hand-driven machines are to be found; none is power driven. If machines come into general use it will be because of the difficulty of finding casual clippers rather than for reasons of economy. The farmers do not anticipate any great saving of expense by the use of machines; they say that one man with a machine driven by a lad or woman worker will not get through more than the number which two good men could clip—that is to say, about sixty per day. When the woman's wage is added to the cost of cleaning, oiling, repairing and depreciation of the machine and is set against the out-of-pocket expenses incurred under existing circumstances by a big farmer, there can be little saving by the new method. For it is to be remembered, as stated previously, that most of the clipping is already done by permanent servants, whose wages have to be paid anyhow.

FACTS ABOUT HENS AND EGGS

How to Make Most Money from Poultry.

When cholera appears in the flock give no water except that in which pokerroot has been boiled. This is both a preventative and a cure. An Illinois man says one of his hens laid an egg two and seven-eighths inches long and one and fifteen-sixteenths inches wide, the measurement being taken with calipers.

One man will win with one kind of hen and another man with some other breed. It is with hens as it is with cows. We should choose the breed we like the best and then stay with it.

Fowls are naturally hardy, and contagion in a flock is due to carelessness on the part of the poultry keeper. This is proved by the fact that expert poultry raisers have very few sick chickens.

Hens need a better place in which to roost than the trees around the house. Of course, they may survive there; but merely living and returning a profit are two different things.

Don't stop feeding the hens shells just because they are out of doors and can shift for themselves. There is no line, not even an imaginary one, between the days when the hen likes shells and when she does not. All days are alike in that respect.

A woman in Vermont writes that from 60 pullets and 12 yearling Rhode Island hens she sold last year eggs to the amount of $262.62, not counting the eggs used in a family of four. Feed, advertising, etc., cost $94.77, making a gain of $167.85. These hens laid 8,745 eggs.

To have the chickens mature rapidly a proper type of breeding fowl should be obtained. This type consists of fowls of medium size and broad and blocky in shape, like the Plymouth Rock and Wyandottes. The chickens should be frequently fed, and a sufficient quantity of food given each time to satisfy them.

Sugar as a Finishing Feed.—A herd of 15 Black Angus cattle which was awarded first prize at the Chicago International Stock show, and which was sold at $17 per hundred pounds live weight, was fattened on a ration which included molasses. Besides pasture feed, corn and oats, the owner fed during the last month a mixture of oil meal and oats, to which was added a sprinkling of molasses. It was found that the molasses added a glossiness to the hides and improved the appearance of the animals in every way.

Alfalfa Seed.—Alfalfa seeds resemble those of red clover in size, but differ in not being so uniform in shape. The color should be light olive green or greenish yellow. Darkened, discolored and shriveled seed should be discarded, as its germinating power is low. Plump, well-matured seed produce more plants and stronger plants than do the small and immature.

A Scheme.

"But, doctor," asked the young practitioner, "why do you always order champagne for every new patient that comes to you?"

"Because, my boy," replied the wise old medical man, "I can judge by what he says whether or not he can afford it. That helps when I come to make out my bill."

Many a man forgets what he ought to know and knows what he ought to forget.

GOT TO THE CAUSE

And Then All Symptoms of Kidney Trouble Vanished.

C. J. Hammonds, 517 S. Hill St., Fort Scott, Kansas, says: "I was operated on for stone in the kidney but not cured and some time after was feeling so bad that I knew there must be another stone that would have to be cut out. I decided to try Doan's Kidney Pills and the kidney action improved right away. Large quantities of sediment and stony particles passed from me, and finally the stone itself, part dissolved, but still as big as a pea. With it disappeared all symptoms of dizziness, rheumatism and headaches. I have gained about 50 pounds since and feel well and hearty."

Dr. P. S. Henson once delivered his lecture on "Fools" at the New York Chautauqua. In introducing him, Bishop Vincent said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, we are now to listen to a lecture on 'Fools,' by one—" (the audience broke into a roar of laughter, and after it had died away, Bishop Vincent added) —"of the most brilliant men in America.

Dr. Henson rose and with a genial smile said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I am not so great a fool as Bishop Vincent"—(another roar of laughter, after which the speaker added)—"would have you believe."

SCARED THE WORDS AWAY.

American in Madrid Couldn't Talk to the Watchman at All.

Oftentimes folks get so nervous in a foreign country that they forget every word of the language, especially if they are new to it. That was the case with a young American in Madrid, and it came near getting him into trouble.

He was out late at a theater the first night after his arrival to the small native hotel where he was stopping with the idea of improving his Spanish he found the door locked. It wasn't until after a vain search for a doorbell that he remembered what som eone had told him about the sereofios, the night watchmen. He clapped his hands and the watchman came around the corner on a trot.

He took a key from his pocket and opened the door and then turned to the young man and asked in Spanish: "What is the number of your room? The young man heard that if he gave a number for which the sereflo could find no key he was in danger of being arrested, and that thought drove every bit of Spanish out of his head.

He stood there dumb while the sereflo looked at him angrily. The young man was trying his best to remember how to say the number in Spanish, when luckily one of the employes strayed down through the hall. It was the porter who had carried up the American's trunk earlier in the day.

He knew the American and told the sereflo it was all right. The young man didn't have any trouble thereafter, but he still is wondering what would have happened if the servant hadn't happened to come along just at that time.

These jurists seem to be unafraid. For instance Judge Watts has the temerity to overrule Court Commissioner Johnson on a point of law!

It is given out that Mary McFadden, the bright young lady in charge of the Duluth News-Tribune "News and Comment," has taken a position on the Minneapolis Journal.

It is claimed by the Duluth papers that a new iron range has been discovered in the Vermillion river country, seventy miles northwest of Tower, near the Canadian line.

The Anoka Union says "the republicans can elect the next governor if they please," and up jumps the Breckenridge Telegram and wants to know whom they shall please.

J. Adam Bede thinks Governor Johnson shouldn't lecture for money. Adam's real objection is that the governor has no business encroaching on the prerogatives of the down-and-outers.

The words of Samuel J. Tilden are especially applicable to our present experience in tariff revision by its friends:

"All history shows that reform in government must not be expected from those who sit serenely on the social mounntaintops enjoying the benefits of the existing order of things."

Beltrami county has again entered upon a day of reckoning because of a loose management of county affairs. The county is $300,000 in debt and nothing in sight to pay. The auditor and three commissioners have been indicted by the grand jury, and it is hoped that after the culprits are sent to Stillwater the county will enter upon an era of honest government.

Churches will be required to pay taxes on residence property owned and used for a manse or parsonage, under the construction of the law made by Attorney General George T. Simpson, in his opinion given the state tax commission. Under his opinion, it is likely also that guild halls, club buildings and other edifices on church property, not used for worship, will be declared taxable.

As yet Mr. Bryan shows no signs of getting out of the political game, says the Adrian Democrat He wants to retain sufficient power, at least, to indicate who shall be the Democratic presidential nominee in 1912 We admire Mr. Bryan for his brilliant intellect, but distrust his political judgment. If he succeeds in naming the candidate three years hence, he is just as likely to choose a dead one as a live one.

All this talk of independent voting is a mere bluff, when it comes to a real test. Republicans have been voting the democratic ticket by the thousands, but democrats never reciprocate.—St. Peter Free Press.

The facts of history do not bear out Bro. Miller's contention. In 1904 over 50,000 Minnesota democrats voted for Roosevelt, and in 1896 fully 20,000 voted for McKinley on the financial question. As a general proposition, Minnesota voters are a rather independent lot

Anybody can soil the reputation of an individual, howeverr pure and chaste, by uttering a suspicion that his enemies will believe and his friends ever hear of, says the Duluth Labor World. A puff of the idle wind can take a million of the seeds of the thistle and do the work of mischief which the husbandman must labor long to undo, the floating particles being too fine to be seen and too light to be stopped. Such are the seeds of slander, so easily sown, so difficult to be gathered up, and yet so pernicious in their fruits. The slanderer knows that many a mind will catch up the plague and become poisoned by his insinuation, without seeking the antidote. no reputation can refute a sneer, nor any human skill prevent mischief.

Sixteen years ago the tariff situation was as acute as it is at the present day. Cleveland, like Taft, had been elected on a platform pledged to revision downward. Cleveland used all his power to compel his party to redeem its promises, and refused to sign the tariff bill because it did not meet the reasonable expectations of the people, characterizing the measure as an act of "perfidy and dishonor." President Taft seems to be less desirous of having the people's will carried out, and is accused of using his influence to assist Aldrich and Cannon. It is not hard to imagine where the republican party will find itself in the congressional elections next year if the president signs the Aldrich bill without at least voicing the protest of an outraged people.

When a person dies of tuberculosis we are apt to think, "Well, not only are his troubles over, but he is no longer an expense to family, friends or the community." No further expense perhaps, but nevertheless a great loss, not only in the circle of family or friends, but also to the community, says the Metropolitan Magazinne. There are, it is said, 200,000 deaths from tuberculosis in the United States annually. Let us be conservative and say 150,000. The average age at time of death is 35 years. The normal life would go on for thirty-two years longer, or until the sixty-seventh year. Fredrick L. Hoffman, a noted statistician, has estimated that the real loss of life of these 150,000 victims of consumption, measured in time, is 4,800,000 years per annum. "If we assume that the net value of a year of human life is at least $50, the real loss to the nation resulting from the disease, a large portion of which is needless, may be estimated at $240,000,000 per annum."

The matter of chief importance in the fight against tuberculosis is to speak knowledge of the nature of the disease and methods of the prevention and cure. In that work every available means of publicity is valuable. Perhaps no one way could be devised that will produce more good results than to have the numerous fraternal organizations of the country take it up, as the Modern Woodmen of America have done. The general organization has printed a booklet explaining the nature of the disease, the first symptoms, how to keep well, how to guard against the spread of tuberculosis, and giving a large amount of valuable information, says the Duluth Herald. Also for the benefit of its members, the order has established a sanitarium in the mountains of Colorado, and local lodges are contributing to equip it.

This is splendid work. The Modern Woodmen couldn't find a better thing to turn their intelligence and industry to, and other similar organizations will do well to follow their example.

A TRIBUTE TO SHAW.

Outside of county-seat differences, among the people of Red Lake county, on both sides of "Mason and Dixon's line," there is but one sentiment as regards the value of Daniel Shaw as a county commissioner He is not only a thorough business man, with almost a technical knowledge of the science of county government, but he is a courteous gentleman, honest, capable and conscientious.

In the county-seat contention Mr. Shaw was a tower of strength for his side of the argument, and the people of Red Lake Falls have no quarrel with him on that score. A man who will not stand by and defend his own town and his own people is lacking in the basic element of good citizenship, fit only for "treason, strategems, and spoils." Mr. Shaw, while loyal to his local interests was loyal to the larger interests of the county, and on numerous occasions has shown a spirit of large-heartedness and broad comprehension. The Gazette, without desiring to minimize the ability and good qualities of his successor, is really sorry that Mr. Shaw has tired of the burden and lain down the cares and strifes of county-seat warfare. He wasn't on our side, but he was a good fighter, and a fair one. Some sweet day after the Appotamox we hope to see him again take up the reins of official life.

ONLY ONE TICKET.

Frank A. Day, chairman of the democratic state committee, in an interview at Duluth is quoted as saying:

"If the Aldrich-Payne bill passes there ought to be but one ticket in Minnesota, and I, as chairman of the demcratic state central committee, would be glad to co-operate to that end, regardless of party, and only for the purpose of striking a strong blow toward the overthrow of that sordid, selfish and corrupt dynasty. I would favor the re-election of all congressmen who vote against the bill. I would be willing to waive all party lines and see both state conventions nominate the same ticket, the object being to emphasize to the other states our indignation at the treachery of the bosses to the interests of the people, be they democrats or republicans. I would gladly see the conventions agree on the same platform as well as the same ticket in support of the overshadowing principal of tariff reform and see them indorse congressmen pledged to it regardless of party. It is greater than party politics, for it concerns all the producing classes of the state, and on whom we depend. What power I have as head of the party I would exercise first to send men to Washington who are opposed to the Cannon machine and the Aldrcib dynasty.

"I appreciate that Minnesota is a republican state, and we are in power because we presented the best candidate, but the principal of this fight is greater than men and if the democratic party can do anything to break the plutocartic rule of Aldrich and Cannon I shall favor the sacrifice of political spoils to bringing about the relief so necessary to the growth and prosperity of our commonwealth"

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Aitkin Age: We believe there was something said about the tariff being revised by its friends.

Winona Independent: It looks now as if the "Black Hand" was to get something more than a mere slap on the wrist.

Albert Lea Standard: The tariff may not be a political or party question, but the time nevertheless, is not far away when party voters will do it to certain conceited, contaminated or benumbed politicians, with their ballots.

Ely Minor: We will get reapportionment when we elect senators and representatives that are favorable to the measure. Now is the time to get wise to those who are for us or against us. The last legislature produced incontrovertible proof of its hostility to this section of the state and a weeding process should be in order.

Virginia Virginian: Just because no special session of the legislature will be called for the consideration of reapportionment, the agitaion for proper representation of northern Minnesota should not cease. Continuous arguments and action for the next two years may influence the legislature to give northern Minnesota its just dues.

Chisholm Tribune: So long as there is selfishness in man, disputes are bound to arise. The civilized world will have taken a long step forward when all disputes shall be settled by arbitration. A labor strike is as unnecessary as a war between two nations. There are too many innocent sufferers. We need a board of arbitration in each state in the union. Here's work for the reformer.

Bemidji Pioneer: 'Bob' Dunn's Princeton Union says: "Up to date Lieutenant Governor Eberhart is leading the pack in his race for the republican nomination for governor. Mr. Eberhart has the field all to himself this year, but he may have company in 1910."

And some are of the belief that the "company" which the lieutenant governor may have in 1910 will be "Bob," in person.

St. Cloud Times: Ninety per cent of the newspapers of Minnesota are demanding real tariff revision; not that proposed by the Aldrich-Payne bill. And Congressman Tawney says the northwest is not interested in the tariff.—St. Peter Herald.

If Mr. Tawney had said that the northwest is not represented by its house members in the great contest now on he would have told the truth. The First district member is one of the stand-pat triumvirate: Cannon, Dalzell and Tawney.

he found nothing there to indicate dissatisfaction with the proposed tariff revision, has probably sealed his fate.

Not that I think it unlikely that he will be able again to capture the nomination. With the powerful machine he has and with the resources that will be at his demand, and in the absence of any strong candidate in his own party to oppose him,—and in that respect the Republicans of the First district are deplorably weak, there is little likelshood that his defeat by his own party will be accomplished. Even if it were the people have had an object lesson of what results by displacing one Republican with another in the Eight district case. While Miller in the campaign was the most pronounced of insurgents no sooner did he reach Washington than the party bosses whipped him into line. History has a way of repeating itself, and the indications now are that the people of the First district will not trust next time any man who gives allegiance to leaders who tax them that Eastern industries may wax fat. When they drop Tawney they will demand a new deal. They want tariff revision but by the friends of tariff reform. The Republican party has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. Naturally the people will be inclined to discipline it and will be in the temper to give weight to the reprsentations of the candidates of the opposing parties. The Democrats have plenty of Congressional timber down there. In Brown of Winona they have one of the most aggressive campaigners in the state. In previons contest with Tawney he formed a wide acquaintance and gathered a strong following through out the district. Moonan of Waseca is a man of acknowledged ability whose distinguished service for reform in the senate is gratefully acknowledged by men of all parties. Cashman of Steele is understood also to have congressional aspirations and in every campaign he has made and proved his popularity. True, none of them is now willing to admit that he is in the field, but we have learned to recognize that public men are liable before the convention to say one thing and after it to do another.

After Hammond's Scalp.

The republicans in the Second district appear to have concluded that if they could enter the campaign without a preliminary contest for the nomination and without a man bearing the party banner whom nobody ever heard of or who has not been mixed up in party broils, all would be well and the district would be redeemed. They seem to overlook the hold Hammond has on the confidence and affections of the people. They started in to groom Dinehart, who is a sort of political Lord Fauntleroy,—impeccable and altogether presentable. Dinehart however is not without political sense and showed a disposition to shy. Besides he has other ambitions, and flatterers tell him he is of gubernatorial size. The most recent hope of the peacemakers and hatchet buriers is Judge P. E. Brown of Rock county, who has lately been taken up into a high place and shown the kingdoms over which he may have dominion. But Senator Putnam may have a thing or two to say about that. He wants to go to Washington pretty bad as everybody knows, and now there is talk that the be has begun to buzz in Senator Canfield's bonnet, though I don't take much stock in that. But what's the difference? It's plain the republicans won't revise the tariff when they have the chance, and equally plain now they won't have the chance in the next congress after the next elction. Hammond will be with the majority party and near the top. He will then be in a position to do something. The people there are determined to give him his opportunity.

The Situation Elsewhere.

The dissatisfaction with Payne-Aldrich-Cannon rule is not local. It's as rampant in St. Paul as it is in Red Lake Falls, and here Stevens will have a whole lot of persuading to do to convince the people that the Aldrich tariff is what he says it is, a revision downward. He is a strong man and a shrewd politican; but there are others. His powerful affiliations which are well known may serve him at ordinary times, but assuming an aggressive campaign with Stevens defending the republican tariff policy and Dan Lawler on the other side, it isn't much of a conundrum to ask where the votes would go; any more than it would be if in the Fifth district Lind were pitted against Nye with the weight of the Aldrich tariff on the latter's shoulders or in the Ninth Sageng against Steenerson. Republicans leaders are already disheartened at the outlook.

Grooming Gubernatorial Candidates.

The only place they think they see the sky clear is in regard to the governorship. With Johnson out of the way their hopes are renewed. But they are far from agreed upon a candidate. I have already spoken of Eberhart's activity. The other day Bob Dunn was down here again. He had on a previous occasion called upon the governor, and his friends intimated that some sort of understanding had been reached, a ridiculous enough conclusion, but one nevertheless industriously circulated for obvious reasons. Ripley Brower is keeping in touch with the situation. There are intimations, however, that in the case of all these gentlemen certain affiliations have been formed of which the public may not approve, and there is a coterie of politicans who have apparently concluded the thing to do is not to pick out a man who is not known to have pronounced views of any kind. They have been calling leading men into consultation recently. When Spooner of Morris was down the other day he was sounded, as he said, about the propriety of doing something to bring more prominently into public eye "the handsomest man at the capitol," by whom was meant not Sam Iverson, but Clarence Dinehart. This Dinehart movement appears to be well organized and will bear watching.

State Auditorship Plum.

Of the minor positions, that of auditor is the only one attracting serious attention. Candidates for this are most numerous in the First district. Fillmore county furnishes two, A. W. Thompson for a number of years Mr. Iverson's deputy, and O. N. Thundale, who represented his county several terms in the legislature. J. W. Andrews who is assistant postmaster at Owatonna would also be willing to serve the state in that capacity. Hugh R. Scott of Hennipin county is ambitious, and Odin Halden of Duluth a perennial candidate. Of these Thompson will possibly make the best showing; but he will have to go some to keep ahead of the man the latest to lay claim to the office. I refer to R. J. Wells of Breckenridge. He has an extended political experience, can rely on powerful backing and is an astute and capable politician. Much will depend of course on political geography. If a governor is selected from southern Minnesota, which is not impossible, Wells would at once become the most formidable figure in the field.

SCISSORETTES

Says the Idaho Springs (Col.) Mining Gazette: A little one-horse local weekly may say good things and boost every enterprise and puff every individual year in and year out, and the effect is negligible, its influence is not worth attention; but let it indulge in a little criticism, and it at once becomes a fearful agent of destruction. The newspaper that boosts cuts no ice; the one that hits back is the one that is effective. Dear brethern of the press, if you wish to make yourself felt, use a harpoon.

Col. Jim Brown of the Boulder (Mont.) Age-Sentinel is surely a dyed-in-the-wool- Democrat. In a recent issue, the colonel says editorially: "The Age-Sentinel is an uncompromising, unconquerable official organ of untrammeled Democracy. Even should the portals of hell swing to receive us, the Age-Sentinel would enter proudly, proclaiming the doctrines of Democracy amid the sulphurus orgie of eternal fire; for this is a Democratic paper" There's no doubt as to just where Col. Jim stands when it comes to politics.

News, news, news! It's enough to give a man the blues. Nobody married and nobody dead; nobody broken an arm or a head; nobody come in to talk of the "crap;" no one got boozy and started a scarp; no one got run in for taking a horn; nobody buried and nobody born. Oh! for a racket, a riot, a fuss! Someone to come in and kick up a muss; some one to stir up the peace-laden air; somebody's comment to give us a scare. Somebody thumped within an inch of his life; somebody run off with another man's wife; someone to come in and pay up his debts; anything, anything, just so it's news.—Colusa (O.) Herald.

A newspaper can never creditably represent a town whose business men do not advertise. He may howl himself hoarse bragging about the vim, energy and enterprise of his town, but if his declarations are not backed up by a liberal amount of advertising by the business men of the town, the world will be slow to take this statement as true. It takes more than the unsupported testimony of the local newspaper man to prove to the world that his town is the financial center, the business center, the best market, and the best place on earth to buy goods; his evidence needs corroboration.—Clarkville (Mo.) Times.

Weak Kidneys

Weak Kidneys, surely point to weak kidney Nerves. The Kidneys, like the Heart, and the Stomach, find their weakness, not in the organ itself, but in the nerves that control and guide and strengthen them. Dr. Shoop's Restorative is a medicine specifically prepared to reach these controlling nerves. To doctor the Kidneys alone, is futile. It is a waste of time, and of money as well.

If your back aches or is weak, if the urine scalds, or is dark and strong, if you have symptoms of Brights or other distressing or dangerous kidney disease, try Dr. Shoop's Restorative a month—Tablets or Liquid—and see what it can and will do for you. Druggist recommend and sell

S.S.S. HEALS OLD SORES

No old sore exists merely because the flesh is diseased at that particular spot; if this were true simple cleanliness and local applications would heal them. Whenever a sore or ulcer refuses to heal readily, the blood is at fault; this vital fluid is filled with impurities and poisons which are being constantly discharged into the place, feeding it with noxious matter and irritating and inflaming the nerves and tissues so the sore cannot heal. These impurities in the blood may be the remains of some constitutional trouble, the effect of a debilitating spell of sickness, leaving disease germs in the system, or the absorption by the blood of the fermented refuse matter which the bodily channels of waste have failed to remove. Again the cause may be hereditary, the diseased blood of ancestry being handed down to posterity; but whatever the cause, the fact that the sore will not heal shows the necessity for the very best constitutional treatment. There is nothing that causes more worry and anxiety than an old sore which resists treatment. Every symptom suggests pollution and disease—the discharge, the red, angry looking flesh, the pain and inflammation, and the discoloration of surrounding parts, all show that deep down in the blood there are morbid and dangerous forces at work, constantly creating poisons which may in the end lead to Cancer. Local applications are valuable only for their cleansing and antiseptic effects; they do not reach the blood, where the real cause is located, and can therefore have no real curative worth. S. S. S. heals old sores by going down to the fountain-head of the trouble and driving out the poison-producing germs and morbid matters which are keeping the ulcer open. It removes every particle of impurity from the circulation and makes this life-stream pure, fresh and health-sustaining. Then as new, rich blood is carried to the place the healing begins, all discharge ceases, the inflammation leaves, new tissue and healthy flesh are formed, and soon the sore or ulcer is well. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and finest of tonics, just what is needed in the treatment, and in addition to curing the sore will build up and strengthen every part of the system. Special book on Sores and Ulcers and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

I want to recommend S. S. S. to any who are in need of a blood purifier, and especially as a remedy for sores and obstinate ulcers. In 1877 I had my leg badly cut on the sharp edge of a barrel, and having on a blue woolen stocking the place was badly poisoned from the dye. A great sore formed and for years no one knows what I suffered with the place. I tried, it seemed to me, everything I had ever heard of, but I got no relief and I thought I would have to go through life with an angry, discharging sore on my leg. At last I began the use of S. S. S., and it was but a short time until I saw that the place was improving. I continued it until it removed all the poison from my blood and made a complete and permanent cure of the sore. JNO. ELLIS.

SUNKIST ORANGES For Health

Oranges for Health

Physicians state that an orange eaten before each meal will so regulate the system as to make the call of a doctor a rare occurrence.

Oranges promote the action of the gastric juices—aid digestion—act mildly on the liver and are wonderfully cooling in cases of fever. The choicest, ripest and most luscious oranges that reach the market are "Sunkist."

Ask Your Dealer for "Sunkist"

SUNKIST LEMONS Mostly Seedless

The delicious flavor of this perfect seedless fruit makes you keen for more of its kind. Ask your dealer for "Sunkist" Brand.

Hot lemonade made from large juicy California lemons (sweetened with honey preferred) will break up a cold. Served hot, it opens the pores of the skin. A severe cold may be broken up in one night if given this attention promptly.

ANDERSCH BROS., Department 66, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Any lady reader of this paper will receive, on request, a clever "No-Drip" coffee strainer coupon privilege, from Dr. Shoop, Racine, Wis. It is silver plated, very pretty and positively prevents all dripping of tea or coffee. The doctor sends it with his new free book on "Health Coffee" simply to introduce this clever substitute for real coffee. Dr. Shoop's Health Coffee is gaining its great popularity because of: first, its exquisite taste and flavor; second, its absolute healthfullness; third, its economy—1½ pound 25c; fourth, its convenience. No tedious 20 to 30 minutes boiling. "Made in a minute" says Dr. Shoop. Try it at your grocer's for a pleasant surprise. For sale by all grocers.

If sickness, if a certain hidden nerve goes wrong, then the organ that this nerve controls will also surely fail. It may be a stomach nerve, or it may have strength and support to the heart or kidneys. It was Dr. Shoop that first pointed to this truth. Dr. Shoop's restorative was not made to dose the stomach nor to temporarily stimulate the heart or kidneys. That old-fashioned method is all wrong. Dr. Shoop's Restorative goes directly to these failing inside nerves. The remarkable success of this prescription demonstrates the wisdom of treating the actual cause of these failing organs. And it is indeed easy to prove. A simple five or ten days test, will surely tell. Try it once, and see. Sold by all dealers.

The Flathead, in the most picturesque part of the Rockies, has 450,000 acres of the very finest of agricultural and grazing lands. A government reclamation project will also make a large part of it very attractive.

The Coeur d'Alene, just east of the city of Spokane, Washington, on Coeur d'Alene lake, has about 200,000 acres, including timber lands.

The Spokane, north of the city of Spokane, has about 50,000 acres. The Flathead lands are apprised at $1.25 to $7.00 an acre—the others not yet appraised.

Registration for these lands extends from July 15 to August 5, 1909. Drawing will take place August 9, 1909. Entries will not be made before April 1, 1910.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of one hundred eighteen & 85-100 dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John P. Gonigam and Lizzie V. Gonigam, his wife, Mortgagors, to Matilda Meckenstock, Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th day of January, 1905, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February, 1905, at 4 o'clock P. M., in Book 29 of Mortgages, on page 634.

And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage,

And Whereas, the said Matilda Meckenstock, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred, Seventy Four and 75-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of Six per cent per annum, from the 23rd day of June, 1909 including delinquent taxes paid by said mortgagee, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section nine (9), in Township One Hundred and Fifty (150), North Range Forty-four (44) west of the Fifth principal Meridian, and in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake county at the front door of the Post Office, in the City of Red Lake Falls in said County and State, on the 7th day of August, 1909, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $2374.75 and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 23, A. D. 1909.

BRAY

The total eclipse of the sun which was to occur last Thursday failed to put in its appearance. A partial eclipse was all we could see.

A large number of the farmers have been marketing flax and wheat in Wylie the last week.

Mrs. August Peterson of Crookston and Mrs. Albert Wickstrom of Sacramento, California, who have been visiting friends in this vicinity during the last week, returned to Crookston Monday.

Lloyd Crown came home Saturday from Thief River Falls for an over Sunday visit with his parents.

Peter and Henry Limblom and Chas. Englund drove to Thief River Falls Saturday.

TERREBONNE

Sunday afternoon, June 20th, Miss Lucile Cadieux celebrated her eighth birthday anniversary at her home in Terrebonne, where a jolly crowd of her young friends gathered to wish her ever so many more. Among those present were the Misses Viola and Martha Remick of Mentor and Elvia and Vivian Trombly of Red Lake Falls, and Ida, Odina, Della and Rose Perusse, Alexine, Rose and Alma Surprenant, Elizabeth and Ora and Belle, Kankel, Dulice Gauthier, May Ste. Marie, Viola Sauve, Lumena and Laura Gagnow and Edna Beaudin. Ice cream and refreshments were served and all reported a good time.

We dilly dally all the day
 In idleness and song,
And then we wonder why it is
 We do not get along,
And when the day is at a close
 We idle half the night,
And still we cannot comprehend
 Why things don't work out right.

We sit serenely in the sun
 And whittle on a stick
Or tune our little light guitar
 And simple music pick,
And when the day comes to an end
 In looking at the score
Discover we are only where
 We were the day before.

We make resolves as to our rest
 We tumble in at night
That on the day that's just ahead
 We'll work with all our might,
And when the morrow comes along
 We quite forget to try,
And it resembles to a T
 The one that's just gone by.

And so we run our life along
 In planning to succeed,
And if we drag a living out
 In luck we are indeed,
And at the end we lay us down
 While eons roll away
And rest as sweetly as the ones
 Who labored every day.

THE JUNIOR'S CODE.

By THOMAS G. ECKLES.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

There are cases of individual stupidity and there are combinations of stupidity. It has been my fate to suffer from one of these combinations. In my case it consisted of a man in love and a small boy who hadn't any sense.

Mr. Perkins, the junior member of the firm where I was confidential clerk, was the man in love. His fiancee lived in an interior town, and he was continually neglecting the business to go and see her or in devoting himself to her when she came to town. He was obliged to go abroad on business, and before going he called me into his private office and said:

"Frank, I'm going to take you into my confidence. I am engaged to be married, as you probably know, to the loveliest girl in the universe. She is Miss Octavia Allerton and lives at B. I shall wish to cable her occasionally and have made a code, of which she has the key. Now, I don't wish these telegrams to be inspected by the whole office force, so I shall address them to you. As soon as you receive one of them take it to the telegraph office and send it to Miss Allerton. Now, be very careful and say nothing to anybody, and if you follow orders and handle the dispatches as instructed I will see that you are well paid for your trouble."

I promised to attend to the matter, and when I left him he felt assured that he could send messages to his fiancee safely and with secrecy. While he was on the ocean I received a wireless message every few days, and they continued at intervals when he got on land. I took them all to the telegraph office and forwarded them.

There was an interval of five days during which none came, and then I received one just as I was leaving the office in the evening to go to keep an engagement of importance to myself in a suburban town. Having just time to catch the train, I called Joe, an office boy, gave him the message with the proper address and told him to take it to the telegraph office. "Be very careful," I said, "to see that it goes all right. If it doesn't, my head will come off."

There's such a thing as spurring people to overdo things. I put too much caution into Joe. If I had said nothing to him he would have handed the telegram in without looking at it and nothing would have happened. As it was, while going to the telegraph office he took it out of the envelope and read it:

Notary, alternative.

Not knowing that it was a cipher telegram, he at once assumed that there was something wrong in it, since "Notary, alternative," meant nothing as it stood. He ran back to find me, but I had gone. He set out again for the telegraph office, trying on the way to make sure of the message. He had heard of blunders of operators in recording messages and concluded this was one of them. He put a number of words in place of "notary" in order to make a proper reading and finally hit on the word "another." "Another alternative" meant something. Before reaching the telegraph office he had written "another" in place of "notary."

The next day a cablegram came from Mr. Perkins that he would return immediately. He reached America within a week, but went straight to his fiancee. The next day he appeared at the office. He glared at me as he passed me, and, going into his private room, he sent for me. I saw a check laying on his desk before him. It looked ominous. He handed it to me and said:

"Here is your salary, paid to the end of the month. We shall not need your services any longer."

Of course I asked the cause of my discharge.

"I sent you a cablegram from Paris," he said. "It read, 'Notary, alternative.'" He handed me a copy of the cipher code, the word "notary" underlined. It read:

I am very lonely without you.

Then he told me to turn to the word "alternative," and I saw that it meant "love." The whole message read:

I'm very lonely without you, love.

Meanwhile he was scratching something on a piece of paper. When I had read the interpretation of his message he said, "Would you like to know how that message read when it was received by Miss Allerton?" I replied that I would, and he handed me what he had written:

I have found another love.

I explained to him how the blunder occurred, but my excuses made no impression on him. Turning to his desk, he indicated that the interview was ended.

Going out, I met the head of the firm. "I'm sorry for you, Carter," he said. "I did all I could for you, but failed. I couldn't refuse to consent to your dismissal. Indeed, it is best that you shouldn't have to meet him every day. That telegram lost him his girl. She wished to get rid of him to marry another man. She took advantage of it to break her engagement by cable, and before he could get to her she had engaged herself to his rival. You see, he couldn't endure the sight of you daily after what has happened."

That's the reason I have said that I have suffered from a combination of stupidity. I think the man was more stupid than the boy. He should have thanked me for indirectly bringing about a break between him and a girl who was fooling him. She was intending to marry him because he was making money.

Falling Hair

Ayer's Hair Vigor promptly destroys the germs that cause falling hair. It nourishes the hair-bulbs, restores them to health. The hair stops falling out, grows more rapidly.

Dandruff

Ayer's Hair Vigor just as promptly destroys the germs that cause dandruff. It removes every trace of dandruff itself, and keeps the scalp clean and in a healthy condition.

Does not Color the Hair

We wish you to positively and distinctly understand that Ayer's Hair Vigor does not affect the color of the hair, even to the slightest degree. Persons with the whitest or the lightest and most delicate blond hair may use it freely without having the hair made a shade darker.

Forestry and Fire Wardens.

Chapter 22 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota, 1905, entitled "Forestry and fire wardens," requires the Forestry Commissioner to prepare an abstract of the penal laws relating to forest and prairie fires and he may require any county board to cause at least three weeks published notice thereof to be given. The following is accordingly hereby published:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.
Office of Forestry Commissioner.
St. Paul, April 15, 1909.

The law of Minnesota for preventing and suppressing forest and prairie fires, as amended by Chapter 182, Laws of 1909, makes town supervisors, town clerks, village presidents, and mayors of cities fire wardens, and requires them to take precautions against such fires, report them promptly, and prosecute offenders.

THE LAW FORBIDS

Setting fires and not extinguishing it before it endangers the property of another.

Throwing or dropping burning substance into combustible material without extinguishing same.

Starting camp-fire without clearing ground within a radius of ten feet.

Setting fire to brush or slashings or other combustible material in a dry season, or allowing fire to be burning or smouldering in such season.

Those who cut timber or wood to sell must pile the slashings and burn the same as soon as practicable, and when it can be done without danger, and before the first of May.

Rangers may be appointed in a dry and dangerous season.

Railroad companies must keep their right of ways clear of combustible material, extinguish fires that occur near their lines of roads, also patrol their roads in dangerous weather. The master mechanic and locomotive engineer, as well as the company, are responsible for the efficiency of spark arresters.

The minimum penalty for violation of any of the provisions of this law is $50; the maximum penalty, $100 and three months imprisonment in jail.

C. C. ANDREWS,
Forestry Commissioner.

POLO MOST EXPENSIVE OF ATHLETIC SPORTS

Scatters Dollars Faster Than Any Other Exercise in Which Man Takes Part for Pleasure.

Sounding hoof beets and the crack of the mallet against the ball tell that the season for the most expensive of all athletic sports—polo—has been inaugurated.

There are many other ways, of course, in which a man can get rid of him money faster than at polo: yachting, for example, but while yachting is a sport it is not an athletic exercise, and the purchase of a fine craft can better be likened to the possession of a handsome home than an outlay for athletic diversion.

Golf has a lot of money invested in it, in the way of superb grounds and handsome country clubs.

But as far as the individual goes it takes no money to play golf. Once the course is there a caddy can go over it, and have just as much fun as the millionaire owner, and for the same outlay, which is nothing more than his energy.

But the polo player must have means.

He can't play the game without ponies, and to be really up in the procession he needs not less than a dozen, and will be better equipped if he has a score. Without these ponies, he might as well give up all thought of playing the game, for in polo only part of a player's success rests his own skill. To a large extent he is at the mercy of his mounts, and he can only make good so far as they have the needed speed and cleverness.

To get this skill means careful training, and this tuition must be administered by one who knows.

Ponies Cost $10,000 a Year.

The ponies themselves, their trainers and handlers and the cost of stabling and of transportation, undoubtedly means for a man like Harry Payne Whitney that not less than ten thousand a year must be spent on the sport.

England's polo ponies undoubtedly represent a somewhat higher development than those of Uncle Sam, and it is on this fact that John Bull's players have on numerous occasions based their expectation of maintaining their supremacy over American rivals.

Generally speaking they have been able to do this, though since the game has increased in popularity the American ponies are getting more and more attention, and are so constantly improving that the difference is now comparatively slight.

It is largely due to the love for sport held by men like Harry Payne Whitney, A. Belmont, Foxhall P. Keene, P. F. Collier, J. E. Cowdin, R. L. Agassiz and the Waterburys that such constant effort has been made to produce finer mounts.

Impatient of losing because their ponies were not up to foreign rivals in dash and speed they have spent liberally of their wealth, and have offered liberal rewards for ponies that would answer the purpose. It is probably no exaggeration to say that Whitney has placed not less than one hundred thousand dollars on the altar of his love for the game in the years he has played it.

Increases in Popularity.

Only a score of years ago polo was essentially a club game, in which none had any interest but the four men on a side who played, and a handful of their fellow club members who had an interest in them personally.

But polo has steadily made its way in popularity. Most of the clubs on whose fields it is played have dealt with generous consideration to the public, and make ample provision to afford them space to revel in the dashing game, whose excitement is unceasing, and which produces, according to many sportsmen, more thrills in short order than any other known contest, because it represents the combined skill of man, and the noblest of his animal friends, the horse.

It is now nothing uncommon for ten thousand persons to see a game in this country, and instances are not rare of as many as twenty thousand being drawn to some important contest.

Many of the clubs make no charge whatever to see the matches, others admit the general public free, but make a charge for the reserved seats designed for club members.

Most of the ponies used in the United States come from Texas, Montana and Wyoming.

Dealers get a reputation for producing the kind of ponies that the player wants. They take them East and show the strings to prospective purchasers. The little fellows are taken out in the open, and put through their paces, and the expert can tell quickly whether any animal is what he wants. Some of them can be purchased for as low as $100, but $500 is not an uncommon price for a specially fine specimen.

Change Ponies Many Times.

According to the official rules promulgated for this year, polo will consist of ten six-minute periods for regular match games, with four on a side, and some of the possessors of a fine string will change as often as half a dozen times in the course of a game.

A pony may get hit, it may for some unaccountable reason be working badly, perhaps gets winded, any one of varied causes may put it out of the running. Then there is a quick change, and another little flyer must take up the burden.

A knowledge of when to change, and what horse to take is a vitally important feature of the game.

Three minutes is allowed between all periods for a change of horses, excepting at the half-time in the middle of the game, when the period is extended to seven minutes.

But it is not enough for a player to have those ponies which are giving him good service in the games in which he is taking part.

He must have others which are coming along, ponies that will in a year or two have reached their best, and become the kind of animal on which victory can be won.

Therefore from a dozen to twenty ponies will be found to be a very fair estimate of the number of mounts possessed by the more noted players.

Polo in the United States is now governed by the Polo association, which makes the schedules, arranges the rules and determines the number of points which players must be handicapped in order to assure better balanced contests where unequally listed with the Polo association, and skilled men are pitted against each other. There are now thirty-one clubs these include about 200 active players.

An Exciting Moment During a Game of Polo.

Here the two means of spending money on pleasure in big sums meet, yachting and polo.

International Games.

The field is located on the shores of the sound, and a large number of the players own their private yachts. On these they dress and then come ashore to take part in the matches. At the conclusion of the game a lunch on one or more of the craft is a frequent diversion.

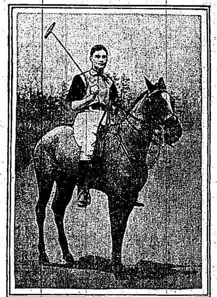
International polo is now some twenty years old. In 1886 a Hurlingham team, consisting of John Watson, Capt. Thomas Hone, Hon. T. R. Lawley and Capt. Malcolm Little, visited Newport.

A cup had been put up for a series, best in three games, by the Westchester club.

Foxhall Keene, who as played a part in so many contests since, was a member of the American team, which also included Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., W. K. Thorn and A. Belmont.

The Hurlingham club won in two games, and the cup has ever since been one of its most honored possessions.

Fourteen years later an American team consisting of Keene, F. and L. McCreery and G. F. J. Mackey, challenged for the cup, and in the single game that was played suffered defeat by a score of 8-2.



J. M. Waterbury, Jr., Noted Polo Player.

The best effort was made by the Americans in 1902, when Foxhall Keene, J. E. Cowdin, R. L. Agassiz and the two Waterburys figured in the matches. The Americans won the first, the Britons the second and third.

It is with the idea of finally getting the cup back that the various clubs of the country are working with such zeal and such complete disregard for cost.

WAR ON CAYUGA LAKE CARP.

Twenty-five Tons of Them Caught in the Work of Extermination.

State Fish and Game Protector William Ferree of Cayuga states that there are a lot of interesting things seen in the fish line every day the nets are drawn at Cayuga lake by the fishermen licensed to draw nets for the purpose of eliminating carp from the lake.

Up to date and under the poor weather conditions the fishermen have taken twenty-five tons of carp from the lower end of the lake, and in seventy-five hauls of the nets not a peck of perch has been caught, showing that the carp have been gradually eating up the fine eating species.

The netters have also caught some whitefish weighing up to three pounds each and fresh water herring weighing in the neighborhood of a pound. One day last week a beautiful specimen of rainbow trout weighing ten pounds was caught and had Mr. Ferree been present he would have taken it and had it mounted. The fish was kissed good-by by the fishermen and turned loose in the waters of the lake.

In one haul last week there were sixty walleyed pike, weighing from two to twelve pounds each, and they were liberated with reluctance. Several pickerel have also been caught in the hauls, but very few of the black and big mouth bass. So far the netters have caught about thirty pounds of bullheads.

FOREIGN POLICEMEN.

London patrolmen carry no clubs. Attached to the middle of the belt behind is a dark lantern. The cuffs of their coats have vertical stripes, blue and white, signifying rank and distinguished service. During the frequent showers and rains they wear little waterproof capes. Their silent regulation of street traffic by hand signals is a realization of perfection.

In Paris the ordinary patrolmen wear blue caps and coats, and in summer white duck trousers. They carry short swords rather as an emblem of authority, but in extreme danger use the flat sides as a club.

In a downpour of rain the Paris policeman hangs his cap on a hook in the back of his belt and draws over his head the hood of a short blue cape of heavy cloth.

This hooded cape is called a capochon, and in its longer form, reaching to the knees, is used by civilians as well in cold or rainy weather. Accordingly at such times the streets of Paris seem to be alive with cowled monks.

Recently the London plan for controlling vehicles has come into vogue successfully on the Paris boulevards. The policemen detailed for such duty wear white gloves and signal with white clubs.

German policemen wear helmets and have a distinctly martial air.

Circumstantial Evidence.

Lord Houghton's sister was often annoyed at her brother's indiscriminate hospitality. "Do you remember, my dear," he asked her at dinner one day, "whether that famous scoundrel, X——, was hanged or acquitted?"

"He must have been hanged, or you would have had him to dinner long ago," replied the lady.

One Cause of Insanity.

Ted—Does bleaching the hair cause insanity?

Red—Yes; I know lots of fellows who are crazy over bleached blondes.

Not So Angelic.

He had been to Sunday school and wanted his mother to tell him about angels—what were they?

"An angel, my dear, is a little girl with wings that flies away up in the skies."

"Yes, ma, but I heard pa tell the governess the other day that she was an angel. Will she fly?"

"Indeed, she will, my dear. She will fly away just as soon as she gets her trunk packed."

Utility of an Orchestra.

A young chap from the country went to see a pantomime for the first time. The start was greatly delayed and he grew impatient. At last the orchestra appeared and began to play. Soon afterward the curtain rose.

"Ah," said the country chap, slapping his knees, "I knew that noise would wake 'em up."

When there is work to be done the buzzsaw is always ready to take a hand.

Pat on Baptism.

Pat, who was noted for a quick tongue, was digging potatoes when the parish priest came by. By way of a pleasant salutation the priest said:

"Good morning' to ye, Pat, and what kind of p'rtatoes are ye diggin'?"

"Raw ones, your riv'rince."

"Och, ye're so smart. I'll just give ye a question on the catechism. What is baptism?"

"It used to be four shillin's afore ye came, but now it's twenty shillin's."

Possibly the Next Time.

In a speech before the Wellesley club recently Augustus Thomas told this story about Nat Goodwin:

"Say, Nat," said Willie Collier to Mr. Goodwin, as they were coming out of the Lambs' club shortly after the latter's marriage to Miss Goodrich, "invite me to one of your weddings some time, won't you?"

Deaf people should enjoy better health than others, as they do not catch everything going.

WORD OF CHICAGO FIXES PRICE OF WORLD'S BREAD

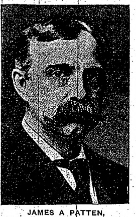
One man sitting in his office in Chicago has, during the last couple of months, been in the novel position of being able to shrink the size of the world's loaf of bread every time he succeeded in pushing the price of wheat a point higher.

The operations of "Jim" Patten by no means had their result confined to his own country, for the nations of Europe are to a great extent dependent on the United States for the wheat supply, and prices fixed in other wheat producing countries naturally ascend as those of the United States mount.

Therefore Patten, operating in Chicago, the virtual clearing house of opinions from all quarters of the world as to the production and consumption of the cereal occupied for the time an almost czar-like command over the world's chief staple of food.



JAMES A PATTEN,
Who Cornered the Wheat Market.

He is not the first man who has been in the same position. What "Old Hutch" did in the same line is well remembered though a couple of decades have passed since his sensational corner sent the price soaring mountain high. But Hutchinson, though he was nervy and resourceful, and though he had for a time limitless money, had the experience of many other bold operators who have finally found it a tragic experience to try to corner the bread supply. He lost all his money, and to make a living was at last compelled to open a little grocery, where among other things he sold in the form of bread the wheat which once he had handled in sums running into the millions of dollars.

Joe Leiter Came to Grief.

Joe Leiter, a decade ago, sent the price of wheat soaring by a skillfully executed corner, but he, too, had the experience of getting on the losing end of the game, and dropped a large sum of money before he got out.

Chicago is the ideal place for any cornering of the wheat market, because it is the center of the world's knowledge on the subject. All that is happening to the wheat supply in the Dakotas, in Argentina, in Russia, in India, is instantly made known to the Chicago wheat pit. Telegraph and cable instantly carry the news, and the quick thinking manipulator is put in possession of the facts that enable him to shape his course.

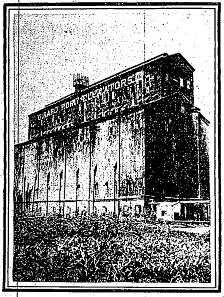
What is the weather condition in every wheat producing point in the world, the deliveries, the arrivals and departure of wheat carrying ships, every factor that can have any bearing on the price to-day, to-morrow or next year is at the command of the keen witted experts who deal in wheat, and they know what the probabilities are almost before the conditions producing them have shaped up.

Farm products have grown into the America's greatest source of wealth. Every year the farmer takes out of the soil four billion dollars worth of value, and the two great crops, corn and wheat, represent a third of this enormous sum.

The world follows with closest interest the determinations reached in Chicago, for Europe is largely dependent on the United States for its wheat. For example the United Kingdom runs up yearly a bill for wheat of $200,000,000, and of this sum nearly one-half comes to the United States.

Railroads Watch Crops.

The railroad chieftains follow these reports of crop prospects with almost as close an interest as the farmer, for good crops means good tonnage, not only of wheat to the towns, but of merchandise from the towns to the farms, the purchase by the farmer of what he has needed with what has accrued from the sale of his heavy crops. With a big yield of wheat the railroad company finds itself forced to put on more cars, locomotives and rails, and immediately the steel industry feels the impetus.



Huge Elevator for the Storage of Wheat.

The big wheat speculators of the country, men like Patten, succeed because they make a science of the subject.

While he was being bitterly condemned for the part he played in the corner Patten vigorously insisted that this was injustice. He has insisted right along that all he did was to study conditions, to foresee the shortage, and profit for himself and his friends by buying in time, before the prices soared.

The basis of the work that resulted in the Patten operations was performed last fall. Then May wheat was selling at about 90. Patten went the field over, he studied crop prospects all over the world. He concluded that there would be a shortage, and that an immense advance was assured.

Patten, like Armour and other big speculators, plans his campaign in a large measure on the work of expert crop forecasters. The United States government has established a very elaborate system of crop reporting, and has some 250,000 correspondents, about 10,000 of whom are paid for their work. They send weekly and monthly reports to Washington by telegraph or letter, and these returns are inspected by a board of statistical experts who consolidate them into public reports.

Speculators Employ Experts.

On Dec. 10 the report shows the acreage sown to winter wheat. Three months later is reported the amount of preceding season's crop still in the hands of the farmer. Condition reports are made in April, June and July. The May report also revises the acreage report, deducting for winter-killed and abandoned acreage. The spring wheat report begins in July and in September is given the harvest condition of both crops. In October the yield per acre is reported, and late in December a final report is made by the government of all the crops of the country for the year.

But the speculators do not content themselves with the government reports alone, no matter how complete and reliable they may be. These reports are available to all persons, and for the purpose of the speculator it is necessary to be in possession of some facts that escape other observers or at least do not become public property till later.

Therefore they employ private experts.

Every railroad has its own crop crop sharps. For instance the Great Northern must know weeks in advance just how much wheat it will have to haul from the Dakotas and the Twin Cities in order to make the crop pay. This information is gained by specialists.

Banks and grain brokerage houses have their own alert and skilled men, who do nothing else but investigate crops as a basis of operations.

Patten's right hand man, Snow, of Chicago, has recently gained national fame, so did H. J. Jones of Minneapolis, who began crop reporting while a newspaper reporter, and whose work in foretelling crop conditions made himself and his friends rich.

The whole organization of the world's financial business is largely affected by the kind of operations that are determined on as a result of this advance information on the crops.

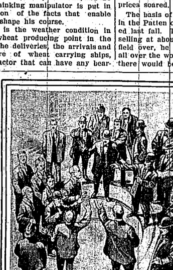
All Waiting for News.

The huge iron and wood grain elevators where wheat is not only stored by but cleaned and doctored as may be required, the modern troughs through which the wheat can be made to flow like water, the old fashioned grain elevators of Dantzic that look as different from the American elevator as a rowboat from a battleship, all are waiting anxiously for the news.

In the fields of Russia, from which comes yearly a supply of wheat exceeded only by the United States, the news of what is to happen in Chicago is far more exciting than any question of nihilist activity; India, with nearly thirty million acres under wheat, can't find out the price swiftly enough.

Down in Argentina, where the shortage this year permitted the boosting of the prices, men talk in a language different from our familiar English what decisions have been reached in the great metropolis in the midst of the Northern republic. Far off in the Antipodes, in Australia, the word borne on the ticking cable is anxiously waited for.

Chicago sets the price, and the world waits on its word to fix the size and the price of its loaf of bread.



The Wheat Pit in Chicago.

THE ADMIRAL AND THE BEY

Diplomatic Story in Which a Lion and a Pair of Pistols Figure.

A show of force is often the best kind of diplomacy. A writer in a Paris newspaper tells a story of the French Admiral Dupetit-Thouars, who had been intrusted with the mission of exacting reparation from an African bey who had insulted a French consul. As Dupetit-Thouars's demands were supported by the forceful argument of loaded cannon the bey acknowledged he had been too hasty and proffered profuse apologies. He even invited the admiral to his table and had a sumptuous repast prepared for his guest. The consul warned the admiral to be on his guard.

"The bey is inclined to be malicious," said he, "and when he strokes his beard and smiles you may be sure that he is concocting some mischief."

"We shall see," was Dupetit-Thouars's reply.

He reached the bey's palace in good time. Profuse compliments and salutations were exchanged. All at once the admiral's foot met some soft, hairy substance lying on the carpet under the table. He bent down and saw a huge lion showing his formidable teeth. The bey smiled and stroked his beard.

Dupetit-Thouars did not wince, but called his dragoman.

"My pistols," was all he said.

The servant saluted, retired and brought back a pair of pistols on a silver tray. The admiral took them and placed them on the table before him, but the bey, still smiling, continued to stroke his patriarchal beard.

"Tell the comander," he said to the dragoman, "that if those pistols are for the purpose of blowing out my lion's brains they are quite insufficient and perfectly useless."

Then, like a skilled fencer countering his opponent's thrust after the bey's ironical advice had been translated, Dupetit-Thouars replied:

"Tell his highness that my pistols are not there to kill his lion, but to blow his own brains out at the first movement of this objectionable carpet."

Gravely but a little pale the man interpreted. The smile died away on the bey's lips and he no longer stroked his beard.

"My lion," said he. "Is too well trained even to scratch one of my guests, but since he is not wanted he shall be sent away."

At a word from the bey the lion slowly and heavily left the room, like an obedient dog.

YOUR BACKACHE WILL YIELD

To Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Rockland, Maine.—"I was troubled for a long time with pains in my back and side, and was miserable in every way. I doctored until I was discouraged, and thought I should never get well. I read a testimonial about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and thought I would try it. After taking three bottles I was cured, and never felt so well in all my life. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all my friends."—Mrs. WILL YOUNG, 6 Columbia Avenue, Rockland, Me.

Backache is a symptom of female weakness or derangement. If you have backache, don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Nothing we know of will do this so safely and surely as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Cure the cause of these distressing aches and pains and you will become well and strong.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has restored health to thousands of women.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge.

AGONIZING ITCHING.

Eczema for a Year—Got No Relief Even at Skin Hospital—In Despair

Until Cuticura Cured Him.

"I was troubled with a severe itching and dry, scrufy skin on my ankles, feet, arms and scalp. Scratching made it worse. Thousands of small red pimples formed and these caused intense itching. I was advised to go to the hospital for diseases of the skin. I did so, the chief surgeon saying: "I never saw such a bad case of eczema." But I got little or no relief. Then I tried many so-called remedies, but I became so bad that I almost gave up in despair. After suffering agonies for twelve months, I was relieved of the almost unbearable itching after two or three applications of Cuticura Ointment. I continued its use, combined with Cuticura Soap and Pills, and I was completely cured. Henry Searle, Little Rock, Ark., Oct. 8 and 10, 1907."

The Exceptional Equipment

of the California Fig Syrup Co. and the scientific attainments of its chemists have rendered possible the production of Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna, in all of its excellence, by obtaining the pure medicinal principles of plants known to act most beneficially and combining them most skillfully, in the right proportions, with its wholesome and refreshing Syrup of California Figs.

As there is only one genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna and as the genuine is manufactured by an original method known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only, it is always necessary to buy the genuine to get its beneficial effects.

A knowledge of the above facts enables one to decline imitations or to return them if, upon viewing the package, the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. is not found printed on the front thereof.

TRIFLES OF THE WARDROBE

MEANT FOR TRAVEL

BAG IN WHICH TO CARRY PORTABLE TOILET REQUISITIES.

Large Variety of Materials Employed for the Purpose—Suggestions for Pocket to Be Hooked to Belt of Petticoat.

Silk plaids, pongees, striped taffetas and a host of figured cotton or linen fabrics are employed for the roll-ups and bags to hold the toilet requisities which every girl likes to carry, whether she leaves home for a day or a decade. An eight compartment roll-up of 18x8-inch dimensions has a brushable miniature work bag and needle case attached to the inner side of its flap. The opposite end of the roll has an oblong envelope designed for stationery, while the remaining portion is fitted with receptacles for the necessary brushes, combs and nail tools.

Rubberized silks and linens are employed for the deep, wide bags with oilskin lined compartments for toilet requisities, but if it is easier to pack the various articles separately small bags may be used for the sponge, powder puff and soap and oblong cases for the brushes, combs and manicure set.

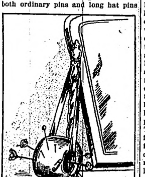
A collapsible satchel-shaped receptacle, which combines the advantages of basket and bag and may be packed into small space, has its cardboard sides and ends covered with plain patterned silk, sateen or linen and a capacious interior bag of some figured material. While novel, however, it is not quite so easily made as is a toilet bag having a hoop handle made from an eight or ten inch embroidery ring wound with plain ribbon over which are shirred the sides of the silk or linen body. The ends of the fabric are left perfectly free until after the bag is finished and then looped once or twice to the handle, or the ends are sewed together and allowed to hang straight. The same model minus the interior fittings, suited for fancy work or toilet articles, is excellent for a laundry bag of washable material.

If it is inconvenient to carry a hand-satchel, the more requisite toilet articles may be carried in a pocket to be hooked to the left of the petticoat by a hanger long enough to afford easy access when the skirt of the gown is raised. A pouch-shaped pocket of generous proportions may be made of any stout fabric, edged with firm ribbon or kid piping and equipped with a deep flap fastening at both sides and center.

MADE IN SHAPE OF A MUFF.

Quaint Design for Pin Cushion Acceptable as Present or for Sale at Bazars.

Pin cushions in quaint design are always popular at bazars, and new ideas for the making of them are ever welcome. We give a sketch of a pretty little pin cushion which can be hung by a ribbon from the post of a looking glass and designed to take both ordinary pins and long hat pins also. It is carried out in the shape of a miniature muff, and can be made out of any odd remnants of silk or brocade, and the seam arranged so that it rests against the looking glass and is not visible. In the center, inside the opening, a small cushion is sewn for the reception of the long hat pins. The muff in our sketch is shown in quite a plain form, but might be made very decorative and pretty with a floral design and initials worked on the front, and a rosette of ribbon at the top of the loop.



SOME POINTERS ABOUT COATS.

Many Varieties from Which One May Choose and Always Be in Style.

The girl who is choosing a serviceable coat suit for every day wear from now until October should regard these points:

It is as fashionable to cut off a coat half way between the knees and hips as between knees and ankles.

Coats are single-breasted, rarely double-breasted.

New models show straight panel backs which hang for several inches lower than the sides. These panels are also pointed as well as straight.

Sleeves are still small and reach to the wrist, and many of them show flat, fitted cuffs.

Three-button cutaway coats are made in all materials.

Sleeveless coats are being made up in summer materials, and they will prove quite comfortable in hot weather. The sides should be joined at the hips, if not above.

EASILY MADE SEWING BASKET

Milkpan for the Foundation and Figured Creotonne for the Outside All That Is Needed.

Take a milkpan about 14 inches in diameter, punch two holes half an inch apart every three inches around the edge of the bottom. Cut a piece of cardboard to fit the bottom of the pan. Put this in and cover over with some sheet cotton sprinkled with sachet. Take some pretty figured cretonne, enough to cover the inside and out, except the outside bottom, allowing enough to run over the edge of bottom and sew through holes. Stretch it over the sides inside and out. Lay in smooth folds and catch from edge to edge with thread. Then to cover the outside bottom, cut another circular cardboard and cover it with cretonne. Catch this all around the edge to the cloth on the pan, thus making a strong bottom.

Also punch holes in the sides of the pan for pockets, before the pan is covered. The pockets should be four inches long and one inch deep. Punch holes four inches apart, two at each place, one above another, one inch apart to carry the thread through in sewing pockets on. Make pockets of cardboard in form of a box, letting the pan be one side and by pasting the cretonne on the pockets makes it easy to cover them. Put two of the pockets on and then take a piece of the goods eight inches long and as deep as the pan. Gather this to about six inches long to make a bag pocket. Let pan make one side of this pocket, too. Catch the bottom of it to the bottom inside edge of the pan, and at ends, too. Make a pin cushion five inches long and as deep as pan. Stuff it with sawdust. The holes for the pockets should be punched before the pan is covered, and the pockets put on after it is covered.

To add to its beauty use baby ribbon to match cretonne, making bows and sewing on pockets.

This makes a very serviceable basket, which all housewives need.

ONE OF THE SUMMER'S FADS.

Nun's Tucks Are to Be Restored to Favor, According to an Edict from Paris.

According to Paris and from what one can judge from Paris-made dresses' nun's tucks are fast coming into fashion again as a trimming for the bottom of skirts. They are pretty and extremely inexpensive, for they do away with the need of embroidery, braiding or lace. It is said on excellent authority that simple little dresses of white and pale colored batistes and washable tulles trimmed almost exclusively with tucking will be one of the fads of the summer. They look attractive, certainly. Some of them have the waist and upper part of the skirt tucked in groups of four or five narrow tucks and with two or three deep ones above the hem. Most of them were made quite short, with the high waistline skirt, Dutch neck and long sleeves and were worn with pretty sashes of ribbon or messaline. They are very inexpensive little frocks, but most satisfactory as sort of fitters-in between other even simpler or more pretentious dresses for warm nights and informal occasions.—Delineator.

Up-to-Date Coiffures.

Most attractive are some of the coiffures reproduced from old portraits, and especially fetching are these when adopted by young girls who have a wealth of natural tresses. Many of the charming styles shown on old canvases are deftly copied by fashionable hairdressers, such heads presenting a loosely waved effect with clusters of soft puffs and ringlets.

Sometimes the back seems a mass of combed-out curls, bulging far from the head and caught underneath with a little bandeau of ribbon or flowers. Directly in front of the ornament the hair is very flat. In many of these styles there is a middle parting which is generally becoming to young faces. For girls who have reached the dignity of graduation and the first long dress these classic effects are much in evidence.

The Toilet Table

Fine work which is taxing on the eyes should never be done by artificial light.

Vaseline rubbed in the eyebrows will make them grow heavier and darker. For just this reason it should never be rubbed anywhere else on the face.

One cannot have a pretty hand if the fingers are broad at the tips. Pressing down on the ends of the fingers from the first joint to the tip will, if done many times a day, remedy this defect.

BOTH FOND OF LITTLE ONES.

Liking for Children Is a Trait That Admiral and Mrs. Dewey Have in Common.

One of the most pleasant traits of character which distinguish both Admiral Dewey and his wife is their love of children. A pretty book could be written on the admiral's boy friends. A remarkable thing is, however enthusiastic the small boys are over the hero of Manila, as soon as they get to know Mrs. Dewey well they transfer their allegiance. The admiral good-naturedly does not resent this rivalry. One of his closest chums in recent years was his next-door neighbor, Charlie Taft, younger son of the president. Charlie was so impressed with living so near Admiral Dewey that he confided to him his wish to enter the navy. He had little regard for the land defense, though his father was its executive head. He would drop in casually almost every day, and when the admiral went for a drive he would invariably be out in front to give him an adoring glance. On some red-letter days, he went behind the flying Virginia horses and drank in the joys of living. But he soon began to seek Mrs. Dewey and to confide in her also. When the Taft household was disbanded last June and the household goods scattered it was to Mrs. Dewey he confided all his treasured collections of pictures and flags and tags and medals. His soul revolted at the thought of their going to a mere storage house. When Charlie came back from school on the memorable occasion when his father was inaugurated president one of his first visits was to Mrs. Dewey.

TOOK ALL FUN IN GOOD PART.

Pleasantries of the Gridiron Club Appreciated by Both Roosevelt and Morgan.

When Mark Hanna came to Washington as the new Napoleon of Republican politics there was some doubt as to how he, as a sucessful and somewhat arrogant man of business, would accept the rubbing which the (Gridiron) club would be disposed to give him, says a Washington letter in the Boston Transcript. He instantly fell in with the organization and until the day of his death practically never missed a Gridiron dinner. Its famous quartet, by his own request, sang at his funeral. J. P. Morgan is another man for whom a special dinner was planned on the occasion of his first visit. The leading act of the evening represented a New York broker's office in which the sign over the door read "Booster & Busters." In the dialogue Mr. Morgan himself was invariably referred to as the old man. Some discussion turned to a surmise as to who should be the next president, and after several New Yorkers had inquired "president of what?" expressing their doubt as to whether there was any such officer to be selected, one of them asked who was president now, to which the cockney who affected to hold Mr. Morgan's interests in his keeping, replied: "I don't know what his name is, but I know it is somebody who is not wholly satisfactory to the old man"—an allusion which pleased Mr. Roosevelt, who was present, quite as much as Mr. Morgan himself.

Mrs. Taft an Ardent Lover of Music.

One day the women visitors to the White House had a treat in a "peep" into the executive dining room. They had opportunity to observe presidential methods of arranging the luncheon table; instead of the old-fashioned cloth there were many little doilies at the round table—the ladies will know just how important this fashion has become in domestic economy. The Steinway piano that adorns the east room was discovered to be much more than a mere ornament when Mrs. Taft was heard playing upon it. The new mistress of the White House is a fine pianist and an ardent lover of music, and mistress of the science of home-making, whether it chanced to be in Cincinnati or in the Philippines, or en route, or in the White House, where she visited President Hayes and family as a girl.—Joe Mitchell Chapple, in National Magazine.

Two Shaves.

"Smith and Brown," said Judge Harvey O. Tyson of Fredericksburg, "were running for office in Richmond. Smith wanted his barber's support, but the barber was a waverer. To steady the man, Smith visited his shop the day before election, got shaved and handed out in payment a crisp $20 bill.

"At the polls the next morning Smith was overwhelmed to see the barber vote openly for Brown, his rival. He could hardly believe his eyes. He roared:

"'What do you mean there, Stropper? Didn't you shave me yesterday?'

"'Oh, yes,' said the barber; 'but I shaved Mr. Brown this morning.'"

Ambergris and Amber.

There is some popular confusion of ambergris with amber; in fact, however, there is no relation between them. But for a long time the nature of ambergris was hidden in mystery. In ancient days it was commonly believed that it flowed up from the bottom of the sea. Sinbad the Sailor tells of a spring of ambergris that he found; but it was in a crude state. The fish swallowed it, and then disgorged it in congealed form, and in this condition it floated on the surface of the sea. This story harmonizes perfectly with the old Arabian belief.

Two Washington Beauties.

Mary and Eva de Lagerrantz are the daughters of the Swedish minister. They are among the prettiest girls of the diplomatic circle at Washington. While they thoroughly enjoy Washington society, they are more interested in athletics. Both are expert horsewomen and swimmers and both pull a strong oar. They have a beautiful estate in Sweden, where they can enjoy outdoor life to the fullest. They are intelligent as well as pretty and are great favorites in social Washington.

"MATUSHKA VOLGA."

There is an air so popular in Russia that it is even more familiar than their national anthem to the people of that great mysterious empire, says Travel Magazine. I have heard it in all parts of the czar's dominions, from the Baltic sea to Bering strait and from Archangel to the Caspian; in the glittering palaces of St. Petersburg and in foul prison dens of Siberia.

It is a simple melody in the minor key, suggestive, like most Slav music, of sorrow and unrest, and it is called "Matushka," or "Mother Volga," as for some cryptic reason every Russian, be he noble or nihilist, is taught from childhood to regard this great river in the light of a maternal relative. Yet the river is full of sad associations, for convicts formerly traveled a portion of the journey to Siberia along its broad, sluggish stream.

I can never forget the haunting sweetness of "Matushka Volga" as I heard it sung on a prison barge one quiet summer evening by a party of fettered politicals banished to the great lone land of exile. For "Mother Volga" was their last link with home and the loved ones they might never meet again.

Fortunately the condemned are now sent into Asia by the Trans-Siberian railway and the unhappy exile is spared at least one bitter parting—that from his well beloved "Mother Volga."

PRESSED HARD

Coffee's Weight on Old Age.

When prominent men realize the injurious effects of coffee and the change in health that Postum can bring, they are glad to lend their testimony for the benefit of others.

"My mother, since her early childhood, was on inveterate coffee drinker, had been troubled with her heart for a number of years and complained of that 'weak all over' feeling and sick stomach.

"Some time ago I was making an official visit to a distant part of the country and took dinner with one of the merchants of the place. I noticed a somewhat peculiar flavour of the coffee, and asked him concerning it. He replied that it was Postum.

"I was so pleased with it, that after the meal was over, I bought a package to carry home with me, and had wife prepare some for the next meal. The whole family were so well pleased with it, that we discontinued coffee and used Postum entirely.

"I had really been at times very anxious concerning my mother's condition, but we noticed that after using Postum for a short time, she felt so much better than she did prior to its use, and had little trouble with her heart and no sick stomach; that the headaches were not so frequent, and her general condition much improved. This continued, until she was as well and hearty as the rest of us.

"I know Postum has benefited myself and the other members of the family, but not in so marked a degree as in the case of my mother, as she was a victim of long standing." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

V. H. Higinbotham returned Tuesday from a business trip to southern Minnesota and northern Iowa where he had been looking up prospective land purchasers and establishing local agencies

There was a good attendance at the base ball benefit at the Bijou theatre Monday night. Manager Barr generously allowed the base ball boys the profits of the evening's show and a substantial sum was added to the base ball fund.

Supt. H. F. Anderson returned yesterday from Minneapolis where he had been in attendance at the annual meeting of the county superintendents of the state. On his return trip he visited with friends in Bemidji, Sebeka and Crookston.

A very enjoyable meeting of the Royal Neighbors was held last Friday evening. Several new members were initiated. After the initiation the Royal Neighbors attended the Bijou theatre. After the show they returned to the Woodmen hall, where lunch was served and a pleasant evening was spent.

Mrs. A. Mikkelson and son Cecil left Tuesday for Hancock, Minn., where they will visit with relatives. Later they will go to Blue Earth where they will spend the summer with Mrs. Mikkelson's mother. In the fall they will move to Minneapolis and it is probable that Cecil will enter the engineering department of the University. It is his purpose to take a course in electrical engineering.

The Grand Forks Pickets defeated Thief River Falls in a game at East Grand Forks by a score of 5 to 4. Thief River was in the lead during most of the game, the score being 4 to 2 in favor of the Thieves at the opening of the ninth inning.

Nick Dress spent Sunday at his home in this city. Mr. Dress has been employed at Macbeth, North Dakota, for several weeks digging a city well. He struck a fine flow of water but before finishing the job had a break down necessitating a lay off of a few days.

Banker H. N. Johnson arrived home Wednesday, after a two weeks absence at Minneapolis and other points. While at the cities he consulted leading specialists regarding his eyes, and feels that he will be greatly improved as a result of their treatment.—Lankin (N. D.) Reporter.

Jos. Toupin closed a five months term of school in the Hilltop district, six miles west of this city last Friday. While teaching, Mr. Toupin walked the distance from his home in this city to the school and return each day. That is some walking. In the five months he has walked more than one thousand miles.

Frank O'Meara and Mr. Lawerence of St. Paul, representing people who have extensive interests in the county, were here this week. They drove out into the country northwest of town and also into the Terrebonne country. They expressed themselves as being very much pleased with what they saw and said they had never seen a better farming country.

The Red Lake Falls Concert band gave a fine open air concert Tuesday evening. The music was enjoyed very much by many people on the streets. The work of the band showed a marked improvement over the showing made in the concert given a month previous and occasioned many complimentary remarks. Conductor Brunelle is doing good work with the band.

There was an alleged ball game on the local ground Sunday afernoon. The Red Lake Falls team got just as many scores as they did in the game against Wahpeton and their opponents, the Ruetells of Grand Forks, got just two more than Wahpeton did. How old is Ann? It is said that those long drives to the catcher caused many enthusiastic exclamations from the rooters.

Editor Sam Haislet left for his home at Lankin, North Dakota, Sunday evening. He went to Thief River Falls by the bubble route and at that city boarded the Soo train for home. He was accompanied to Thief River Falls by "Butch" Brunelle and Jos. Toupin. Editor Sam while here loaded and shipped the fine newspaper press that has been stored in the old Gazette building. With that and other material added to his printing outfit he will have one of the best printshops in North Dakota.

Grierson, Miss Snyder and Miss Fair, Mr. B. Fair and son, John.—Eveleth News.

The Helping Hand.

Scatter seeds of kindness.
You can never say
Where the man will be next week
Who is down today.
Though his coat is ragged
And his hair awry,
He may have a wealthy aunt
Just about to die.

Cannot judge a fellow
By his style of dress
Or on his appearance
Base a certain guess.
If when he is pleasant
You are rude and cross
Maybe he can later
Queer you with the boss.

Doesn't cost you money,
Effort isn't great,
And a little kindness
Scattered while you wait
May affect your prospects
And your fortunes boost
When the little chickens
Hurry home to roost.

And suppose it didn't
Pay in cents and dimes
And your fortunes double
Many, many times,
For the small investment
Of a pleasant smile
It will bring your friendships
Clearly worth the while.

Could Do Better.

Harold had received his first five dollar bill. He was told that it was to be deposited in the bank, and the details were explained to him. Harold accompanied his mother to the bank, and, when ready, the book was handed to him. He looked at it a moment and then, throwing the book across the room, exclaimed:

"Such a small book for $5! Why, I can get a bigger one than that for 5 cents!"

Stubborn.

"Five times five," she said, "six times six, seven times seven." Between times she shook the rabbit violently.

"Dorothy," said her mother, "what are you doing to your rabbit?"

"Well, papa says," replied the child, "that rabbits multiply rapidly, and Sunny won't do it."

Fortunate.

"It is a good thing too."

"What?"

"That one half of the world doesn't know how the other half lives."

"Just why, please?"

"Because in that case so much time would be consumed in gossip over the matter that industry would be badly interfered with."

CUPID AT SORRENTO.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"I will tell you," said the archaeologist, "why the ancients represented love by a little boy. There is no living being so delicately organized. You may say a girl is more so; but, granting that you are right, the female is not supposed to be the aggressor in love. It is the male who makes the advance and is rightly represented by the boy who shoots the arrow.

"The young spring together like two opposite electric currents, though even in this case Cupid sends the shaft shooting at random. It is only when he fires at older people that it is essential that he carefully adjust and fire it with a delicate aim. I have a case in my mind.

"A few years ago I was planning for a trip to Europe. A man going abroad is not likely to trouble himself as to the hostelries at which he will stop, but a woman before sailing writes to all her friends who have traveled her proposed route, inquiring for the most desirable boarding places and making a long list of them from their replies. My wife wrote her cronies, among others Mrs. Catherine De Witt, widow of an admiral in the United States navy, and asked me to write my old chum, General Poindexter, a retired army officer, who had a horror of ever being led into what he called a 'matrimonial guardhouse.' Both recommended very highly the Hotel C. at Sorrento, Italy.

"Now, we archaeologists are accustomed to look for relationships among the remotest buried antiquities. For instance, when we find a fish painted on an Italian urn of the first century we know that it belonged to a Christian. No sooner did I read the recommendations of the Hotel C. at Sorrento, written by both the general and the widow, than I formed an inference.

"'It is situated,' said the widow, 'in an orange grove, hundreds of the mellow fruit on every tree. A few steps from the house is a marble terrace on the edge of a cliff overlooking the bay of Naples. Below is the water, a light blue or pale green; to the north the hazy isle of Capri, to the west the cone of Vesuvius, emitting faint smoke, which mingles with the fleecy clouds hanging over its summit.'

"'I was impressed,' said the general, 'with the strength of the position from a military point of view. From the summit of the cliff shells could be dropped on the decks of a besieging war fleet, the only part left unprotected. As I stood on the terrace overlooking the bay I felt that if I were there commanding the town's defense I could sink the allied fleets of the world.'

"To one used to hunting for records written in a bit of broken pottery, a mosaic picture or a heathen god it was an easy matter to trace in the valor excited in the man and the overflow of ideality in the woman the fact that they had sat on that balustrade together—not only in the sunlight, but under the influence of the queen of the night—and that as she caused the tides to ebb and flow so had she drawn their hearts to pulsate in unison.

"Since neither the general nor the widow was a fixture, my wife invited the former to go with us on a Mediterranean trip to Naples, and I wrote the former, who was in Paris, to meet us at the Hotel C. at Sorrento. The widow was only too glad to attach herself to our party, and the general agreed to be in Sorrento at a specified date.

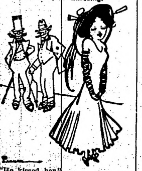
"We reached Sorrento on one of those afternoons when the heavens and the Mediterranean look down and up at each other like the blue eyed angels. The widow took us out on the terrace to show us the view. She was as enthusiastic as she had been in her written description, but her eye was sad. In the evening the moon shone, and the general, arriving as the orb was chasing the twilight, must needs take me to his imaginary fortification. I was not surprised to see on his face a look of disappointment. 'The position,' he said, 'doesn't look as strong as it did. There is something wanting in a defensive point of view, and I can't tell what it is.'

"At that moment there were sounds of women's voices on the walk from the hotel, and, turning, we saw my wife and the widow coming toward us.

"I will not dwell on the meeting of the two, who had met there before. In a few moments I heard the widow, pointing rapturously to the sea, Capri, Vesuvius, while the general, having suddenly discovered that what he had considered an element of military weakness was really a tower of strength, declared that a million tribesmen, manned by the sons of Hercules, could not have taken the position from its ancient possessors.

"Later we excused ourselves and left the two together. While I had discovered that Cupid had pierced them during a previous meeting, it was my wife who had planned to bring them together. But how were they to discover that which was so plain to both of us? The little god simply inoculates. He is not the physician who diagnoses the disease, informs the patient that he or she is stricken with love and suggests the cure. But what is too delicate a task for him cannot be safely intrusted to far less tender hands. All we could do was to keep the two together long enough for them to discover what was the matter with them. This we did, and a fortnight after our arrival the general came to me and told me that he and the widow desired to travel together, and as they could not properly do so unmarried they had decided to wed."

He Is Still Guessing.



"He kissed her."

"And she didn't protest?"

"Of course not."

"She must be new at the game."

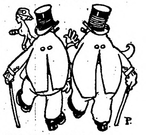
How It Happened.

"Take it from me"—

"No, I won't take a single thing from you!"

Here a lively scrap ensued.

Why She Was Mad.



"She doesn't speak to me."

"Why?"

"Because when she asked me what I thought of her complexion I told her it was very fair, but I could tell her a better brand."

For They Can.

"You can't always tell."

"Then there is one thing certain."

"What is it?"

"That you aren't a woman."

Substantial.

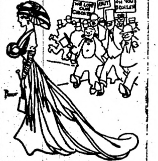
The joy of ready money,
The cinch of cash in hand,
Is something that the dullest
Can always understand.
There may be other pleasures
And other forms of bliss,
But there is none, I venture,
So sure enough as this.

In looking at the posies,
In going for a walk,
In taking in a lecture
To hear a fellow talk
And all such simple doings
Some pleasures may attend,
But there is no enjoyment
Like having cash to spend.

In love and its allurements
The one of youthful mind
Some feelings highfalutin
May very often find,
But when he pays the preacher
And starts to buy the hash
Things run on more serenely
If he can scatter cash.

Then here's to ready money,
The useful friend of man!
It gets him into places
No other booster can.
It gets him into places
And gets him out again
If he has ever handy
The twenty or the ten.

Needs to Be Careful.



"That girl has a lot of money."

"Then she would better look out."

"Why?"

"She is likely to have a job lot of husbands if she doesn't."

RED LAKE FALLS AT CROOKSTON

Fire Department Athletes will Participate in Tournament Races and Contests.

Tournament at Crookston Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday July 5, 6 and 7.

The running teams of the Red Lake Falls fire department and many Red Lake Falls people will go to to Crookston next week for the annual meeting of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament association. The tournament will be held next Monday, Tuesday anc Wednesday, July 5, 6 and 7 and the people of Crookston are planning the biggest celebration in the history of the city.

Red Lake Falls will be represented in the contests by good teams. About the same runners are training as represented the department last season and the fine showing made then gives promise that there is going to be some fast work at Crookston. The teams that beat the local boys will have to do some record breaking stunts.

Boleau, Toupin, Erickson, H. Garceau, T. Garceau and will probably run in the flag race. Last year the feat was performed in the remarkably fast time of 66 2-5 seconds.

The following will probably participate in the hub and hub race and other tournament races: Buse, Boleau, Brunelle, H. Garceau, T. Garceau, Cyr, Erickson, Helm, Ducharme, Patnode Toupin, Krueger, Normandeau, Richards, Keifenheim, Harren, Healy. E. O. Buse is coaching the teams and Pete Boleau is captain. Boleau will do the ladder climbing and Buse the hose coupling.

The Red Lake Falls boys now hold the association banner, having won the association race last year and if they win that contest again this year the banner will become their permanent property.

BELTRAMI INQUIRY ON

M. E. Ryan of Brainerd says the Minneapolis Journal, has been appointed by Governor John A. Johnson as commissioner to take evidence in the proceedings for removal of four Beltrami county officials. He will begin hearing testimony at Bemidji July 7. J. J. Cameron of Bemidji will be the official stenographer. M. F. Kain, deputy public examiner, author of the offical report on which, the charges were based, will be present as the principal witness. Lyndon A. Smith, assistant attorney general, will attend the hearings as legal advisor. The praceedings are against the county auditor, John Wilmann, and three county commissioners, Wes Wright, F. O. Sibley and A. W. Danaher. They will all be represented by attorneys.

It is understood that the case made by the Kain report as to Commissioner Sibley and Danaher is weak, as it rests upon the allowance of illegal claims by the county board. There is no record of the votes on these claims, and unless more evidence is brought out there will be difficulty in securing their removal. Many illegal acts are charged against the auditor, but the main accusation is incompetence. Wright is charged with being interested in a contract which he helped to let.

The Beltrami county bonds are still waiting acceptance by the Security Trust company of St. Paul. The state investment board has decided that it cannot invest the state school fund in Beltrami county at this time for the reason that other counties, cities and school districts have applications already pending, amounting to about $500,000, and waiting till the funds are available to be loaned.

Indians Will Get $20,000.

A dispatch from Washington to the dailies says that Commissioner Valentine of the Indian bureau has forwarded to the Indian agent at Red Lake reservation in Minnesota $20,000 of the funds derived from the sale of dead and down timber on the reservation for immediate distribution among members of the tribe.

Recently the Indians became excited over this fund and asked for its distribution before July 1st., some making threats of trouble unless the distribution who made by the time named.

Representative Steenerson took the matter up with the Indian office with the result that the Indians are to receive the sum named above.

COMM'RS PROCEEDINGS

Commissioners' Proceedings of Red Lake County, Minn.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.,
June 19th, 1909.

Pursuant to adjournment the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, Minnesota, met in special session at the office of the County Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Members present: Lindquist, Aubol, Demann and Pigeon.

Joseph Johnson elected on the 18th day of June, 1909, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Daniel Shaw as County Commissoner for the 4th Commissioner District, County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, having filed his oath of office took his respective seat with the board.

The matter of the petition of Tobias Skjerping and others for the construction of County Ditch No. 35 duly came before the Board of County Commissioners. The said Petition was read and the arguments of all persons interested for or against the construction of same were heard.

On motion duly carried the Board took a recess until 1:00 o'clock P. M.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 1:00 o'clock P. M.

All members present.

On motion duly carried the report of the viewers was referred back to them for correction as to the assessments against certain tracts of land.

Two of the three viewers were present at the hearing, namely G. K. Haavi and Joseph Belair, K. O. Gigstad being absent, and they proceeded to make the necessary corrections in their report as agreed upon, after which on motion made by Commissioner Demann and seconded by Commissioner Johnson the Petition and the Report of the Viewers and the Engineer thereon were accepted and the following order establishing County Ditch No. 35 in Red Lake County was made.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake, ss.

In The Matter Of the Petition of Tobias Skjerping and others, for the public ditch in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, designated and numbered as County Ditch No. 35.

The above entitled matter came on duly to be heard by and before the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at a Special meeting of said Board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter on the 19th day of June, A. D. 1909, at ten o'clock A. M. of said day, and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of said time and place of hearing thereon, and that C. H. Martz the Civil Engineer, appointed by the Board to survey the route of said ditch has completed his work and duly filed his report thereon in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that the Viewers appointed by said Board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made and filed their report in due form of law in the office of said County Auditor, the County Board did at the time above specified, proceed to hear said petition and said viewers' report thereon: and said Board having duly considered said Petition and heard all the parties interested for or against the construction of said ditch and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows, to-wit:—

First: that the said Civil Engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second: That the Viewers appointed herein have duly completed their labors thereon and have made and filed their report according to law.

Third: That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than its actual cost, including damages awarded.

Fourth: That the damages and benefits arising from the consruction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and pormote the public health and that said reports of said engineer and Viewers are complete and correct.

Fifth: That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said Viewers' report and said Engineers report has been duly given, published and posted and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

Now, therefore, As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at said special Session of said Board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience, do hereby locate and establish the said ditch according to the report and the specifications of said Civil Engineer made and filed herein; and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the Viewers made and filed herein.

It Is Further Ordered, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the Viewers' report herein in excess of benefits, be paid out of the County Treasurer of said County on warrants to be drawn and attested by the Auditor of said County and signed by the Chairman of this Board, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

Given under our hands this 19th day of June, A. D. 1909.

SOME GOSSIP FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Our New Special Correspondent Notes the Development of St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 28.

A new electric railway line opened this week between St. Paul and Minneapolis, though longer than either of the other three aleady in operation is likely to prove the most popular with out-of-town visitors, at least in the summer time. It is the scenic route, affording many beautiful views of the scenery along the Mississippi Valley and reaching several of the most popular Twin City show places, Fort Snelling and the government reservation, the Soldiers' home, Minnehaha Falls, the junction of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers, and so on. The route through St. Paul is over the Seventh Street tracks, and the line across the Mississippi River over the new bridge for which the state made an appropriation two years ago. I suppose according to Twin City authorities this bridge is not a work of internal improvement, neither was the appropriation for it, as it is of special benefit to Twin City residents, such as to entitle it to be numbered among the contents of the "pork barrel." Our hogs are generally found in the trough, and the noticeable thing about them is that they are not cut up small.

Country Pork and City Hogs.

There are no injunctions for appropriations of this kind, nor when it is sought to buy more Twin City lots for capitol approaches to erect new places on the greater campus, or to construct $200'000 grandstands at the state expense within the city limits. Apparently these also must not be numbered among internal improvements. Indeed among the many things, for which the state' money is lavishly spent, nothing has yet been found which is an internal improvement, except the country roads and bridges. When it comes to appropriating money for these a remarkable scrupulesity is shown in some quarters as to the purposes to which public money shall be put, which finds an insistent voice in the metropolitan press and seems to be shared by the judges of the district courts, one of whom has declared it is plain for argument that the constitution provision the spending of public money for internal improvements, and that country roads and bridges are improvements of that character.

Emptying the Pork Barrel.

Of the soundness of the later part of this decision there can be no room for question. Roads and bridges are works of internal improvement. Thelquetsion is Are appropriations for such work prohibited by the constitution of the states' That appears to me to be by no means certain. The prohibition relied upon to defeat the appropriations made by he legislature is found in Section 5 of article 9 of the State consitution. This article relates to the finances of the state and the section in question begins: "For the purpose of defraying extraordinary expenses, the state may contract pubic debt, but such debt shall never in the aggregate exceed $250,000." After showing how such debt may be contracted and how discharged, the same section goes on to provide that "the state shall never contract any debts for internal improvements, or be a party to carrying on such works," except in certain cases which are set out below. The point I make here is that this section does not prohibit the making of appropriations of money in the state treasury for internal improvements. That it seems to be would be ridicuious. Internal improvements are constantly being made at public expense, as for state parks, the drainage of state lands, the construction of state institutions and so on. The prohibition is merely against contracting any public debt for these works and against the state being a party to carrying on improvements for which a public debt had been contracted. In the case of the so-called "Pork barrel" bill there was no suggestion of the contraction of a public debt. The money would be on hand to pay for the work when it was done.

The Road and Bridge Fund.

It is true that another clause in the constitution provides for the creation of a state road and bridge fund "for the purpose of aiding in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges,' and directs how this money shall be spent, namely under the direction of the highway com mission, the state paying no more than one-third of the cost of the constuction of any road or bridge. But it is nowhere said that the legislature may not in its discetion make other appropriations, unless we regard the "pork barrel" bill as creating a road and bridge fund', which it does not do in express terms. Here it seems to me, if anywhere, is the constitutional prohibition, and not in that so much talked of regarding "Internal improvements," for the section referred to says of the "State Road and Bridge Fund," that it shall include "all funds accruing to any state road and bridge Fund" that however provided.' If the money voted by the legislature in the road and bridge bill is construed as constituting a road and bridge fund, the temporary injunction grafted by the Ramsey County district court may hold. That certainly does not appear to have been the legislative intention.

The Meeting of the Rump.

Members of the state senate met in St. Paul last week to discuss the status of this road and bridge appropriation bill, and it seems plain from what was heard, a protest is going up all over the state against the at-

KILLED BY LIGHTNING

Red Lake Falls Young Man Loses Life During Monday's Storm.

One of the saddest deaths that ever occurred in Red Lake Falls happened on Monday afternoon when George Gamache, the eldest son of Joseph Gamache, was instantly killed by lightning during the severe electrical storm of that day. He was out in the yard trying to catch his horse to put it in the barn, when the storm broke and was instantly killed, the bolt striking him on the chest. His clothes were burned, the soles on his shoes were torn from the uppers, and one of the peculiar freaks of lightning was displayed when his watch was found running after being melted in three different places and the crystal broken.

George was 28 years old at the time of his death, was born and raised in Red Lake Falls and as fine a young man as a person could meet. He was insured in the M. B. A. lodge. The sympathy of the entire community is etnded to the bereaved family. This is the third boy they have lost within the past six months.

Funeral services were held from St. Joseph's church Wednesday morning and interment at the cemetery west of town.

Celebration in Mayfield.

The patriotic citizens of Mayfield township have arranged for a proper observation of the day on Sunday, July 4th. The hospitable home of Carl Magnell will be the scene of the festivilies and during the day lunch, ice cream, candy, peanuts, cigars, etc., will be sold by the ladies and the proceeds will go to the aid of the Norwegian Lutheran church. Those people plan to have a good time and also to do some good work for their church. The speakers for their occassion will be Rev. Mostoe and Oolstoe. We understand there will also be a nica program of music and singing.

A general invitation is extended to all to attend and help in the celebration. All who attend will be made welcome and are sure to enjoy the occasion.—Pioneer.

Cattle Taken Up.

Last Sunday, four head of yearlings, three heifers and one steer came to my place in this city, on the north side. Come and get your cattle.—M. Boyce.

TEACHERS' SUMMER TRAINING SCHOOL

Will be Organized Next Monday and Will be in Session Four Weeks.

Will be Held in High School Building in Red Lake Falls.

The Teachers' Training school for Red Lake county will be organized Monday, July 5, and will continue for four weeks, everyone intending to attend the school should enroll the first day if possible. Certificates of attendance will be issued to all whose at tendance is perfect. All inexperienced teachers are required to attend some summer school. A list of all active teachers, that is, those attending the summer school will be sent to all school officers, and trustees will be advised to select teachers from the list Supt. Anderson is desirous that all teachers attend the school and the teachers of the county should co-operate with him in this effort to raise the standard of the schools of the county.

The department of public instruction has given a good faculty for work in the Red Lake county school. E. T. T. Carroll, Superentendent of Schools, Wadena, will be conductor. He will be assisted by Frank Burrell of Duluth, Eleanore Donaldson of Dnndas, Nellie D. Erickson of Fergus Falls.

The school will be held in the High School building at Red Lake Falls. The Board of Education has allowed the use of their text books, but the teachers should bring texts for reference.

Instruction will be given in all common branches and in the first grade subjects, for which there is a demand.

Drawing will be taught and special stress laid on reading and pedagogy. A model school will be organized so that practical teaching may be observed in connection with reading or other subjects.

The school will be so arranged that second grade teachers will have a good opportunity to work for first grade standings.

The State examinations will be held immediately at the close of the school, August 3, 4, and 5.

Teachers from other counties will be welcome, and will be given the same opportunies and privileges as teachers of Red Lake county.

Happily Married.

One of the pretty June weddings of the season was the marriage on Wednesday morning, at St. Mary's church of Miss Agnes McKierney, and Joseph Labonty. Miss Mamie Laurent was bridesmaid and Joseph Patnode groomsman. The bride is one of Red Lake county's popular young ladies. Her home is at Wylie and she is a well-known teacher. Mr. Labonty is a storekeeper at Gentilly.

Mr. and Mrs. Labonty left on the evening train for a ten days wedding trip to Duluth and upon their return will reside at Gentilly.

George W. Hull, fifty-eight years of age, once campaign manager of the the late Calvin S. Brice of Ohio, died suddenly of apoplexy in the lobby of the St. Charles Hotel at Toledo.

Two army officers were, by direction of President Taft, detailed as professors of military science and tactics. Capt. Edmund L. Butts, Third infantry, will relieve Capt. Edward Sigerfoos at the University of Minnesota, and Lieut. S. V. McClure, retired, is detailed to Harvard school Los Angeles.

Midshipman William C. Koenig of Texas, who resigned from the naval academy with a view to securing a commission in the army and at the same time avoid the prohibition against the marriage of midshipmen, has passed the necessary military examination and will be appointed a second lieutenant in the coast artillery.

CASUALTIES.

Fire in New York did damage to the big piano factory of Hardman, Peck & Co. estimated at $400,000. Two wings of the plant were destroyed.

A lion escaped frim his cage at a Chicago amusement park and caused injury to three persons before he was recaptured.

Bernard Reeves, eight years old and his brother Charles, six, were drowned when a rowboat was carried over a mill dam in Battle creek, at Battle Creek, Mich.

The most serious fires in many years are raging in a six-mile strip along the line of the Algoma Central railroad in Ontario. Two camps have been destroyed and several others are threatened.

After accidentally shooting himself in the hand with a toy blank pistol in an ante-Fourth of July celebration two weeks ago, Sidney N. Neeland, twelve years old, died at Joplin, Mo., from tetanus.

Burr Moore and his brother-in-law, Ora Raypoltz, were instantly killed, and Mrs. Burr Moore seriously injured when the rig they were driving was struck by a Big Four train a mile north of Marion, Ind. Mrs. Moore is now in the hospital with a broken leg, crushed arm and internal injuries. The party drove in front of a train during a rain storm.

Four men were killed and several injured in the collision between a log train consisting of an engine and twenty cars and a work train of six cars and engine, fourteen miles south of Park [illegible], Mich., on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road.

Traffic Manager W. C. Hollar of the Peninsular Stove company, at Detroit, was killed, and four other men were injured, one of the fatally, when a section of the fifth floor of the storage warehouse of the plant suddenly collapsed and crashed through the lower floors to the ground level.

Mrs. Mary Nelson, thirty years of age, and Mrs. Mary E. Campbell, fifty-four years old, were drowned in Cahokia creek, five miles north of East St. Louis, Ill., when their boat struck a snag. Their companions, a woman and two children, were saved.

Guy Detson and Harry Briggs were suffocated to death in the A. E. Seaman coal mine at Douds, a small mining town near Ottumwa, Iowa. Detson had descended and Briggs saw him swoon. The latter hurriedly descended to rescue his partner and was himself overcome.

FROM OTHER SHORES.

The duma has suspended work for the summer, having been prorogued by imperial order until Oct. 23.

The French institute has divided the Osiris prize of $20,000 between M. Bleriot, the aeronaut, and Gabriel Voisin, the aeroplane manufacturer, for their contributions to the progress of aviation.

W. W. Rockhill, the reitring American minister to China, was received in farewell audience at Peking by the regent, Prince Chung, who expressed very cordial sentiment stoward Mr. Rockhill and the United States.

The authorities at Bordeaux have begun a prosecution against Cardinal, Andrieu on the charge of inciting a breach of the laws by the allocution, which he pronounced at the cathedral on the occasion of his enthronement.

A report received at Teheran from Tabriz says that an altercation between the Turkish consul at Salmas and the gendarmerie led to a conflict with the Turkish troops, in which the Persians lost twelve killed and the Turks seven killed and a large number wounded.

A dispatch to the St. Petersburg Novoe Vremya from Astara says that the Shakhsevan tribesmen are ravaging the Ardabit district in Azerbiajan, the most northwesterly province of Persia. According to the dispatch 6,000 persons have been killed and the leading inhabitants have appealed to the Russian consul for protection.

CRIMES.

Michael Stumpf, sixty years old, was shot and killed at his home at Charlestown, Ind., and a woman who was with him, Jennie Wolfe, was arrested.

Mrs. Sarah Dibble, a widow, eighty-one years old, was brutally murdered while alone in her home near Trumbull, Conn. Death was caused by strangulation.

A negro was lynched at Arcadia, Fla., for an attempted assault on Mrs. P. R. Read, wife of a prominent citizen. The negro was quickly captured by a posse and hanged.

Harry K. Thaw may have another chance to prove his sanity in his fight for release from the Matteawan asylum for the criminal insane. Justice Gaynor granted a new writ of habeas corpus.

M. Morley, a policeman, shot and killed his wife in the presence of their three children at Claremore, Okla., and a few minutes later was himself shot and killed while resisting arrest.

Because his mother provided in her will that he would be disinherited if he refused to return to the Amish style of dress, which calls for hooks and eyes instead of buttons on clothing, Levi Yoder killed himself at Massillon, Ohio.

William Dollar of Iowa stole three chickens last April from a hencoop in Berwin, and was sentenced to five minutes in the county jail. Judge McSurely imposed the short term sentence because Dollar has been in jail since April 21 awaiting trial.

With a gash in the top of her head and her throat cut from ear to ear, the body of Victoria Griffin, a married woman, was found in the well on her premises at Columbia, S. C. Three sons of the murdered woman, Luke Lewis and Wash Medlin are under arrest.

Judge Keller of the federal court at Charlestown, W. Va., imposed a fine of $3,943.55 and a jail sentence of one year upon M. E. Calligan, charged with misappropriating government funds while serving as postmaster at Thurmond, W. Va. The fine represents the amount of the embezzlement.

OTHERWISE.

Dr. B. L. Wiggins, vice chancellor of the University of the South, died at Sewanee, Tenn., of heart trouble.

Capt. George W. O'Dell, aged eighty-one years, died at Peoria, Ill., after a week's illness, and his wife, his companion since 1861, expired within ten minutes after his death of heart failure produced by the shock.

The hatters' strike, which has been in progress in Danbury, Conn., New Milford and Bethel for the past five months, was brought to a close when the seven factories which did not open last week entered into an agreement with the local unions.

The Rt. Rev. John P. Farrelly was formally installed as bishop of the Cleveland Catholic diocese at Cleveland, the fourth since the diocese was established. Bishop Farrelly was chosen to the office to succeed the late Rt. Rev. Ignatius Horstmann, who died at Canton, Ohio, May 13, 1908.

Quartermaster Aleshire awarded contracts for 940,000 yards of khaki duck for use in the manufacture of tents for the army for the next fiscal year equally among three New York firms. The contracts amount to about $212,000.

Two $50 goldpieces, struck from the United States mint at Philadelphia in 1877, were sold in New York at the Numismatic club to William H. Woodin, a wealthy collector of that city, for $10,000 each, the highest prive ever paid for an American coin. Both were perfect specimens.

In a decision just handed down the supreme court of Mississippi declared that no beverage can be sold in the state that contains any percentage whatever of alcohol. This decision will stop the sale of "near beer" in Mississippi.

John W. Guy, a farmer living near Delmar, Del., is the father of thirty children—twenty sons and ten daughters—of whom there are twenty-one living. The eldest child, a son, is fifty-three years old, and the youngest, a daughter, is two years old. Guy has been married three times.

TO PROTECT WORKING GIRLS.

Women Factory Inspectors Will Work in Their Interest.

The factory girl, the girl who works—who is compelled by necessity or actuated by choice to become a wage earner—is to receive the protecting care of the state.

Humanity wins its occasional victories, and such a victory was won for the young women of Minnesota in the last legislature, when the department of factory inspection for women was established in connection with the department of labor.

An appropriation of $5,000 was made and State Labor Commissioner W. E. McEwen has already appointed four inspectors who will cover the state. These women will work under the general direction of the state labor commissioner and in a general way under the direction of Mrs. Perry Starkweather.

As state inspector, Mr. McEwen has appointed Mrs. L. A. Rosing, wife of the late member of the state board of control. For Duluth, he has appointed Miss Jean Poirier; for Minneapolis, Miss Louise Klapp; for St. Paul, Miss Nan Russell Dunnigan, a well known Minneapolis newspaper woman, whose stories have appeared under the caption of "The Tribune Girl," and a resident of the Capital City, has been named.

Their duties will be largely humanitarian ones. In their respective territories they will inspect factory conditions as they exist in relation to the woman employe. They will report infringements of the law by employers, urge better conditions for girls and seek to lessen the hardships of a working life for girls.

FULL SURVEY OF STATE.

Agreement With Federal Authorities Is Ratified by State.

The contract for a topographical survey of Minnesota, between the state and the department of geological survey at Washington, has been approved by the state drainage board. Details were arranged by George A. Ralph, engineer of the board, on his recent trip to Washington.

The government is already co-operating with the state on a water power survey, but the one just arranged for will cover the entire area, not already charted, and will perfect maps showing all elevations and water levels. The work will be largely by skilled government engineers, the government sharing the cost equally with the state, under direction of the state commission.

Mr. Ralph has not given up hope for federal action for improvement of the Minnesota river channel. The board of engineers has declined to recommend the work, but did not declare against it.

Postmasters Reach Out.

The Minnesota State Postmasters' Association, at the annual convention in St. Paul, adopted a resolution reorganizing the body to include not only Minnesota, but also North and South Dakota. The last two states had no organization. Hereafter the organization will be called the Tri-State Postmasters' Association.

Epworth Leaguers Close Session.

The Crookston District Epworth league held its annual convention in Alexandria. Officers were elected as follows: President, Rev. J. S. Kingan, of Breckenridge; first vice-president, Miss Ella Beckman, of Moorhead; second vice-president, Miss Viola Porter, of Detroit; third vice-president, Miss May Rideout, Crookston; fourth vice-president, Miss Grace Chadbourne, Detroit; secretary, Miss Lilly K. Denison, Moorhead; treasurer, Miss Letitia Carnegie, Alexandria; superintendent junior league, Miss Meta McKee, Fergus Falls. The convention next year will be held in Breckenridge.

Wage Earners Affected.

Of the 2,001 persons who died in Minnesota from tuberculosis in 1908, 855 were wage earners, according to returns tabulated by Dr. Christopher Easton, of the state board of health. These returns are being used to show the vast economic loss from this disease. The reports show that 402 of the 855 wage earners were heads of families.

Music Teachers Meet.

The Minnesota State Music Teachers' Association held a three days' session in Mankato. Willard Patten, of Minneapolis, was elected president; Miss Mabel Fulton, of Duluth, vice-president; John A. Jaeger, of St. Paul, secretary and treasurer; Miss Alice Holen, of Stillwater, auditor; and Miss Ella Louise Fink, of Mankato, chairman of the public school music committee.

St. John's School Year Ends.

The scholastic year at St. John's University, at Collegeville, came to a close with annual commencement exercises at which were awarded class prizes, medals and the conferring of degrees upon seven classical graduates, thirty-four commercial students and ten philosophy students.

Rt. Rev. Peter Engel, president of the university, made the presentation of the various degrees, while Rev. George Arctander, '88, of the St. Andrew's church, St. Paul, delivered a masterly commencement oration.

Bill to Protect Hunters.

If hunters after bear or deer do not wear a red coat and a red cap they will subject themselves to a fine of $25 or twenty-five days in jail if a bill which Representative James C. Cole of Adams county introduced tonight becomes a law.

A red sweater, the bill says, will do, but it does not specify permission for a red hat instead of a cap. The object is to prevent hunters from being shot as supposed game.

HOUSE FOR UNCLE SAM AT FAIR.

Managers Propose $50,000 Building for Educational Exhibits.

The erection of a permanent federal building to cost $50,000 on the Minnesota state fair grounds and equipping it with the best of the government's exhibits at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition, is proposed by the fair management and the United States department of agriculture. If the plan is found practicable and the fair managers think it will, the building will be ready for the 1910 fair.

Negotiations have been pending for some time and as a preliminary arrangement the government will have an exhibit of some kind this year, probably a denatured alcohol distillery for farm use.

For several years the Minnesota fair has been recognized as a leading agricultural exhibition and has attracted residents of many northwestern states. There are many exhibits from North and South Dakota, Iowa and Wisconsin, and the managers say in reality the fair has become a northwestern exhibition. It was on this ground that the management asked the government to lend its aid to increase the educational value of the institution.

Paul H. Gotzian Is Dead.

After an illness of a little more than three weeks, Paul H. Gotzian, one of the most prominent young business men of St. Paul, died, following an operation performed for appendicitis when he was first taken ill. He had lived in St. Paul all his life, belonged to a family which established itself there in the early days, and since attaining manhood, had been identified with many of the city's activities. Mr. Gotzian was forty-three years old, and was in the zenith of a profitable career. He is survived by a son, Conrad, fifteen years old, Mrs. Emmaline N. B. Gotzian, his wife, having died less than a year ago.

Mr. Gotzian was the only son of the late C. Gotzian, the founder of the shoe manufacturing establishment of that name. He was connected with this business until in 1895, when he resigned as secretary and credit man and retired from the firm. Since then he has looked after his private interests, and been quite extensively engaged in the real estate business.

Peddler Sues City.

Frank J. Revier, of St. Peter, who was lately arrested and fined at Le Sueur, under the 1909 peddler law, made formal demand on the city for payment of damages to him for the action of the city in prosecuting him. His claim is that the law is unconstitutional, having been so held by Judge Snow, of Winona, and, furthermore, that he is immune from its provisions, being, he alleges, in the employ of a firm having a permanent place of business in an adjoining county. The city will contest any suit that Mr. Revier may bring, basing its defense, among other things, upon the facts that the record of the court shows that the case was a state case, brought under the state law, and that Mr. Revier plead guilty and paid his fine.

Can Hold Both Offices.

Judge Olson of the district court at New Ulm, handed down a decision in which he takes the position that a person holding the office of city attorney is not disqualified from doing so by becoming a member of the legislature.

The decision comes as an answer to a motion to have a certain district court judgment set aside on the ground that at the time it was made, City Attorney Pfaender was holding his office in violation of the state constitution, in that he was also holding the office of representative.

It was on this ground, too, that Mayor Bobleter, in April, made strenuous efforts to have some other man confirmed as city attorney.

Camp Meeting Begins.

The ninth annual camp meeting of the Minnesota Pentecostal Association, of the Methodist Episcopal church will be at Red Rock Park, June 24 to July 6. The park is seven miles below St. Paul and is controlled by an association whose avowed object is to lead believers in the sanctified life.

Speakers from many states will be present.

New Ulm Keeps School.

The final vote on the Dr. Martin Luther college removal proposition was taken in the Lutheran synod at New Ulm, and resulted in an overwhelming victory for New Ulm, the vote standing as follows: New Ulm, 92; Hutchinson, 9; St. James, 3; Minneapolis, St. Paul and Stillwater, each 1.

Hoist Is Found Guilty.

Frank Hoist, who shot and killed Lieut. Frank McNamara, of the Minneapolis fire department, was found guilty of murder in the second degree by a jury in the Hennepin county district court.

The case will be appealed. McNamara was shot while attempting to stop Hoist from escaping from two detectives. In the trial Hoist claimed that he had no recollection of the shooting and that he was under the influence of liquor.

Plain-Spoken Women.

It would be of advantage to us if we could dispense with all that verbiage, that frothy flood of polite utterances which are only too often used and substitute a little plain speaking in their place.

The Road to Fortune.

The easiest way to coin money in these hard times is to participate in the manufacture—either as writer, producer, composer, or publisher—of a popular musical comedy.

IN THE SCANDINAVIAN NORTH

Gleanings of Important News of Norway, Sweden and Denmark, with Occasional Comments.

By MARTIN W. ODLAND.

NORWAY.

Ragnvald Moe of the University of Christiania has been appointed secretary of the Nobel committee, his service to begin Jan. 1, 1910.

* * *

The first automobile exposition ever held in Christiania or Norway opened May 20 this year, and was pronounced a complete success. The king graced the affair with his presence the opening day and many other notables put in an appearance. The foremost manufacturers of automobiles in the world had machines on exhibition and a goodly number of leading concerns were represented. The number of automobiles in use throughout the country is increasing at a lively rate, and, as I have before stated, automobile routes for the transportation of passengers are becoming more and more general, having proved entirely practical.

* * *

The following from Christiania will be read with interest by all Scandinavian-Americans:

"The Climate's Influence on Emigrants From Northern Europe, and Especially Norwegians, in America," is the title of a treatise by Dr. S. Carlsen of Spring Grove, Minn., in the last issue of "Tidsskrift for den Norske Laegeforening."

After quoting an Irish physician's statements concerning the fact that the Irish, and likewise other races from Northern Europe in general, cannot well endure the climate in America on account of the abundance of sunshine in that country, Dr. Carlsen takes up the situation among the Norwegians as a race.

The Norwegian invasion in America, says the doctor, is going steadily westward and northward, to Northern North Dakota, into Washington, and over the line into Canada. He says that a newspaper recently stated that the Norwegians even as far south as Southern Minnesota are degenerating, and as a proof of this he pointed out that in the insane asylums are a large number of Norsemen.

Whatever the cause may be, whether the sunshine, light or other conditions, Dr. Carlsen says that the climate does not have the best influence on Norsemen in America. In defense of this statement he states that the second and third generation are not as strong as the old pioneers who came directly from Norway. The decendents are not as healthy as their pioneer parents, to which their weak physique and poor teeth will testify, says the doctor.

A dispatch from the Norwegian capital says that preparations have now been completed for the tour of the Danish singers through Norway. The singers will leave Denmark May 27 at noon on the steamer C. F. Tietgen and will arrive in Christiania the following morning. As they will leave directly no festivities of welcome will be made at this time. Their first concert will be given in Hamar. Here they will be entertained at a supper, and after the evening concert, at a ball to be given in their honor. They will leave the following day for Trondhjem, where they will arrive that evening and be entertained by that city. The following day they will appear in concert, and will be entertained by Consul Bratt. Monday they will give a second concert in Trondhjem's cathedral. Monday evening they will leave on the steamer Sigurd Jarl, for Molde, where they arrive June 1. A concert will be given in Aalesund that evening. They will arrive at Bergen Wednesday, June 2, where they will spend two days and give two concerts. Friday they will leave that city and will arrive at Copenhagen at 1 o'clock during the night. They will be met at the station and welcomed to the city.

The following morning they will view Christiania and will be entertained at Holmenkollen by the Norwegian Student singers. In the evening several festivities are being planned. After the matinee on Sunday they will be given a trip out along the fjord, and Monday morning they will be the guests of the Danish minister.

King Haakon will attend their concert.

DENMARK.

Complete returns as to the election of members of the folketing show that the report I gave last week, as to the result, is essentially correct—namely, that the people gave no definite or positive answer as to the principal issue, the national defense. Of the 114 members elected, only 43 are committed to Premier Neergaard's plan of defense, but 23 others have declared in favor of the proposition in general, but may not approve any plan satisfactory to the government. The extreme Radicals and Socialists, who are absolutely opposed to all forms of defense, make up a total of 39, and there are 11 "Free Lances," who are not pledged to any party.

One significant feature of the election was the large gain made by the party of the right, the ultra-conservative, which will have 20 members in the new folketing, as against 11 in the old. It is apparent from this outline that Premier Neergaard and his government forces will have a difficult task to put through the next rigsdag any plan suitable to them. They suffered, in reality, a defeat.

GHOSTS IN CAPITOL

POPULAR BELIEF THAT HUGE BUILDING IS HAUNTED.

The big capitol building on the hill has its ghosts, identified and otherwise, with which to conjure up tales of other days, says a Washington correspondent. Some of the tales told by the old employes of the building in reference to these ghosts are picturesque—others are laughable—others carry with them that tinge of tragedy that makes them the more interesting.

Naturally there are quite a number of thoroughly identified ghosts registered in different parts of the edifice. The existence of the restless pilgrims from another land is vouched for by several of the employes of the building, and while most of them are supposed to confine their operations to the basement, there are several who are reputed to roam all over the place. Of these there are tales both pathetic and amusing. The antics of a very lively cat furnish a most amusing tale.

When the body of President Garfield lay in state at the capitol, an old engineer, who was employed in the basement, and who ridiculed the idea of ghosts, decided to be revenged upon the watchmen and policemen who remained in the building through the night. He procured two large English walnuts and securely tied the half shells on the four feet of the pet cat and carefully turned her loose in statuary hall. The noise of these shells on the marble floors at midnight, in the semi-darkness as the distracted cat scampered about trying to get rid of her new shoes, gave the watchers the worst fright of their lives. The incident, though a harmless joke, gave rise to the story of the spectral footsteps which follow all those who have to cross the rotunda in statuary hall after the building is closed for the night.

The rotunda has its own especial haunt. The prevailing belief in regard to this particular haunt is that on certain days, presumably anniversaries, the bent and huddled up figure of a workman with his tools may be seen flitting through this section. The foundation for this idea doubtless arose from the account of the death of a workman which occurred there during the early days of the construction of the capitol. He lost his footing upon a scaffold and was killed by the fall to the floor.

The wraith of John Quincy Adams, from all narratives on the subject, seems to be the one most often encountered. At times it is alleged that he may be seen in statuary hall, formerly the old house of representatives and the scene of his death, accompanied by the whole congress of 1848, gathered in ghostly conclave. He is also accredited with roaming about all parts of the capitol and may be seen at almost any time.

According to one of the many legends which have been gradually accumulating ever since the building was completed, a corridor in the senate wing basement has a frequent ghostly walker of a foreign aspect. This tall, distinguished-looking individual is reported to confine his activities to pacing up and down that particular passageway and giving a dignified military salute at frequent intervals. His identity is still a mystery to the initiated in spiritual lore, but it is believed that it is the ghost of Maj. L'Enfant, the talented Frenchman who designed the city of Washington.

One Cause of Poverty in Britain.

If the soil of England were subjected to such intense cultivation as that of France and if the thousands of acres now wholly unproductive as pleasure parks were brought under tillage, millions of the underpaid and unemployed could support themselves by agriculture; but the big landowners decline to part with their holdings, and a parliament which refuses to lay the ax to the root of the tree, which will not even facilitate the transfer of land by making its conveyance cheap, safe and easy, trifles with dilettante projects of afforestation and busies itself with impracticable schemes of non-employment insurance. Is it any wonder that 75 per cent. of the British people live in cities and that a considerable proportion of them are on the ragged edge of starvation all the time?

Sufficiently Done.

As a gentleman was having his luncheon in the coffee room of a Birmingham hotel he was much annoyed by another visitor, who during the whole of the meal stood with his back to the fire warming himself and watching him partake of his repast. At length, unable to endure it any longer, he rang the bell and said: "Waiter, kindly turn that gentleman round; I think he is done on that side."—The Argonaut.

THE GLORIOUS FOURTH

And How We Got It.

Characters—King George, Washington, the American Boy, the Goddess of Liberty.

WASHINGTON.
Most noble liege and mighty king,
The colonies to you now cling
With fond allegiance, and we pray
To live beneath your royal sway.
No better monarch, sire, than you
E're reigned o'er people tried and true.
We're ever loyal, I give my word,
To you, illustrious George the Third.

KING GEORGE.
Thanks, thanks, most noble Washington.
I'm glad the people's hearts I've won—
I'm glad contentment now doth reign
From Florida to pine-clad Maine;
I'm glad the people are not bent
On change and want new government.

WASHINGTON.
New government, oh, no, great sire!
No government do we require
But yours, and we allegiance give
And crave 'neath Britain's flag to live
In happiness for ever more,
With you, great king, to lord it o'er
Old England and New England, too.

KING GEORGE (sadly).
Thanks, thanks, but, ah! 'twill never do.

WASHINGTON.
What ails my liege, your cheeks turn pale.
Your words in deep emotion fall;
Some burden's on your noble heart!

KING GEORGE.
The colonies and I—must part!

WASHINGTON (deeply agitated).
Must part! Oh, king, what do you mean?
We, who are happy and serene,
While we have you, our king, to love
And Britain's flag to wave above;
Why must we part? I lose my breath;
Great king, you have scared me half to death.
Speak! speak! my liege, that I may glean
Some ray of hope. What do you mean?

KING GEORGE.
Ah, Washington, my noble friend,
'Tis sad to think my reign must end
Upon this continent, but so
The fates have willed, and I must go!

WASHINGTON.
You break my heart, see how I grieve?
What secret have you up your sleeve?
Some awful weight preys on your mind.
Explain, oh, sire! don't be unkind!
Tell me, great king, what does this mean?
We want no other king or queen
But you and she, your royal spouse.

KING GEORGE.
To swift revolt you must arouse
The colonies at once.

WASHINGTON.
And why
Must we revolt, who're loyal, and die?
Why must grim bloodshed's gory stain
Besmirch fair valley, hill and plain?
Why must we fight?

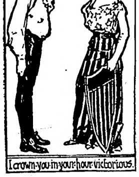
AMERICAN BOY.
I'll tell you why:
If you don't we'll have no Fourth of July.
I am the great American boy,
That sprite of palpitating joy;
And I demand—mind, no excuse—
One day a year to turn things loose;
One day to let the fireworks off,
One day to make the old cat cough,
And watch her o'er the fence top sail,
With strings of crackers at her tail;
I want a day to shriek and shout
And blow myself clean inside out;
I want a day to work off steam
And hear the American eagle scream;
A day to let old Europe know,



I crown you in your hour victorious.

That our band wagon heads the show;
A day of grand hilarious mirth,
When Uncle Sam owns all the earth;
A day when Europe looks amazed
And all creation sits back dazed;
A day when small boys rule the world
And brave Old Glory swings unfurled—
Defiance breathing to the spheres,
And I, bereft of nose and ears,
Sing Yankee Doodle, Doodle Doo!

WASHINGTON.
Where are you from, sweet youth so coy?

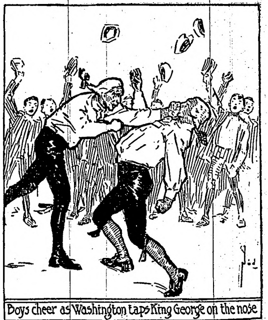
AMERICAN BOY.
I am the twentieth century boy.
And down the years I've come post haste
To tell you both you'll be disgraced
Forever in our boyish eyes
If you don't fight; so if you're wise,
Great Washington, King George you'll take
And mincemeat of that monarch make.
And if you don't, take this from me,
There will be no Washington, D. C.
No statues soaring to your name,
No songs triumphant to proclaim.
You, father of your country grand,
The idol of your native land,
These awful things will happen if
You don't give old King George a biff.
I'll have no chance to lose an eye
And walk around three fingers shy,
And Chinese union fireworks packers
Will strike if they can't sell their crackers.
Come, boys; come, boys, from everywhere.

(Boys rush on and encircle stage.)
Oh, join me in this fervent prayer
To this, our hero Washington,
To give us just one day of fun!
One day of wild, hilarious mirth,
The greatest day for boys on earth.
Great Washington, quick, make reply,
Do we get our Fourth of July?

(Washington, in deep distress, gazes at the floor, sighs deeply, as King George takes his arm.)

KING GEORGE.
You see, my friend, what they require.

WASHINGTON.
Oh, yes, I see it, noble sire.
But, oh, it grieves my inmost soul
To think that martial drums must roll,
And midst the cannon's deadly roars
You're headlong pitched from off these shores.
And just because these horrid boys
Want some excuse to make a noise.



Boys cheer as Washington taps King George on the nose

KING GEORGE.
I know, old friend, it does seem tough.

AMERICAN BOY.
It's time to fight; you've talked enough.

WASHINGTON.
I will not fight.

AMERICAN BOY.
Then stand disgraced.
Your name from school books be erased.
New York a Washington arch won't boast,
No Sousa's band to play "Washington Post,"
And that story of the hatchet, see,
Where you cut down the cherry tree,
We won't believe you told your pa.
We'll swear you told a fib. Ha! Ha!
(Boys all laugh derisively.)

WASHINGTON (indignantly).
You'll tell the world I told a lie?

AMERICAN BOYS.
Yes! Unless we get the "Fourth" of July.

WASHINGTON.
I will not be intimidated.

KING GEORGE.
Now, boys, you've got him animated,
Leave him to me, I'll make him fight.
I've got a scheme, just watch him bite,
He'll get so mad, he'll fairly choke,
And then off goes my kingly yoke.
I'll put a tax on Lipton's tea (all groan),
All Yankees now my slaves shall be.
I'll grant you not the least concession,
But grind you down with fierce oppression.
Boston shall have no pork and beans,
No literary bell boys or auto machines (groans).
Tammany Hall shall be demolished,
Cranberry sauce at once abolished
And turkey, too, as I'm a sinner,
Shall never grace Thanksgiving dinner (groans).
Pumpkin pie, and, I repeat it,
No one in America shall eat it,
Boys sha'n't whittle, girls sha'n't hum,
No baby's allowed to chew its thumb.
(Groans.)
And tho' the nation's blood may boil,
I'll smash the trusts and Standard Oil.
No American girl shall wed a lord;
All tramps must wash and pay their board.

(Loud cries of "Shame!" from the boys.)
I'll abolish, though my great throne quakes,
Popcorn, candy and buckwheat cakes.
And to cap it all, you wretched creatures;
I'll abolish Jersey's fierce mos'keeters.

WASHINGTON (fighting mad).
You sha'n't!

KING GEORGE.
I sha'n't? I say I will!

WASHINGTON.
Then be prepared for Bunker Hill.
Pumpkin pie, that you can stop,
Pork and beans from menus drop,
Buckwheat cakes and biscuits, they
Can be abolished right away.
Turkeys, cranb'ries, you can banish,
Thumbs from babies' mouths can vanish,
But I'll spoil all your kingly features,
If you monkey with New Jersey's 'skeeters.
Those noble birds of freedom they,
Unchained upon baldheads must play,
For if you stopped their funny capers,
There'd be no jokes in Sunday papers.
They're our greatest, grandest institution,
The bulwark of our Constitution.
To banish beans, great king, 's all right,
But touch the 'skeeters and I fight,
(Boys cheer lustily as Washington takes off his coat for action.)

KING GEORGE.
Thank heaven, I've made him mad at last!

WASHINGTON.
To nail "Old Glory" to the mast
And know ye all that now I sever
Old England from the "new" forever.
KING GEORGE (in fighting attire).
Quit parleying and come to blows.

WASHINGTON.
There's one jiu jitsu on the nose!

KING GEORGE.
My cause is lost, I'm licked, I'm done!

WASHINGTON.
America's free; hurrah, I've won!

GODDESS OF LIBERTY.
Immortal George, forever glorious,
I crown you in your hour victorious;
'Twas not for liberty you fought,
And splendid deeds of valor wrought;
But for a nobler purpose you
Have fought and bled—

BOYS.
Hurrah! Hurroo!

GODDESS OF LIBERTY.
You knew that boyhood one day needed
For joyous mirth; their cry you heeded!
You've been a boy and took compassion
On them and brought the "Fourth" in fashion.

KING GEORGE.
In my steamer trunk I'll put my crown,
And hustle back to London town;
Farewell to all, so glad you're 'appy,
I'm going 'ome to be a chappie;
I'll send a wireless from Southampton,
And tell the Times how I've been tramped on.

WASHINGTON.
(Shakes King George's hand.)
Ta! Ta! George, so sorry to lose you.

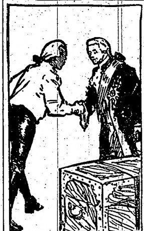
BOYS.
We wanted the "Fourth."

WASHINGTON-KING GEORGE.
We couldn't refuse you.

WASHINGTON.
Proclaim this fact from tower and steeple,
I only fought to please young people;
King George's head I had to cracket,
Just so the "kids" could raise a racket;
And incidentally, know all creatures,
I fought to save the Jersey 'skeeters;
So, know ye all, South, East, West, North,
Just how you got the glorious "Fourth."
You've got these facts all in your noodles?

ALL.
We have!

GODDESS OF LIBERTY.
Then let's sing "Yankee Doodle, Doodles."
(All sing "Yankee Doodle' as Liberty takes Washington's hand. King George, with trunk, exits left. Cheers and curtain.)



Ta! Ta! George, so sorry to lose you.

ST. JOHN OF KANSAS BLED.

John P. St. John, former governor of Kansas, won the brand of the "easy mark" when he "fell" for the game of a confidence man on the Rock Island train between Wichita and Topeka. As a result he is $40 poorer in really perfectly good money, and much richer in actual experience.

Mr. St. John was seated in the chair car watching the landscape when a much perturbed and hatless man entered.

"I was told," he said, "that I could buy a money order on the train. Now I find that I cannot. I don't know what I am going to do. I must send this money to my sister, and I have only a big bunch of small bills. It won't do to put them in an envelope."

Gov. St. John rose to the bait just as if he had never braved the dangers of such great cities as Topeka and Wichita.

"I can let you have two twenties," he said.

The offer was accepted. Mr. St. John produced the two twenties and the stranger handed over a roll. Seeing that he was dealing with a stranger, Mr. St. John carefully counted the contents of the roll. He found that it contained seven $1 bills and one $5 bill.

"You have a mistake," he said. "There is not enough money here."

The stranger, who in the meantime had placed the two twenties in an envelope and sealed it, was all apologies.

"That's a joke on my wife," he explained. "She gave me that roll and told me that there was $40 in it. Here, you just hold this envelope while I go back and get the rest of the money."

The governor put the envelope in his pocket and resumed his study of the landscape. Finally he bethought him that the stranger had never come back. Then Mr. St. John opened the envelope. It contained only two pieces of tissue paper.

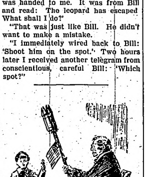
Be Sure You Are Right.

"Bill had charge of the animal tent," said Mr. Ringling, "and among his pets was a leopard. This leopard gave Bill more trouble than all the rest of the menagerie put together.

"One day when I had left the show on some advance business a telegram was handed to me. It was from Bill and read: The leopard has escaped What shall I do?'

"That was just like Bill. He didn't want to make a mistake.

"I immediately wired back to Bill: 'Shoot him on the spot.' Two hours later I received another telegram from conscientious, careful Bill: 'Which spot?"



A Declaration.

"Thank you, Uncle, but I've got beyond those things as a evhicle for patriotic emotions.'

"You have! May I ask what the proper vehicle is now?"

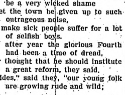
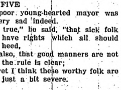
Did you ever hear the story of Fizz-Bang park?
Well, if you haven't heard it, pray lend your ears and hark.
Now once there was a city, but never mind where,
And the mayor he was old enough to have gray hair,
He had a little bald spot in the middle of his pate,
His brow was somewhat furrowed with grave affairs of state—
Bue he had a heart as happy as when he was a boy,
And the thought of Independence day aroused his youthful joy.
He rubbed his hands and chuckled, and stroked his trim goatee;
"We'll have a celebration that will 'take the cake,'" quoth he;
"There shall be heaps of powder burned, and every bell shall ring,
"And there shall be a grand parade, and all that sort of thing.

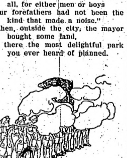
"A great address, a big balloon, and fireworks galore;
"It shall be such a jolly time as ne'er was known before."
But while he gayly planned it a delegation came,
And said they thought that it would be a very wicked shame
To let the town be given up to such outrageous noise,
And make sick people suffer for a lot of selfish boys.
Year after year the glorious Fourth had been a time of dread,
They thought that he should institute a great reform, they said.
"Besides," said they, "our young folk are growing rude and wild;



'T is seldom ,nowadays, one finds a well-conducted child.
They don't say 'please' or 'thank you' or 'sir' or 'ma'am' at all;
They seem to think politeness is only fol-de-rol.
We'd better spend the money we waste in senseless noise
On a School of Good Behavior for all our girls and boys."
CUT FIVE
The poor young-hearted mayor was very sad indeed.
"'Tis true," he said, "that sick folk have rights which all should heed,
And, also, that good manners are not the rule is clear;
And yet I think these worthy folk are just a bit severe.



There would have been no Fourth at all, for either men or boys
If our forefathers had not been the kind that made a noise."
So then, outside the city, the mayor bought some land,
And there the most delightful park you ever heard of planned.



If our forefathers had not been the kind that make a noise

"It is so far from town," he said "we shall not mind the din;
"Upon the Fourth our girls and boys shall there be gathered in.
"Lets' hurry up and lay it out, and call it Fizz Bang park;
"And Independence Day shall be an educational lark."

FIZZ-BANG PARK

MOURNERS WERE HER VICTIMS.

In Garb of Woe She Attended Funerals and Robbed the Sorrowing.

Originally arrested on a charge of drunkenness, a woman who says she is Annie Allen, sometimes of Camden, Gloucester and Philadelphia, was arraigned before Magistrate Gallagher in the Twentieth district police station on suspicion of being a "funeral thief" who has been much sought by the authorities, says the Philadelphia Record. When taken into custody at the Broad street station the woman carried a small hand bag, which on being searched was found to contain more than seventy pawn tickets, together with black veils and other mourning apparel, which the police say she used in attending funerals as a professional "mourner."

The pawn tickets found in her possession bore the names of twenty-four different pawnbrokers with places of business in all sections of the city. Many complaints have been received from houses of mourning where petty robberies have been committed while the services were in progress, and the police say the woman now in custody admits that she has put on her black veil and mourning raiment and attended funerals for the purpose of robbery. Pending further investigation of her career and to give the police time to find out the owners of some of the articles called for on the pawn tickets found in her possession, the accused was held in $500 bail for a further hearing.

THE GUNPOWDER PLOT.

THE USEFUL SWALLOWS.

From the standpoint of the farmer and the orchardist perhaps no birds more useful than the swallows exist. They have been described as the light cavalry of the avian army.

Specially adapted for flight and unexcelled in aerial evolutions, they have few rivals in the art of capturing insects in midair. They eat nothing of value to man except a few predaceous wasps and bugs, and in return for their services in destroying vast numbers of noxious insects ask only for harborage and protection.

It is to the fact that they capture their prey on the wing that their peculiar value to the cotton grower is due. Orioles do royal service in catching weevils on the the bolls, and blackbirds, wrens, flycatchers and others contribute to the good work, but when swallows are migrating over the cotton fields they find the weevils flying in the open and wage active war against them. As many as forty-seven adult weevils have been found in the stomach of a single cliff swallow.—Bulletin of the Department of Agriculture.

"Yes," said the suburbanite as he wielded a hoe. "I'm fond of poultry dinners."

"Then it's a wonder you don't raise chickens instead of flowers," remarked the mutual friend.

"Oh, what's the use? My neighbors raise the chickens."

The Auto Strop.

When the train stopped at the little Southern station the Northern tourist sauntered out on the platform. Under a scrub oak stood a lean animal with scraggy bristles. The tourist was interested.

"What do you call that?" he queried of a lanky native.

"Razorback hawg."

"Well, what is he doing rubbing against that tree?"

"He's stropping himself, mister, jest stropping himself."

Courtship in the North.

"Aurora," he called, sharply, "is that young man down there yet?"

"Yes, pa," answered the Eskimo belle.

"Er—you'll have to do it yourself, pa; he has been here so long he is frozen to the snow settee."

Mrs. Knicker—Do men get their buttons sewed on when the majority of them as for it?

The Burning Question.

A Baltimore teacher was trying to explain the meaning of the word "recuperate."

"Charley," she said, "when night comes your father returns home tired and worn out, doesn't he?"

"Yes, ma'am," assented Charley.

"Then," continued the teacher, "it being night, and he being tired, what does he do?"

"That's what ma wants to know," said Charley.

The Cause of War.

The fair young debutante was surrounded by an admiring crowd of offiners at the colonel's ball. Mamma was standing near by, smiling complacently at her daughter's social success. The discussion was over the quarrel of the day before between two brother officers.

"What was the casus-belli?" asked the fair debutante.

"Maud," exclaimed mamma in a shocked voice, "how often have I told you to say stomach?"

The House of the Big Logs.

One of the most interesting structures at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition will be the forestry building. In making it 126 choice fir logs have been used as main columns. These pieces of fir timber are no ordinary logs. The longest, twenty-six of them, are each 54 feet long and all the rest are 42 feet long. The average diameter at the top is 6 feet 6 inches. Each of the largest of the columns contains about 13,000 feet of lumber. The building is 312 feet long, 128 feet wide and 90 feet high.

Pat on Baptism.

Pat, who was noted for a quick tongue, was digging potatoes when the parish priest came by. By way of a pleasant salutation the priest said:

"Good morning' to ye, Pat, and what kind of p'tatoes are ye diggin'?"

"Raw ones, your riv'rince."

"Och, ye're so smart. I'll just give ye a question on the catechism. What is baptism?"

"It used to be four shillin's afore ye came, but now it's twenty shillin's."

Forestalled.

"Well, Mrs. Dennis, what are you going to give Pat for Christmas this year?" inquired the recipient of Mrs. Dennis' regular washday visits, one day at the beginning of the festal season.

"'Deed thin, ma'am, I don't know," replied Mrs. Dennis, raising herself from the washtub and setting her dripping arms akimbo. "I did be thinkin' I'd give him a pair of pants, but, Lord bless ye, ma'am, only last night didn't he come home with a pair on."

WOMEN SUFFER NEEDLESSLY

Many Mysterious Aches and Pains Are Easily Cured.

EVERY PICTURE TELLS A STORY

Backache, pain through the hips, dizzy spells, headaches, nervousness, bloating, etc., are troubles that commonly come from sick kidneys. Don't mistake the cause—Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands of women afflicted in this way—by curing the kidneys. Mrs. C. R. Foresman, 113 S. Eighth St., Canon City, Colo., says: "Three years I suffered with rheumatism, dropsy and kidney complaint, and became utterly helpless. I found relief after using two or three boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills and kept on until cured. Doan's Kidney Pills have been a blessing to me."

Jimson Juice.

The chemist who will extract the bleaching principle from the common jimson weed and place it within reach of family and laundry use has a fortune in store. It is a well known fact that there is no better way of bleaching the family linen during washing than by putting a few leaves of jimson into the boiler; but there is an objection to this practice, as a very unpleasant odor is the result. This can be removed, however, by placing the clothes in cold water and boiling them, or by repeated rinsing, but all this is troublesome, and therefore many who know the value of the leaves do not use them.

SORE EYES CURED.

Eye-Balls and Lids Became Terribly Inflamed—Was Unable to Go About —All Other Treatments Failed, But Cuticura Proved Successful.

"About two years ago my eyes got in such a condition that I was unable to go about. They were terribly inflamed, both the balls and lids. I tried home remedies without relief. Then I decided to go to our family physician, but he didn't help them. Then I tried two more of our most prominent physicians, but my eyes grew continually worse. At this time a friend of mine advised me to try Cuticura Ointment, and after using it about one week my eyes were considerably improved, and in two weeks they were almost well. They have never given me any trouble since and I am now sixty-five years old. I shall always praise Cuticura. G. B. Halsey, Mouth of Wilson, Va., Apr. 4, 1908."

Isn't It a Fact

That a cavalry man unhorsed is the most easily cowed?

That one can show his temper only after he has lost it?

That a contractor should be called upon to expand a house?

That no young man ever rose rapidly till he had settled down?

That the plo wmust be soiled before the soil can be plowed?

That a susceptible fellow is hardest hit by the softest glances?

That in everything (except baseball) you mus strike out to make a hit?

That many students cannot state bald facts without splitting hairs?

Chased and Killed by a Buzzsaw.

Walter Terry, a woodsaw operator, was pursued and cut down by a woodsaw insecurely fastened that broke away from a wagon bed on which it was mounted at Ashland, Or.

The saw was whirling at a high rate of speed, and when it broke from its fastenings it ran at Terry, who fled. The saw overtook him and ripped his back for a long distance and completely severed his right leg just below the knee.

Terry was taken to the hospital at Ashland, where everything possible was done for him, but he died within thirty minutes.

WON'T MIX

Bad Food and Good Health Won't Mix.

The human stomach stands much abuse but it won't return good health if you give it bad food.

"A year ago I became much alarmed about my health for I began to suffer after each meal no matter how little I ate," says a Denver woman.

"I lost my appetite and the very thought of food grew distasteful, with the result that I was not nourished and got weak and thin.

"My home cares were very heavy, for besides a large family of my own I have also to look out for my aged mother. There was no one to shoulder my household burdens, and come what might, I must bear them, and this thought nearly drove me frantic when I realized that my health was breaking down.

"I read an article in the paper about some one with trouble just like mine being cured on Grape-Nuts food and acting on this suggestion I gave Grape-Nuts a trial. The first dish of this delicious food proved that I had struck the right thing.

"My uncomfortable feelings in stomach and brain disappeared as if by magic and in an incredibly short space of time I was myself again. Since then I have gained 12 pounds in weight through a summer of hard work and realize I am a very different woman, all due to the splendid food, Grape-Nuts."

Wheelock's Weekly observes that the argument of the female anti-suffrage society that they wish to learn more about civic matters before using the ballot is eaxctly like the plan of keeping children out of the water until they have learned to swim.

So many of the writings of Mark Twain in recent months have lacked the clever interest of his early writings that it is interesting to note some of his characteristic humor in the following advice he gave in an address at a girl's school: "There are three things, young ladies, I advice you not to do. Don't smoke—that is, don't smoke to excess. I am 73½ years old and I have smoked only seventy-three years of that time. Don't drink—that is, don't drink to excess. Don't marry—I mean, to excess."

One professional man has devised an effective plan for handling persistent conventionalists. He has on his desk a small alarm clock. When a visitor of unpleasant propensities is announced this man picks up his clock, sets the alarm for the minutes ahead and receives the caller. Time goes by and then the clock starts its duty. The busy man starts as he hears the sound, consults his watch and then rises with a hasty apology. "I'm mighty sorry we won't be able to discuss that longer," he says, "but I've an important engagement at this hour and simply must keep it."

During his recent visit to the east and while in Washington Governor Johnson called at the White House and paid his respects to President Taft, and they being well acquainted with each other, the genial Minnesota executive was accorded a cordial reception. During the interview with the president Governor Johnson said to him: "Mr. Taft, you ought not to be president. You're too fat. It's too hard on you. It needs a tall, lean and lank kind of a man for the job—he's the kind of a man for the job—he's the kind don't you see, that should be in it?" Mr. Taft "saw it" and all of them laughed at the Governor's pat presumption.

Burt Day writing in the Hutchinson Leader says: Out of 25,000 boys recently examined in the schools of Kansas only six tobacco users were found to be what would generally be called "bright." Ten of the remaining were average students while all the rest of the 25,000 were found to be poor at their studies, or worthless. Boys who have a grain of horse sense will remember this and bar the weed, even though their fathers and other fools used it. The word fools is used advisedly, for we never met with confirmed tobacco user who would not admit that tobacco using is a "fool habit."

The St. Peter Free Press editor, although a postmaster, and a strong party man, has convictions of his own and isn't afraid to express them when occasion demands. Hear him: Senator Adrich in his retort to Senator Beveridge a few days ago, contended that there was now an alliance that he could not understand. "Democrats are voting with alleged republicans and alleged republicans are voting with alleged democrats.' The senator should not be greatly disturbed. It is a sign of the times. Besides the voting of the alleged democrats with the republican side will probably save the senators' high tariff bill. So he has reasons to be thankful for that much at least. Later on the voters may take a hand in the game and possibly results may follow making it unnecessary for either republicans or democrats to vote with the other party. Evidently the party allignments need adjusting.

tempt to derive the country of the money voted by the state legislature for the constuction and repair of country roads and bridges. The purpose of the senator appears to have been dual: first, to take steps to see that the interests of the county shall be properly represented before the supreme court which will be asked to decide on the constitutionality of the act; and second, I have no doubt, to bring pessurre to bear on the bench by indicating to its members how the people are feeling about the matter. Judges, too, are public servants, elected by the people, and amenable, as are other candidates for public favor, to public opinion. The court is known to have stretched a point in deference to public opinion in authorizing the contraction of the debt the construction of the new capitol building made necessary. Public sentiment in this matter is not likely to induce the judges to sanction a violation of the constitution; but it will doubtless have the effect of causing them to give the whole subject exhaustive study, and proper weight to the arguments made on behalf of the country people.

Some Senatorial Possibilities.

Incidentally, there was a good deal of gossip about state politics, the senatorial situation being given particular attention. From conversation with those present it was learned that Frank Kellogg is making no secret of his senatorial aspirations, and that in some quarters his candidacy is welcomed; not necessarily because it is favored, but because it indicates a break in the strength on which Senator Clapp has relied and will open the field to all comers. Among others who may profit from this, is Ex-Attorney General Young. While there is a considerable element in the Republican party which regards him as the logical candidate for governor, it is well known that there, are those close to him who for some time have been quietly organizing with the view of putting him in a good position for the senatorial race, and these are by no means averse to having Mr. Kellogg given encouragement. There are others who will welcome the contest, which at present gives promise of obscuring other issue. It is altogether too early to indulge in prophecy, and premature to mention names which will later be freely used in this connection, but one thing at least, is certain, namely, that no man is likely to be chosen by any state legislators for his positon who is not fully in sympathy with the popular demand for tariff reform or will permit himself to be dragooned by party leaders into giving even quasa endorsement to such a betrayal of the people as is involved in the Aldrich abortion. This may later lead to complications not yet anticipated..

Appointments Endorsed.

It is an open secret that if he will accept the place John Galarneault will be appointed to the position of Superintendent of Banks created by the last legislature. The selection is everywhere regarded as probably the best that could be made, and I learn has an enthusiastic endorsemennt among Republicans as Democrats, with which latter party Mr. Galaneault is affiliated. The governor has always been fortunate in the popular approval of the men who he has selected for public position, and Mr. Galarneault's appointment, when joined with the selecion of T. D. O'Brien to the supreme bench, which has at least been semi-officially announced, will add to the confidence already amply evidenced in his administration.

The Beltrami Muddle.

The governor has recently been called upon to discharge the more disagreeable duty of taking steps toward making an inquiry into the conduct of the Beltrami officials charged with malfeances in office. He has been urged summarily to suspend them on the showing already made by the deputy public examiner as a result of an examination of the county's books and records, but has preferred to proceed wth caution and to give the accused officials ample opportunity to set up any defense they have to make. To this end he has appointed M. E. Kain, a prominent Brainerd attorney, as commissioner to take testimony in the case for accused officials. M. F. Kain will represent the public examiner's department and an official from the attorney general's office will act on the behalf of the state. J. J. Cameron of Bemidji will be official reporter.

Complications Involved.

The situation has become complicated as a result of the action of the legislature in authorizing the issue of the county of Beltrami of $150,000 in bonds to take up the country's floating indebtedness. This indebtedness is understood to be represented by warrants alleged to have been purchased by local banks frequently at a large discount. Arrangements had been made by a St. Paul investment company to purchase these bonds, but, after it had been charged that some of the warrants had been improperly issued by the board of county commissioners the investment company decided to have nothing to do with them. Singularly enough the state's legal department displayed a surprising interest in the settlement of the financial affairs of the county with which it is not generally regarded as being authorized to concern itself, and it is said that Mr. Simpson advised that the board of investment of state funds take up the issue of Beltrami County bonds which the banking institution had rejected. This policy does not appear to have recommended itself to the state authorities. Possibly since the investigation has been ordered the Attorney General's activities in this matter will be circumscribed, and he will confine himself to seeing that justice is done and officials charged with malfeasence brought to trial. From what is known it appears that prominent lumber companies are involved in the affair, and that much of the alleged wrong doing was in their behalf. The whole situation is replete with interest and it will not be surprising if the developments at the hearing will have a much wider than merely local bearing.

An Unexpected Appointment.

The recent announcement of the proposed appointment by President Taft of Professor L. S. Swanson of Minneapolis to the postition of Minister to Cuba has occasioned some surprise in St. Paul, and has not been greeted with the altogether unanimous approval of party leaders. There are those who think there are others equally well qualified, more deserving of recognition than the eminent Scandinavian selected. Mr. Swenson was at one time minister to Denmark and his political activity has since been confined principally to holding the position of treasurer in Mr. Jacobsen's campaign. His services in this connection are not generally believed to have proved of particular advantage to the party organization. The salary of the Cuban position is $12,000 a year, and Mr. Swenson's fitness for it does not result from his familiarity with or special interest in Cuban affairs, of which he is reported to have admitted he has no particular knowledge.

Reclaiming the Wayward.

Possibly, however, the appointement was made rather with a view of reclaiming Scandinavian allegiance to the party shibboleth than in the interest of the public service. Republicans generally barbor the delusion that Governor Johnson owes his strength to nationality rather than to the confidence reposed in him by the people at large and to his capacity for public affairs. Efforts in recent years have therefore been largely directed towards bringing back the wayward Norsemen to their first love, and there are those who see in Professor Swanson's appointment evidence that the services of President Taft have been enlisted in that behalf. It is referred to also in connection with a movement which has recently been given some prominence to organize the Swedes under the leadership of Lieutenant Governor Eberhart, Mr. Elmquist, the railroad commissioner, E. Nelson of Hallock, one time state librarian, said to be yet ambitious, Mr. Mattson of Roseau County, a candidate for secretary of state. In connection with the latter's aspirations, unless rumor speaks falsely, he will first have to perform the task of prying Julius Schmall loose, which will not be so easy.

Rheumatism

I have found a tried and tested cure for Rheumatism! Not a remedy that will straighten the distorted limbs of chronic cripples, nor turn bony growths back to flesh again. That is impossible. But I can now surely kill the pains and pangs of this deplorable disease.

In Germany—with a Chemist in the City of Darmstadt—I found the last ingredient with which Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Remedy was made a perfected, dependable prescription. Without that last ingredient, I successfully treated many, many cases of Rheumatism; but now, at last, it uniformly cures all curable cases of this heretofore much dreaded disease. Those sand-like granular wastes, found in Rheumatic Blood, seem to dissolve and pass away under the action of this remedy as freely as does sugar when added to pure water. Farmer Jepson, widower, lived four miles from Akron on the country road, and Jane Schofield, widow and farmer, lived three miles west of him on the Red Bridge road. They had lived thus for five years and only knew each other by name. The five years might have become twenty had not an old lop horned cow stepped in to give the parties an introduction.

The cow was owned by the widow. Besides being lop horned she was bobtailed, wild eyed and had various bad habits, one of which was jumping six rail fences and wandering about nights. These promenades sometimes led her miles away and into strange pastures. The first time Farmer Jepson saw her she was in the midst of his cornfield and had cleared about half an acre of the juicy stalks. He was a good man, but he swore at her and called her names. He also tried his best to kill her on the spot. A week later the cow called again to see how the corn was coming on, and after half killing her the farmer sent word that if she was not kept at home he would sue her owner for damages.

"And who is Farmer Jepson that talks so big, I'd like to know!" exclaimed the widow as she got the message by a hired man. "If he thinks he's the biggest toad in the puddle let him go right ahead and sue. Two can play at that game. I'm not allowing my live stock to bother my neighbors, but I'm not going to sit up every night in the week to see that that old cow don't get out. You go back and tell him that I'm not afraid of any ten men like him."

"Oh, she ain't, hey!" exclaimed the farmer when the hired man had returned with the word. "Waal, we'll see about that. I'm no hand to complain of my neighbors, but I'm not going to have their cows in my corn and then take sass to boot. If that old critter of a cow steps hoof on my land again there'll be a lawsuit to make things rumble."

The cow didn't hurry matters any. She waited until Mr. Jepson had transplanted his cabbage plants and they had got fairly growing, and then she called one night and helped herself to 250 of them, and two days later the widow learned that suit had been commenced by Farmer Jepson to recover $250 damages.

"So he's sued me, has he?" observed the widow, as she doubled up her fists and fire came to her eyes. "Well, we'll see who comes out ahead!"

Plaintiff and defendant each secured a lawyer, and of course each attorney assured his client that he had the best kind of a case and was sure to win. After two or three adjournments the case came to trial, and it was in the courtroom that plaintiff and defendant first saw each other. Both were surprised, and both said something to themselves. What the farmer said was:

"Waal, by thunder! I expected to see a fat and homely old two fisted widder, and I find her a good looking little bit of a female who ought to be sitting on a husband's knee. Wish I'd seen her before I begun this suit."

"Lands o' massy, but he hain't no mean looking man!" exclaimed the widow after a look at the farmer. "Why, they said he was a big boss and bluffer and wanted to bulldoze me 'cause I'm all alone in the world. Say, now, but they are all wrong. He hain't the kind to bluff and pitch in. Wish he'd have come to see me about the old cow. If he had I'd have chained her up. Wonder how hard he'll swear agin me!"

She was soon to know. The plaintiff's lawyer in opening the case said it was an aggravated case of trespass and damage and that the sum mentioned wasn't really half what they should have sued for. Then he went on to tell of what a defiant woman the defendant was and wound up by stating his hopes that the jury would render a verdict without leaving the box. Then the plaintiff was called to the witness chair, and, to the surprise of the widow and the disgust of his lawyer, he said he had forgotten the message the woman returned to him. He followed that up by declaring that his feelings had simply been shocked and that he had fully recovered from the shock in a minute and a half. As to the corn and cabbage, perhaps $10 would pay the bill.

"You jackass, but you have lost your case!" hissed his lawyer as the witness stepped down with a smile in the direction of the widow, whose lawyer was whispering to her:

"Now, you get up there and give us some hot talk and your case is won."

There was no hot talk from the widow. On the contrary, she cooed like a dove. She admitted to the ownership of the jumping, predatory cow, but was quite willing to pay reasonable damages. She didn't doubt the plaintiff's shocked feelings and was sorry for them and wished he had hit the old cow with the ax. One of the results of the suit was a verdict for 6 cents' damages, and another was that Farmer Jepson said he would call at her home for the money. He kept his word. A week later he drove up to the door and after an hour's interview was asked to call again. Three months later his disgusted lawyer was heard to exclaim:

"Prettiest case I ever had and dead sure of a verdict, and Jepson knocks it all in the head by falling in love with the defendant. Yes, they were married yesterday."

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

There is an evaporation from the body going on continually, day and night, through the pores and glands of the skin. This is nature's way of maintaining the proper temperature of our systems and preserving the softness and flexibility of the skin, and so long as the blood is free from impurities no trouble will result. When, however, the blood from any cause becomes infected with humors and acids, these too must be expelled, and coming in contact with the delicate fibres and tissues with which the skin is so abundantly supplied, they produce irritation and inflammation, and the effect is shown by Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and skin affections of various kinds. These impurities and humors get into the blood through a deranged or inactive condition of the system; the members whose duty it is to carry off the waste and refuse matter of the body fail to properly perform their work, and this impure, fermenting matter is left in the system to be absorbed by the blood. The skin is not only affected by poisons generated within the system, but poisons from without, such as Poison Oak, Poison Ivy, Nettle Rash, etc., enter through the open pores and glands, and so thoroughly do they become rooted in the blood that they are ever present, or return at certain seasons of each year to torment the sufferer. Salves, washes, lotions, etc., cannot cure skin diseases. True, such treatment relieves some of the itching and discomfort, and aids in keeping the skin clean, but it does not reach the real cause, and at best can be only palliating and soothing. A thorough cleansing of the blood is the only certain cure for skin diseases. S. S. S., a gentle acting, safe blood purifier, made entirely of vegetable ingredients of the forest and field, is the proper treatment. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation, and neutralizes the acids and humors, thoroughly cleansing and purifying the blood, and curing skin affections of every kind. It supplies to the blood the fresh, nutritive qualities necessary to sustain the skin and all other parts of the body, and rids the blood of any and all poisons. S. S. S. cures Eczema, Tetter, Acne, Salt Rheum, Poison Oak and Ivy, Nettle Rash, and all other skin troubles, and cures them permanently by removing every trace of the cause from the blood. Special book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write.

I have used your S. S. S., spring and fall, for the past two years, with the result that it entirely relieved me of a form of Eczema which my doctor was unable to cure. My arms, lower limbs, and, in fact, the biggest portion of my whole body was affected, and when I first began S. S. S. the itching, etc., was worse, but I continued the remedy with the result that the dry, itching eruption entirely disappeared. I think a great deal of your medicine, and have recommended it to others with good results. It is the best blood medicine made, and I can conscientiously recommend it for the cure of all blood and skin affections. CHAS. HORSTMAN.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of one hundred eighteen & 85-100 dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John P. Gonigam and Lizzie V. Gonigam, his wife, Mortgagors, to Matilda Meckenstock, Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th day of January, 1905, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February, 1905, at 4 o'clock P. M., in Book 29 of Mortgages, on page 634.

And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage.

And Whereas, the said Matilda Meckenstock, the mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred, Seventy Four and 75-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of Six per cent per annum, from the 23rd day of June, 1909 including delinquent taxes paid by said mortgagee, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section nine (9), in Township One Hundred and Fifty (150), North Range Forty-four (44) west of the Fifth principal Meridian, and in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake county at the front door of the Post Office, in the City of Red Lake Falls in said County and State, on the 7th day of August, 1909, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $2374.75 and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 23, A. D. 1909.

HIS WIFE'S PRISONER

By AGNES HUNTINGTON.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

Mr. and Mrs. Owens returned from the theater at 11 o'clock. They found the light in the hall turned low, as they had left it, and, leaving it so for the night, as was their custom, went upstairs. They had barely turned up the gas on the second floor when they heard a sound below. Mr. Owens descended the staircase to learn the cause and at the bottom met a man.

"Who are you, and what are you doing here?" asked Mr. Owens.

The man put his finger to his lips. "Be quiet," he said in a whisper. "There are burglars in the house."

"But you—how did you get in?"

"I am a policeman in plain clothes. I came in through the same window as the burglars."

Mrs. Owens, fearing some danger to her husband, followed him downstairs and asked what was the matter.

"Burglars," whispered her husband.

"Great heavens! We shall all be murdered."

"Not while I'm here, madam," said the policeman, "and if you'll only keep quiet I'll bag them all. Go upstairs and leave them to me."

Mrs. Owens ran upstairs as fast as she could go. Mr. Owens would have remained below to assist in the capture, but his wife called him and threatened to go down again if he didn't come up. The policeman told him to go and keep her quiet. So Mr. Owens followed his wife upstairs and into her bedroom, where she locked him in with her and took the key out of the lock.

Mr. Owens remained comparatively passive for some ten minutes, occasionally listening. Hearing muffled sounds below and not liking the idea of the contemptible position he occupied, he demanded the key of the bedroom door of his wife, that he might go down to see what was going on and take part in it if necessary. Mrs. Owens, terror stricken at such an event and fearing that her husband would take the key by force, rushed to the window, lifted the sash and threw the key out. Mr. Owens uttered an exclamation of dissatisfaction, but could do nothing. He was locked in.

Under such circumstances one will often do something ridiculous. Mr. Owens leaned out of the window and looked down through the gloom for the key. He heard in a stage whisper from below "Hist!"

"Who are you?" asked Owens.

"A neighbor of yours. I think there are burglars in your house."

"There are, but there is a plain clothes man after them."

"Aren't you going down to help?"

"I'd like to, but my wife objects."

"H'm! I don't think my wife would keep me upstairs with burglars in the house."

"Nor mine either if I could help myself. She locked the door and threw the key out of the window. I wish you would look for it and toss it back."

"Not I. If you should get shot your wife would never forgive me."

"What the dickens am I to do? I'm locked up here like a kid in a nursery. What a pickle for a full grown man! If you don't mind I'd like you to go in and see the condition of things."

"No, thanks. I've got a wife and five kids at home. I'm not going to buck up against the revolvers of professional burglars to save the property of those who lock themselves in. Besides, if the police are on to the matter there's no need of any one else taking it up. Good night. I'm going home. I just thought I'd step over and tell you my suspicions."

This dialogue was carried on in quick whispers between the two men, the neighbor being almost invisible. The neighbor disappeared. Then, after it was too late, Owens thought that he might have asked him to telephone the police for assistance for the single plain clothes man who was trying to capture the gang below. But he was under excitement and not able to think clearly.

An hour passed and Mr. Owens was still a prisoner. Then he heard footsteps below as of several men passing out of the place.

"Hello!" called a voice.

"Well?" asked Mr. Owens.

"We got 'em."

"Did you? That's good."

"We're taking 'em off to the station now. You'll be wanted in the morning to appear against 'em."

"All right. I'll be there. Say, would you mind looking around down there for a key and tossing it up to me?"

"Of course I will."

The light in a dark lantern was uncovered and moved about under the window. After a few minutes' search the key was found and tossed up to Mr. Owens.

"Good night," said the man. "Don't forget to be at the station tomorrow at 10. You'd better go right downstairs and lock up."

"Are you sure," called Mrs. Owens, "that you've got all the burglars?"

"Well, there might be some of 'em hidden somewhere. Better take a gun."

This settled it for Mr. Owens. His wife snatched the key from him and threw it again out of the window. It was 3 o'clock in the morning when, refusing any longer to remain a prisoner, he made a rope ladder of the bedclothes and descended to the ground. He had no trouble getting into the house, for the front door was wide open. He entered to find the premises ransacked.

The man he had met in the hall was a burglar, and the man who had played neighbor was on watch for the gang.

Her feet today.

THE PROCRASTINATOR.

We dilly dally all the day
In idleness and song,
And then we wonder why it is
We do not get along,
And when the day is at a close
We idle half the night,
And still we cannot comprehend
Why things don't work out right.

We sit serenely in the sun
And whittle on a stick
Or tune our little light guitar
And simple music pick,
And when the day comes to an end
In looking at the score
Discover we are only where
We were the day before.

We make resolves as to our rest
We tumble in at night
That on the day that's just ahead
We'll work with all our might,
And when the morrow comes along
We quite forget to try,
And it resembles to a T
The one that's just gone by.

And so we run our life along
In planning to succeed,
And if we drag a living out
In luck we are indeed,
And at the end we lay us down
While eons roll away
And rest as sweetly as the ones
Who labored every day.

Just for a change try filling apples which have been cored ready for baking with orange marmalade or raisins and a little butter and sugar. The result is delicious.

Hard boiled eggs, chopped and covered with a not too rich white sauce that is seasoned with curry, the eggs and dressing served in a ring of boiled rice, is an excellent dinner entree or luncheon dish.

Forestry and Fire Wardens.

Chapter 22 of the Revised Laws of Minnesota, 1905, entitled "Forestry and fire wardens," requires the Forestry Commissioner to prepare an abstract of the penal laws relating to forest and prairie fires and he may require any county board to cause at least three weeks published notice thereof to be given. The following is accordingly hereby published:

STATE OF MINNESOTA.
Office of Forestry Commissioner.
St. Paul, April 15, 1909.

The law of Minnesota for preventing and suppressing forest and prairie fires, as amended by Chapter 182, Laws of 1909, makes town supervisors, town clerks, village presidents, and mayors of cities fire wardens, and requires them to take precautions against such fires, report them promptly, and prosecute offenders.

THE LAW FORBIDS

Setting fires and not extinguishing it before it endangers the property of another.

Throwing or dropping burning substance into combustible material without extinguishing same.

Starting camp-fire without clearing ground within a radius of ten feet.

Setting fire to brush or slashings or other combustible material in a dry season, or allowing fire to be burning or smouldering in such season.

Those who cut timber or wood to sell must pile the slashings and burn the same as soon as practicable, and when it can be done without danger, and before the first of May.

Rangers may be appointed in a dry and dangerous season.

Railroad companies must keep their right of ways clear of combustible material, extinguish fires that occur near their lines of roads, also patrol their roads in dangerous weather. The master mechanic and locomotive engineer, as well as the company, are responsible for the efficiency of spark arresters.

The minimum penalty for violation of any of the provisions of this law is $50; the maximum penalty, $100 and three months imprisonment in jail.

C. C. ANDREWS.
Forestry Commissioner.

LURE OF THE BUNGALOW IS WORKING ITS SPELL

Makes Its Strongest Appeal to Those Who Love Summer Comfort.

The lure of the bungalow is now exercising its sway.

Vacation that used to mean a long trip across the ocean or to the mountains now spells to many a change of residence from the city home to the little one story cottage at seashore or mountain.

With the flowers of spring comes the impulse to trek from the city, and make a way to the rustic surroundings where trolley cars nor railroad trains never come to disturb the sweet comfort of the man who has spent eight months of the year in the turmoil of the city.

The bungalow is lulling to the soul. It is a kind of residence that produces the ideal vacation spirit, and in increasing numbers the wealth of the nation is turning to little places that once would have been thought inadequate.

The bungalow is the newest word in rusticity, it is the closest mankind comes to getting next to the soil. It is the call of Mother Nature to get him away from bricks and asphalt, from elevators and telephones.

Therefore the bungalow, which throws form to the winds, and which does nothing more than provide a rambling collection of rooms of all sizes and plans, made an instant hit with those who like a little originality even in the plan of their residence.

Something Worth While.

For one thing the bungalow brings the porch into its own, and this is something worth while, especially in the good old summer time when only by getting in the open can the full advantage of a breeze be reaped.

In the ideal bungalow, the house is all porch, it runs front and back, right and left. When there is a half-story it has a gabled roof so that all the upper chambers have most attractive and funny sloping and cornered ceilings.

Often the side porch extensions are taken into the house and made rooms with casement windows, the back is made to correspond with the front, with gabled roof and dormer windows, and the first thing the architect knows he has built a house which is the very last word in warm weather happiness.

He walks from his bathroom across a couple of feet of hall, and he is at the table.

Then he wants to sit down and read his paper, and once more the whole operation is made possible merely by a transit of the same floor out on to the porch which surrounds all parts of the house, and where at all times some shady spot is possible, for there never was yet a sun so malignant that it could be on all sides of a bungalow at the same time.

Many of those who though possessed of modest means still have the bungalow habit go away for the summer months to their bungalow without taking help.

For these the construction of the house is an unalloyed joy.

Stair Climbing Cut Out.

Mother doesn't have to run up and down stairs to get the baby, to make the beds, to perform a thousand and one household duties that consume her attention while at home. The same plan, the one floor idea, is her comfort and consolation for being without a maid.

Many a woman who has spent the summer months in a bungalow comes back to a normally constructed residence in such a frame of mind that she is never happy until her abiding place the year around has been put through on bungalow lines.

This is one of the reasons why all over the country the bungalow idea is making its way even for city homes.

An Ideal Modern Bungalow.

Yet it is not an invitation to rough it, for the wisdom of those who plan the bungalows has seen to it that not all comfort is sacrificed, so there are a host of those conveniences of life that are essential to happiness or pretty nearly so.

Bungalow Has First Call.

Once seekers for vacations used to talk of shore cottages, of Italian villas and of colonial mansions, but today, especially in the month of June, it is the bungalow that above all kinds of dwellings comes into the mind of the family with wealth enough to look for a little relief from the rigors of the summer months.

Bungalow is a term that is Indian in derivation. It was applied originally to the little one-story house that was to be found in the Bengal district of India.

It had its growth in the natural climatic conditions of the country. It was a rambling building that never got above one story and a half, and often only one story.

The architecture was simplicity personified, but Europeans who came to the country, found this kind of a dwelling a welcome variation from the towering buildings at home, and gradually the bungalow began to come into favor in other parts of the world than that from which it sprang.

It was of course peculiarly adapted for a warm weather residence, being the child of a country where the mercury is ever trying to burst its way out of the bulb via the top.

The home in the new world, the common residence planned in the precise mind of the carpenter was ever square. It was built on a square plot of ground, the house was square, the rooms were square, the garden was square, the steps square. Any

The bungalow is not always the modest little affair that the fiction of the real estate man represents it to be. Up in New England they have a habit of saying that a bungalow which costs more than $300 is extravagance, and there are undoubtedly many which have been built within that figure.

But by way of contrast there are bungalows which have eight rooms and cost as much as $5,000.

In the mind of the man with a is a bungalow beside a river, preferably with a den that looks out over the waves, affording constantly beautiful pictures, whether the waters are dimpling in the summer sun or are dark and mysterious in the rays of the moonlight.

Artistic and Poetic.

The bungalow by the river suggests something artistic and poetic. The imaginative can think of Stevenson in such a home, or Shelley or Byron writing great prose or poetry. Eliminating all the snobbery and the pose that often mars one's admiration for those who live in bungalows, and scorn those who do not, there is an artistic atmosphere surrounding one of these structures. This is in part the fascination.

But there is a practical utility to the place, too.

Here for the first time is emancipation from the need of climbing up and down stairs.

When father wants to shave he walks from his sleeping room to the bathroom on the same floor, and there removes his surplus beard.

To eat his breakfast, he has no climb down stairs, no descending ride in an elevator.

Especially is this the case in the South. All over in cities of new growth, like Dallas or Houston, Tex.; Savannah, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; the bungalow is seen in increasing numbers. Along the beautiful avenues leading out to its suburbs, New Orleans has a host of bungalows, row after row along palm lined streets, and the new comfort that has been attained by the use of these homes has had the effect of producing a great real estate movement, for many who were never content to live in the city during the warm months now find they can do so in comparative comfort.

The lure of the bungalow is like love, thoughts turn to it in June, only unlike the tender passion young and old of both sexes, in addition to young men, find themselves under the fascination.

The Newest Word in Rusticity is the Bungalow.

COLOMBIA AND SPAIN.

What One Citizen of the Republic Says His Country's Flag Means.

There is no love lost between the fervid Colombian and the Castilian. That feeling crops up all the time. It never was better expressed than by a citizen of Colombia who was describing the flag of his republic.

It is a flag in three colors, broad horizontal stripes of gold, red and blue, in that order. The band of gold is as wide as the two other bands taken togther. In the center of the flag is an oval bearing a star.

"That flag typifies our feeling toward Spain. The gold is the golden shore of Colombia. The blue is the ocean dividing us from the bloody strand of Spain. The oval and star mean merely one people, free from Spain's aggressions.'

Services on a Church Tower.

The Rev. J. Enraght, vicar of Ranworth (Norfolk), and the church choir mounted to the top of the church tower and there offered prayers and sang hymns and psalms, invoking the Almighty's blessing upon the growing crops.

Despite the altitude of the tower and a good breeze, every word was audible to the congregation assembled in the church yard below and on the road.

They Go Together.

"Use headwork," urged the manager of the department store.

"Yes, sir," said the salesman.

"For instance, if a lady buys lawn it ought to be easy to sell her some hose."

SYSTEMATIC CROP ROTATION

Wheat is the most sustaining food grain of the Caucasian race, comprising the inhabitants of Europe, North America and the white people of South America, Asia, Africa and Australia. The average consumption is estimated at four and one-half bushels per capita yearly.

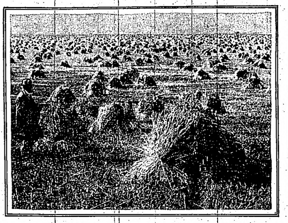
The United States is decidedly the most important wheat growing country in the world. The next in importance is Russia. In 1904, '05 and '06, fairly normal years, the crop of the world averaged 3,300,000,000 bushels. This was an increase of 28 per cent in ten years.

The consumption of wheat has been increasing faster than the population; and notwithstanding the increased production, we have again a period of unusually high prices.

For the five years, 1903-7, the United States produced an average of 650,000,000 bushels.

move westward, and begin the process of soil robbery anew.

Land that has been cropped with wheat for many years is not necessarily infertile and permanently unproductive because of such cropping. Continuous wheat culture quickly reduces the supply of organic matter in the soil, and therefore injures its mellowness and water-holding capacity, properties which are essential in a grain-growing soil. The most available elements of mineral plant food are also rapidly exhausted by wheat, and the crop having also exhausted the organic matter of the soil, the conditions essential to soil decay are impaired, and the production of new supplies of mineral plant food in the soil is checked. Soils that have been brought to this condition may be renovated and made extremely productive again by intelligent schemes of crop rotation, use of live stock and soil tillage.



Acres of Wheat Ready for the Thresher.

Wheat is sown somewhere in the world every month, and the harvest is practically continuous the year around. The Argentine crop is reaped in December, the Australian a little later. India harvests in March. Cutting of wheat in the United States proceeds from May to September, and when Canada is through Argentina is about ready to begin again.

Wheat farming in a majority of the wheat-producing regions of the United States is still carried on in a slothful and careless manner. It is the type of agriculture that is followed by the farmer with the least ability and business capacity. His knowledge of agriculture is usually less than that of any other class of farmers, excepting perhaps the tenant farmers of the South; and so long as nature's bounty, in the form of soil fertility, lasts, he prospers. Then when the soil loses its readily available fertility, when noxious weeds choke the grain, and insect pests are rampant, the common proceeding of the wheat farmer is to

It is to be hoped that the present wheat lands of the United States can be utilized for wheat production for many generations to come; but this can be done only by making wheat alternate with other field crops in the scheme of cropping, instead of growing the crop continuously until the land must undergo a period of renovation before it is again productive. If systems of agriculture could be instituted on all the soils of the United States in which the grain, grass and cultivated crops were alternated, the fertility of our soils could be indefinitely maintained. As agriculture is now practices, however, one region produces a large acreage of one crop to which it is peculiarly fitted at the present time, and some other region another crop. Thus in many regions fertility is not conserved, but rapidly exhausted, and the intensive systems of agriculture which prevail in the eastern part of the United States build up the eastern soils at the expense of the fertility of the West.

JAPS AND THE CZAR'S STAMPS

Among our good neighbors, the Japanese, nothing is wasted; out of all and everything they endeavor to extract benefit. Thus, for example, during the Russo-Japanese war the Japanese secured more than 1,500,000 rubles worth of Russian postage and revenue stamps abandoned by us in various postoffices, branches thereof, and sundry other establishments. Now the enterprising Japanese are trying to dispose of these stamps among Russians.

For this purpose they have special agents who offer them to Russian arrivals for half their value. A certain Caucasian, also of an enterprising turn of mind, proceeding to Japan on business, encountered one of these agents at Yokohama and tempted by easy gain bought various stamps valued at 2,200 rubles for 1,000 rubles only. The stamps were succesfully conveyed to Vladivostok, but unhappily the agents of the detective force got wind of the affair.

One of these agents visited the Caucasian in the guise of a stamp purchaser, and in order not to rouse suspicion and for greater verisimilitude laid some money on the table. When the "merchant" left the room for the stamps the signal was given to the ambuscade ,and no sooner had the owner returned than the agent met him revolver in hand and arrested him on the spot with his wife and confiscated the stamps. When it appeared that the stamps were really Russian the prisoner was released after three days' detention.

It is reported that the money will be returned to him, but that the stamps will remain for the benefit of the exchequer. It is said that in the case of a big buyer of these stamps the Japanese offer to land him safely on Russian territory with his booty in a torpedo boat or special steamer, but whether or not this offer has yet been accepted is unknown.

The Colonel's Hinted Wrath.

He was a fine type of the old Southern colonel, the fiery scion of a race of cavaliers. Also, he was exceedingly wrathy. He had just received a letter from a man, "a low soht of puhson, suh, I assuah you," which displeased him immensely, and he was debating inwardly how best to convey to his vulgar correspondent an adequate expression of his (the colonel's) opinion of him. But his stenographer was a lady. The colonel snorted, made two or three false starts, and finally dictated: "Sir—My stenographer, being a lady, cannot transcribe what I think of you. I, being a gentleman, cannot think of it. But, you, being neither, will readily undestand what I mean."

Sorry He Spoke.

Suffragette—What is a party without women?

Mere Man (flippantly)—A stag party.

Suffragette—Exactly. And what, sir, would this nation be without women but stagnation.

Heard in a Restaurant.

Village Smithy—Well, yes, I reckon as how I've had a perfectly calking time durin' th' past week or so.

Traveler—Can I go through to Chicago without change?

Ticket Agent—Not comfortably, madam. You should have a little tip to the porter.

"NUMBER 321"

By LUCY BAKER JEROME

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

He had been sentenced for three years, and now they were ended. Thrice during those three years his wife had come to him. Once she had brought Barton. She was coming today, he remembered. He wondered if Barton would come as well.

The prison bell clanged six. Precisely on the last stroke of the trembling monster the huge iron gates swung slowly inward, the figure of a man slouched through, keeping step to a soundless rhythm, and the gates clashed behind him, with a vibrating sweep that sent the blood racing through his veins.

"Molly! Molly!" he exclaimed, wildly. "At last! All these years, and now—"

He drew back at the chill touch of her lips.

"What is it?" he instinctively asked.

The man in the background held out his hand.

"Well, Fraser," he said heartily, "glad to see you, old chap. Not quite up to the mark, are you?" he added sympathetically; "but we'll soon make that right."

For an instant the old Fraser appeared through the prison mask. He involuntarily straightened himself, and his eyes sought his wife's.

"Thanks, Barton," he said quietly. Then, with a tender ring in his voice—

"Aren't you glad, Molly?" he asked beseechingly.

"Of course, Jim," answered Molly quietly. "Why shouldn't I be glad when my husband is free from prison walls?"

"But, Molly," he stammered, "you—you speak so oddly!"

"Do I?" She laughed a little. "It's your imagination, Jim. Let's sit down on this rock a while. I'm so tired," she added drearily.

"Jim!"

He looked at her with close attention. Barton's figure was visible rounding a headland a few feet away.

"You're a little pulled down, Molly, dear, but we'll have you right again in no time," he said cheerfully. "Now that I'm free to use my brains once more, you and Margie sha'n't want for anything. How is Margie?" he suddenly asked.

"She's well," his wife answered listlessly.

His wife kept her eyes fixed on a tuft of yellow daisies at her feet. Her voice was very low.

"Where are you going, Jim?"

"Where am I going!" He stared at her in amazement. "Why, home, of course. Molly, what's the matter with you?"

She sprang to her feet and faced him fiercely, her loosened hair blowing in the wind.

"You're not coming to my home!" she cried, a bitter, concentrated ring of rage in her clear tones. "You're not coming to mine! Do you think, James Fraser, that I've toiled and slaved all these years that you might have a comfortable place in which to throw off your prison fetters at your leisure? Do you think that this shame and disgrace mean nothing to me—the knowledge that our name is blighted, and that, wherever we go, we are likely to be pointed at and scorned? Do you think I can brush this knowledge aside, as I would brush away a fly? Do you think I have enjoyed slaving ten hours a day, with this remembrance raging at my heart and brain! And what does your coming out mean to me," she cried shrilly, her eyes aflame and her bosom heaving. "It means ruin—ruin. Margie and I have moved. People where we are now don't know you. They don't even know that I have a husband! They respect us, and now our lives will be ruined for the second time, and—by your hand!"

At her first words Fraser had sprung up like a man shot through the heart. He swayed as he stood leaning heavily against the rock.

"Molly!" he gasped. "You never said—"

"No, I never said anything," she interrupted. "It's been eating my heart out, and you never even suspected it. I never can live with you again," she said coldly. Her eyes repelled him.

She extracted a shabby pocketbook from her dress, and with shaking fingers undid the fastenings. "I have brought you some money," she said shortly. "I do this, as I have done all the rest, because you were once my husband, and because I still bear your name, but now I have done my duty, and this is the end of it." She extended the money rigidly.

He tossed it contemptuously over the rock. The beautiful virgin sky had suddenly grown dark. With a fierce pang, he felt a wild rush of longing for the solitude of his prison cell. At this moment his wife seemed less a woman to him than a disturbing element in his long-cherished plans. He flushed darkly. To wait three years—for this!

He crossed over and laid one arm on her bowed shoulders.

"Molly," he said huskily, "Molly, you don't know what you're saying—you don't know what you're doing. There hasn't been an hour in the day or night that I haven't been planning for you and Margie. My God! You knew I was innocent—you knew I didn't take the money. What if all the others believed me guilty! You knew—you didn't doubt me!" He stooped entreatingly. His eyes besought her.

"Come, Moll," he said gently, "let us go home."

She looked at the blue vault above, where the stars were beginning to tremble. The croak of the crickets came shrilly to her ears.

'I can't," she said somberly—"I can't. Every stitch that I put into that hateful coarse sewing seemed to take me farther away from you. Oh!" she suddenly cried out, "let me go! Let me go!" She twisted her hands convulsively. "You don't know—you can't understand!"

The man was trembling like a wounded animal. With a miserable gesture he raised his torn hat as he stumbled blindly away.

"Good heavens!" he ejaculated. "Where's he going?"

"He's going out of my existence," replied Molly simply.

Molly stood at bay. She knew Barton well enough to divine how her attitude would affect him, and she hesitated to reveal it. Already, in her mind, little clouds of doubt were forming. In these three years Barton had been her friend and stay, the sustaining, helpful figure in the foreground of her existence. At this juncture, half unconsciously, she looked to him. Her eyes were imploring, but Barton affected not to observe it. She answered him desperately:

"We—I don't think Jim and I are suited to each other any more," she said miserably.

Barton was honestly shocked.

"He's your husband," said Barton sternly, hurt that his unacknowledged ideal of womanhood could be found wanting. "I don't know anything about a woman's love," he said bitterly, "but I know how a man would feel," he added, his pity for his friend carrying him away.

"You don't understand—you don't know," she said convulsively. "I don't love him any longer. I wish I did—I wish I did!" she repeated in agony

"Poor Jim—poor old fellow!" said Barton regretfully, the sympathy in his voice goading her to despair. He seated himself on an adjacent rock and began thoughtfully punching holes in the turf with his stick. He did not meet her eyes.

"I remember," he said reflectively, "something Jim once said to me that time you were so ill. He was pretty white, and his eyes had the same hurt look I saw in them to-day. 'Barton,' he said, 'if my wife dies, it's all up with me'—and I could hear him saying that for a week afterwards; and when you were out of danger the whole office knew it, just by the glorified look on his face."

He cast a quick glance at the motionless figure by the rock, but her hands were clinched, and she did not answer.

"And when Margie was born," Barton went on, "there wasn't anything good enough for that little morsel. He used to stand worrying the fruit peddlers merely because they hadn't got an apple big enough and red enough and round enough to dangle before her eyes. I suppose," he went on, interrogatively, "you remember that big fire on Main street about six years ago? It was all in the papers, of course, and, well—the fireman whose life Jim saved by that leap into a blazing hell thinks a good deal of Jim even yet. I don't know that you ever heard," he resumed, softly, "what were Jim's first words as soon as he could speak. 'Don't tell Molly,' he said, gently, and when you did come he tried to hide his burned hands so as not to frighten you."

His glance wandered down the lonely road. Silent and empty, it stretched away into the gloom of the gathering night. In the stillness they heard the solitary plashing of the waves. He rose and faced Molly doubtfully.

"Shall we go now, Mrs. Fraser?" he politely asked. "We can make the 8:15."

She broke down with a little cry. The next instant she was running swiftly down the road.

"Jim!" she called, eagerly. "Jim!" Her voice floated over the darkening reach of water. Barton, in the distance, saw her stumble, fall, recover herself, and press hurriedly forward. On and on she sped, peering into every clump of bush searching behind great bowlders, straining her eyes over the dusty road which lay before her, white and bare. Molly felt that her heart was bursting. Oh, if God would only forgive her, and let her find Jim before (the thought was agony) it might be too late!

Then she turned the corner and saw him. He was coming quickly toward her, and the light of a great gladness in his tired eyes.

Mother-Love Defined.

What is maternal instinct? Is it a tangible something, or is it love, the desire to protect? This wonderful mother-love—what would it not do? Suns rise and set just for baby. Conversation on other subjects is taboo in the house where a new monarch reigns. The four walls of the home are suddenly glorified with the presence of the little newcomer; the ambition of both father and mother reaches its zenith. Pleasureable pastimes we were wont to indulge in are forgotten; pursuits that filled our life, music, art literature, things that were part of us, associated with our very name—where have they gone? All laid aside as of no moment now; in the future, perhaps, when "baby" is not so dependent on our every thought, we will again feel their charm. Just now they might as well never have been—so completely do we give ourselves to this new life.

This is maternal instinct.—Uncle Sam's Magazine.

THIRD OPERATION PREVENTED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Chicago, Ill. — "I want to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me. I was so sick that two of the best doctors in Chicago said I would die if I did not have an operation. I had already had two operations, and they wanted me to go through a third one. I suffered day and night from inflammation and a small tumor, and never thought of seeing a well day again. A friend told me how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped her, and I tried it, and after the third bottle was cured." — Mrs. ALVENA SPERLING, 11 Langdon Street, Chicago, Ill.

If you are ill do not drag along at home or in your place of employment until an operation is necessary, but build up the feminine system, and remove the cause of those distressing aches and pains by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has positively restored the health of thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

The recently imposed rulethat no lawyer shall solicit business either personally or by 'runners" in the corridors of the city policecourt has caused many funny incidents recently.

I overheard a violent quarrel outside the second sessions between a young lawyer and a man whose case he had just tried and won.

"I'll not pay you a cent," answered the man finally. "You approached me n th ecorridor in front of the witnesses and asked me if I would like to have you try my case. The hat question again bobbed up at last night's session at Carnegi Music hall. Edward J. Ward, a social center worker of Rochester, N. "It is the real democracy of the group that I wish to emphasize," the speaker declared. "'You see all the women have their hats off and I want to tell you that a woman with her hat off is human."

The dog circled 'round and 'round his col'ed up snakeship just beyond striking distance, darting backward and forward as opportunity appeared to afford, until finallp the snake was caught off its guard, and grasping it back of the neck he shook it as aterrier would a rat. On examination it was found that the reptile's back was broken in three places.

Using a Life Preserver.

"The worst trouble about a life preserver," said an old sailor on the steamer L. C. Hanna not long ago," "is that few people know what to do with one when it's thrown to them. Many a man would drown in trying to get a life preserver over his head. The average person struggling about in the water should try to lift up the big life ring and put it over his head. That only causes the man to sink deeper and take more water into his lungs.

"The proper way to approach a life preserver in the water is to take hold of the side nearest you and press upon it with all your weight. That causes the further side to fly up in the air and down over your head, 'ringing' you as neatly as a man ringing a cane at a county fair. After that mister drowning man can be rescued."

BENNIE'S FOURTH OF JULY

By Mabel Jones-Bush.

BY MABEL JONES-BUSH.

Bennie's mother died when he was barely three. His father, never a competent man, was at his wit's end with end with two babies to "tend" and a living to make. Naturally a sad ending came to the unequal struggle. One day the man made a mistake in his work, which together with his record for many absences, accomplished his dismissal from the factory where he worked; then Bennie and his brother went to the orphanage.

When Bennie was just entering his teens he seemed old enough and big enough to do work for the farmers on neighboring farms. First it was only light chores, like carrying water to the men in the fields and gathering the eggs and running errands; but soon he was doing harder work, each succeeding year staying longer away from the orphanage till finally he did not return at all, his employer at the time sending word to the officials of the institution that he thought he could find work for Bennie the year around. This employer had other plans for Bennie; he had heard of a farmer many miles away to the north who was willing to pay $1.50 a week as well as "board and keep" for a good, strong boy, so he shipped poor Bennie off, as he would a cow or a horse, without consulting him at all, pocketed the money, and reported to the orphanage only the name of the man to whom he had sent the boy.

In his new place Bennie had every chance to test the truth of the adage, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," for he was not given an opportunity to learn anything more than how to work—and work hard. Had he shown any disposition to read bout the great world about him, he could not well have done so because there were few books in his new home, and he was kept so busy from early morning till late at night that when the last stroke of work was done he was just able to tumble into bed.

About the only pleasures Bennie had were "house raisings" and "apple parings," at the neighbors, and these came few and far between.

Such times as these were oases in Bennie's hard life. To be sure, Bennie had enough to eat, and his clothes were warm, though queer-looking and coarse; but plenty to eat and warm clothes, and the very few good times of the "apple bearings" were not much relief to an overworked boy.

Then Bennie had another trouble. Farmer John Brison, Bennie's master, whom everybody called "Ol' John," had three sons who made it their main object in life to make Bennie miserable. When they shirked work, Bennie had to do a double share. When they made mistakes, it was Bennie's fault. Mrs. Brison was as hard as her husband. On every occasion she excused her sons and blamed Bennie when anything went wrong. Why not? He was only a "bound boy." This remark, made often in Bennie's presence, always hurt him. He never knew what answer to make, but just wondered idly if he was always to be a "bound boy," and sometimes the thought made him savage inside.

One particular summer when Bennie was about sixteen, he had an experience. For two or three days prior to the Fourth of July he heard people talking about the "Fourth." He asked Sam, one of Farmer Brisons' sons, "What Fourth?" Sam stared and then shouted "Why, the Fourth." Then he knocked off Bennie's hat and took to his heels shouting, "What Fourth! What Fourth! He wants to know what Fourth!"

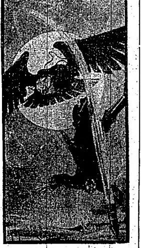
Afterwards, while milking, Bennie caught portions of a conversation between "Ol' John" and one of the neighbors; something about, "how many are going to the picnic," "one long table for everybody," "the flag drill the teacher has gotten up," and "speeches," and then as the neighbor climbed into his wagon and started away, he heard, "Of course you will all stay for the fireworks. They're goin' to be better than ever this year."

Something in what the farmers said and the tones of their voices stirred Bennie. He knew that something great was going to happen. Picking up his pail, he hurried so fast and so eagerly to ask Farmer Brison what it was all about that he stumbled and spilled half of the foamy milk, receiving a curse instead of the knowledge he wanted. Later he asked the farmer's wife, but she was so fretful over the loss of so much "strippins" that her replies were somewhat vague.

"Why, yes, to be sure, the Fourth's a holiday. Everybody's supposed to have a good time on the Fourth. (Now I won't have as much A number 1 butter as Mrs. Reid). What, don't you know?. Why, the Father of His Country, he freed the United States on the Fourth. He freed us all (I had four pounds last week) from the tyrant English—with his hatchet, you know, or I guess that was before, and he never told a lie, did George Washington, and Bennie, you ought to copy him, and not tell so many lies, though, to be sure, you are only a 'bound boy.' (I wonder if Mary Reid will be at our end of the table. If not, she will never know). Oh, long, long ago; everybody celebrates it. Run along, now, and don't bother.'

But Bennie now had the key to what he had been hearing for the past week. It was all new and strange to him. He remembered a boy at the Home called George Washington Simons, who was named, they said, for the very first president. He had a dim recollection, too, of one day in the summer when nobody worked, and it was never too hot to eat lots of cake and things. Now, somehow, he had got the idea that it meant that on that day everybody was free to have a good time.

That evening before the Fourth Sam shot off a whole bunch of firecrackers behind the barn, and it made Bennie's heart leap. He wouldn't be a "bound boy" tomorrow. Every American boy would be free.



When he helped Mrs. Brison carry out to the carry-all the basket filled with the good things that boys like, he had on no "best clothes," but his face was shining from an application of soap and towel and the anticipation of almost heavenly pleasure. He had just set the basket down when Sam poked him in the ribs with his thumb and said:

"Huh, you ain't goin'."

He thought Sam was only joking. The family were all seated in the carry-all and Bennie was about to hop in when Farmer Brison, taking up the whip and the lines, looked back at Bennie over his shoulder and said,

"Look after them cattle today, and see that they git water and don't git through that hole in the fence. You better keep an eye on the house, too."

Mrs. Brison added, "I left you a bite in the kitchen," and then with a "G'lang, Bess," the carry-all drove away.

Bennie could hardly believe his ears. Not go when it was a holiday for everybody! Why, he had worked harder than any one to get to go.

Bennie sat down on the front doorsteps and wondered what he should do, and the sun found him there two hours later when it rose high and hot in the heavens. Then he wandered out on the road, then back into the yard and into the fields. The day was hot with a dry, prickly heat from which there was no rest. The stubble in the fields bruised his bare feet.

With lagging steps at noon tide he made his way to the house, where, removing the red tablecloth that covered the "bite" prepared for him by the farmer's wife, he set to work eating his lonely dinner. The pie was good, and he ate as heartily of it as if he had never had a disappointment. The meal satisfied him to some extent, and, thinking of the long lonely afternoon, he wandered into the hayfield and lay down for a nap on the shady side of a haystack. As he lay there, looking with half-closed eyes across the fields everything seemed quaking with the heat, and overhead a buzzard was slowly sailing. He slipped a little lower, his hat sinking farther over his face, so that all that he could see under the brim was the buzzard. How far it could go with but one flap of its wings! He wondered what it had espied now, for it was circling immediately over him and coming closer and closer. How funny its head and beak, and how much quicker it seemed to move than at first. Why, he had never seen that kind of a buzzard! Then, as it made one last, long sweep about him, he saw that it was an eagle, and then he settled on the hay so close to him he believed he could reach out his hand and touch it. He tried, and sure enough it was within reach and it winked at him. Bennie had heard of American eagles. He would find out if this was one.

"Are you the American eagle?"

"Sure," responded the bird, "and what are you doing here? Don't you know this is the day we jollify, the boys and I? What do you mean staying home asleep on the Fourth of July? Aren't you proud of your country? Don't you remember George Washington and how he licked the British and set us free? Don't you like fun? Why, I declare you are about the only boy in America that would go to sleep on a haystack on the Fourth of July!"

Bennie almost stuttered in his eagerness to say that he didn't mean to be unpatriotic.

"I—I—wanted to go—I never knew before—I got all ready, and I worked hard too, but—"

The eagle's face was so sharp and comical looking that Bennie could not keep from grinning, then he added:

"I just wish I had half a chance now."

The eagle edged his way close over to the boy, and before you could say "Jack Robinson" and, without Bennie being able to understand how it ever happened the boy was astride of the bird, and away the two went in great sweeps up into the heavens. And yet Bennie didn't scared. It seemed the most natural thing in the world. They were going, he knew not where. The first time he looked down he saw that they were hovering over a town on the outskirts of which he espied a long table where it seemed that hundreds of people had been eating. Great crowds were in a grove near by, and some one was standing on a platform throwing his arms and shouting till Bennie could almost hear the words. Bands were playing, flags were flying everywhere, and everybody was happy. Bennie himself could not help getting hilarious, whether it was because he caught the spirit of the people beneath him, or because of the rare atmosphere in which he was floating. First he chuckled to himself, then he laughed and then he shouted. The bird seemed to catch the spirit of the occasion and made grand sweeps down until Bennie could see Farmer Brison and his family and all the people, and he noted that nobody seemed to be as happy as he was himself. Then the eagle wheeled as though the whole world was spread out beneath him. He could see lights glimmering here and there below as the evening came on, which were answered by the stars that stole out one by one and seemed to twinkle a welcome to him. At one place he saw a bonfire, and in the colors, red, white and blue that blazed near by, "Welcome all," while all about fountains of sparks rose into the air and rivers of fire ebbed and flowed lighting up the sky about him with colors of which he had never dreamed. Flowers of light grew from buds to full bloom before his wondering eyes. A flash of light shot across the heavens, a shout went up, and the eagle, swelling and spreading his wings, bore him up, till it seemed that he would touch the stars. Then, from a deep-toned cannon, huge balls of colors shot out and up and broke in a myriad of stars.

Thus Bennie sped on from town to town, over cities ablaze with splendor, his ears greeted with the shouting and the music from assembled thousands. And such music! Never before had he heard such sounds. Never had he known there was music like that. His heart beat, and before he knew it he was singing songs he had never sung before. He was so happy he could hardly keep his seat on his flying steed. A rocket burst above him, and as the stick descended he grabbed at it; the weight unseated him, and over he went still holding on to the stick, till, falling down, down, he struck Farmer Brison's haystack with a thud.

Then sitting up, holding his hat tight in his hand, he heard his name called. It was night, and old John Brison was cursing.

"Yes, sir. Yes, sir," he replied, "I'm here, I'll unharness the horses. I'll give them extra corn, too. Yes, I'll rub 'em down. I'm coming."

But Bennie had had the biggest kind of a Fourth of July and was happy.—The American Boy.

Annie Brown, a five-year-old Irish girl, has just reached Calgary after a journey of more than 5,000 miles made absolutely alone from start to finish. During the trip she was well cared for by passengers on boats and trains who became interested in her artless story of how she was going to Canada to meet her daddy, who preceded her eighteen months.

Annie's father, James Brown, is living on a homestead five miles south of Calgary and could not spare the time to cross the ocean to act as escort for his little girl. Consequently he decided to have her make the long journey alone.

DESERTS ARE MOUNTAINOUS

Last Sunday I witnessed a buffalo fight for the first time in my life. It was at Batu Baker, in Kedah, where such exhibitions are a matter of weekly occurence. The animals fought in an inclosure about 100 feet square and surrounded on every side by raised platforms for those of the spectators who care to pay for the sport.

Thousands of others packed themselves close in the arena itself—perilously close it seemed to me—and witnessed the fight. Sometimes, I am told, the spectators number as many as 10,000; on this occasion there were between 6,000 and 7,000 present.

Business began in earnest as soon as the combatants were loosed. Their heads came together with a thud, they separated, came together again and pushed and strained for an advantage. In all this wild pushing and straining one saw that the combatants were maneuvering to bring their horns into play. Again their heads came together, and this time the favorite worked one of his horns until the tip of it was well under his opponent's neck.

With a sudden jerk upward he lifted the other buffalo clean off his forefeet. Slowly he turned around almost a complete circle, his opponent meanwhile being impaled on one of his horns. Then his neck muscles relaxed and the other buffalo's forefeet found ground again.

At once the wounded animal snatched himself out of danger and managed to gore the favorite in the eye. Maddened with pain and rage, the favorite bore down his opponent with the sheer fury of his attack. The latter fled. The fight had lasted fifteen minutes.

He flees only to die. The owner of the victorious buffalo slaughters him, cuts him up, distributes the meat among his friends and sends the entrails, the muzzle, the tail and other parts of the animal to his previous owner. A quaint custom is observed. The owner of the loser fires off a gun as soon as he receives his "present" as an intimation that he will get another buffalo within the year to match the victor. The penalty should he not fulfill his words is $100, a like sum being handed over to him should the bull he challenged not be forthcoming to meet his new competitor.—Strait's Echo.

A Little Slip.

Rev. Mr. Spicer had for three days enjoyed the telephone which had been his last gift from an admiring parishioner. He had been using it immediately before going to church.

When the time came for him to announce the first hymn he rose, and with his usual impressive manner, read the words. Then in a crisp, firm tone, he said: "Let us all unite in hymn six double o, sing three."

DEATH OF NELS LUNDQUIST

Passed Away at Home in This City Tuesday Afternoon

Nels Lundquist, for many years a resident of this city, died Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Lundquist had been ill with consumption for the past two years.

Deceased was born at Boen Skone, Sweden, Oct. 26, 1850. He came to America in 1869 and since 1892 had been a resident of Red Lake Falls. For a number of years he was employed at the Red Lake Falls Milling company's plant. He is suvived by his widow and four children, two daughters and two sons. The children are Anna, Esther, Henry and George.

Funeral services were held from the home this afternoon.

SOME GOSSIP FROM THE STATE CAPITAL

Our New Special Correspondent Notes the Development of St. Paul.

St. Paul, July 5.

Recent developments indicate that St. Paul has by no means abandoned the ambitions capitol approach plan suggested some time ago. So far nothing has been really done in this direction beyond the acquirements of a plot of ground east of the capitol site, and lying directly between it and the old capitol. This is preliminary the step looking ultimately to the opening up of a wide mall or boulevard leading from the old to the new capitol, and it may be regarded as settled that, either with or without legislative aid, provis will be made for the completion of the undertaking.

An Ambitious Design.

That, however, is merely a part of the general scheme. Another part the state has already been committed to through appropriations made by the last previous legislature, namely the purchase of additional land for the capitol site in order to make the grounds more symmetrical and better to conform to the ideas of those who have conceived the general capitol approaches plan. When the land has been acquired for which appropriations have been made, the time will be ripe for the full exploitation of the completed scheme.

The Park Place Mall.

According to tentative plans prepared by Cass Gilbert this involves another mall to be opened through property now largely in private hands, from the capitol grounds to Seven Corners. In the old days, about midway along the course of the proposed wall, stood the Park Palace Hotel in the center of a block, forming one of the most attractive of the city's beauty spots. In the course of time the Park Palace Hotel burned down and the block was built up with smaller residence structures. Mr. Gilbert's suggestion is that this block be acquired by the city, by condemnation or otherwise, and formed into a public square in the center of which shall be erected a monument to the soldiers and sailors of the civil war. This will make a break in them all, the roadway sweeping around Monument Square. From the square to the capitol the mall is to be two hundred feet wide and from the square to the Seven Corners one hundred fifty feet. The boulevard on either side of the roadway will be planted with trees and possibly ornamented with shrubs and flowering plants.

The Completed Plan.

That the suggested improvements would greatly add to the scenic attractions of St. Paul and provide more fitting approaches to the beautiful structure owned by the state, there can be no doubt. But the even slight consideration of what has so far been proposed makes it clear that it is only part of a larger plan. To make it complete, at least two similar approaches from the west and the northwest will ultimately be necessary. St. Paul, now scracely more than fifty years of age, is still in the initial stage of development. Its residence district will ultimately be largely towards the west and north of the capitol; and no large stretch of imagination is needed to see University Avenue lined with busy retail stores. The residence as well as the business secton will in time doubtless demand that its interests be considered in any symmetrical plan for capitol approaches.

How to Get the Money.

The stumbling block in the way of carrying out the plans is naturally a financial one. Millions of money will be needed for the private property, most of which is now built up, it will be necessary to acquire. Millions more will be needed for the improvements it is proposed to make. As this would involve a greater burden than the people of St. Paul are willing to shoulder, the suggestion has been made that the interest of the state in the undertaking is sufficient to warrant its co-operation. That was the idea of those who two years ago suggested to the legislature the propriety of authorizing St. Paul to issue bonds for $5,000,000 to be used for capitol approaches, the state to pay the interest. Country members, however, did not take kindly to the proposal, and saw in it the intention that the state should ultimately be called upon to pay for the improvements, the benefits of which would inure to St. Paul and the owners of St. Paul property. While here it is admitted that the greater advantage will be local, it is nevertheless contended that, as the capitol of the state, and in view of the unquestioned improvement to the property of the state involving the capitol approaches plan, and in view too, of the large contribulations made to the revenues of the state by the city, greater by far than are paid back in appropriations for its benefits the citizens of St. Paul are fully warranted it assuming that it would be only fair that the state should aid in the project of capitol approaches.

Warning to Country Girls

There has been some local criticism, which seems to me unwarranted, of the steps taken by the Woman's Bureau of the State Labor Department to warn inexperienced country girls of the snares and pitfalls which await them in its larger cities and against temptations and allurements which are certain to assail them here. In this connection a local cartoonist has, in singularly bad taste, dpicted for the delectation of city readers of the morning paper what he assumes to be the popular conception of the average country girl who comes to St. Paul to look for work. She is sharpfeatured, hollow-cheeked, ill-dressed, homely and slovenly female who,

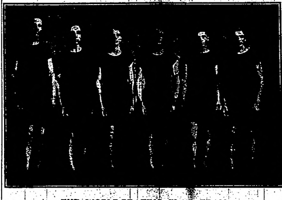
As is always the case when they participate in such events, the athletes of the Red Lake Falls fire department "covered themselves with glory" at the annual tournament of the Northwestern Firemen's Tournament association at Crookston Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 5, 6, and 7. The big event of the tournament was the establishment of a world's record by the Red Lake Falls flag team, when the local boys won the flag race in the phenominal time of 65 2-5 seconds. It was an extraordinary race and the performance of the six men of the Red Lake Falls team was wonderful, the exchange of the flag being absolutely perfect and the running time of each man phenominal. So accurate was the work of the Red Lake Falls boys that it seemed that not the smallest fraction of a second was lost in starting or passing the flag. The previous world's record was 66 seconds flat. For six men to run 600 yards, each man running 100 yards in the average time of less than 11 seconds, and passing the flag to a team-mate, is remarkable. The men in the team are Pete Beaulieu, Ernest Toupin, Harry Garceau, Theodore Garceau, W. S. Ericson and Verne Healy. The picture of the team on this page was taken some time ago, and shows the likeness of Harry Healy. His place was taken by his "little brother."



THE WORLD-BEATING FLAG TEAM

The RedLakeFalls athletes took either first or second place in all but two or three of the the races and contests of the tournament. They won the hub and hub race, running 150 yards with hose cart in 17 1-5 seconds. Warren was second, time 17 2-5. Crookston an Bemidji tied for third and divided the money. This was one of the most hotly contested races.

Crookston won in the association wet test in 27 1-5 seconds. Red Lake Falls was an easy second in 29 flat, Bemidji 36, Warren 40 4-5.

Red Lake Falls' loss of the association banner is possibly due to an accident. Crookston and Red Lake Falls tied for first place in 25 seconds flat. In running off the tie Red Lake Falls had a jammed coupling that put the team out of the runing, though the locals got second money. Ada took third money in 27 seconds.

The association hook and ladder race was an exciting one, Warren, Crookston and Red Lake Falls tying in 24 3-5 seconds. In running off the tie Warran and Crookston again tied and divided the money.

In the ladder climbing contest Pete Beaulieu of Red Lake Falls and Harry Schmidt of Crookston tied in 7 4-5 seconds. In the second attempt Schmidt won. A. A. Ekclund of Warren was third.

In the combination hook and ladder race Red Lake Falls won in 23 1-5 seconds, Crookston 2nd, with 27 2-5, Warren 3rd, with 27 3-5, and Bemidji 4th with 40 seconds.

In coupling contest, Dennis of Bemidji got first in 4 3-5 seconds. Schmidt of Crookston and Ecklund of Warren tied for second.

In the hundred yard dash Jos. Staska of Warren and Theodore Garceau of Red Lake Falls tied, running in 10 seconds flat. In running of the tie Staska got the race "by a nose."

Frank Jeffers, king rooter, and the Red Lake Falls Concert band went to Crookston Tuesday evening and assisted materially in the glad noises that kept the air of the Queely City vibrating yesterday and last night—some. The rooters, the band and the teams got home this morning, a tired and happy bunch. But don't ask them to say anything about it—above a whisper. They left all the noise at Crookston.

Ralph Converse Dead.

M. A. Converse has been at Cass Lake for several days, called there because of the illness of his brother, Ralph Converse, whose death occurred Tuesday night. Deceased had been ill for several months with consumption. Funeral services were held at Cass Lake today. Ralph Converse formerly resided in Red Lake Falls. He was employed in the Red Lake Courier office and had many friends here who will regret to learn of his death.

Gasoline Engine Exploded.

While a crew of men with teams were at work with the Erie road grading machine in the town of Silverton last week the gasoline engine exploded. Luckily no one was injured, but it will cost the township another $100 to get the machine put into running order again.—Thief Rive Press.

Postage Stamp Slot Machines.

The Post Office department is considering a number of stamp-selling machines. These devices, which sell stamps of all denominations, could be placed in the streets and public buildings. The intelligent public in general agree that golden grain belt beer is not only the purest of all beverages, but also the most beneficial to body and mind. Have it on your home table at all times. Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Should Stock Clearwater.

The Clearwater river is to be stocked with brook trout and black bass. The state game and fish commission will send fry here to be placed in that stream. The Clearwater is fed by springs and it is quite probable that it can be made a good trout stream if the people interested will see to it that the fish are protected.—Red Lake Falls Gazette.

If this is true, it is indeed gladsome news to the lovers of the rod and reel sport. The Journal has before pointed out the many excellent reasons why Clearwater river should be stocked with game fish such as brook trout and black bass. Properly stocked this river with its many feeders would be the fisheman's paradise in northern Minnesota. We sincerely hope that our game and fish commissioner will get busy and stock Clearwater River with Brook Trout and Black Bass as soon as possible, for we feel like vouching forthe people along its course that they will be more than pleased to do their part to see to it that these fish are protected.

Let us get busy and have it stocked with game fish at an early date.—Olberg Journal.

FIVE STRAIGHT GAMES

Locals Lost Two, Thief River Falls Three to Crookston Aggregation.

During the firemen's tournament at Crookston the local baseball team played two games with Crookston, one on Tuesday afternoon and the other Wednesday afternoon. Crookston took both games, the first one by a score of 6 to 1 and yesterday's game 5 to 4.

The Crookston team made a great record during the week, having defeated Thief River Falls three straight games before taking on the Red Lake Falls team.

Antiquity of Dentistry.

Many people will be surprsied to learn that false teeth, gold caps and fillings and bridges are by no means modern creations. Six hundred years ago and probably long before the dawn of Greek civilization, the skill of the dentist had reached a high degree of perfection. Many people will be surprised to learn that Golden Grain Belt Beer is considered the ideal table beverage. It is one beverage which is as good for the health as it is to the taste. Have it on your home table at all times. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

NEW COMPULSORY EDUCATION LAW

Only in Exceptional Cases Will Excuses for Non-Attendance be Accepted

All Children of School Age Must Attend During Whole Term.

C. G. Schulz, state superintendent of public instruction, is sending out notice to the county superintendents this week calling attention to the new compulsory education law passed by the last legislature, and urging them to see that it is enforced by all school officers.

The new law requires all children between eight and sixteen and in cities of 50,000 between eight and eighteen to attend school during the whole term. Only four excuses for non-attendance may be given; that the the parent is unable to properly clothe the child; that the child's bodily or mental condition is such that he cannot attend school or apply himself to his studies; that he has completed the eighth grade studies, or that there is no school within a reasonable walking distance.

To see that the new law is enforced, where there are no truant officers, clerks of school districts are compelled to make out lists in tripicate of children of school age in the district. One list is to be given to the county superintendent, one to the teacher and the third retained by the clerk. After the teacher has received this list and the list of excuses granted by the board, he must send the county superintendent a list of all the children who are absent.

The superintendent in turn shall give this list to the county attorney, who shall notify the parents, and if they neglect or refuse to send the child to school within ten days, criminal proceedings may be started and the parent or guardian fined $50 or sent to jail for thirty days. The fines are to go to the school district where the offence is committed.

In compliance with the request of the state superintendent, Supt. Anderson is having blanks prepared to be used by school officers and teachers in making reports.

PORK BARREL LAW IS UP TO COURT

INJUNCTION SUIT ARGUED BEFORE SUPREME BENCH BY ATTORNEYS FOR COOKE AND STATE.

COOKE CLAIMS GOOD FAITH

Says the Bill Is Bad Because It Is Used for Political Purposes and Trades—Two Questions Are Considered.

The question whether the $600,000 appropriated by the last legislature for the building of roads and bridges, in the so-called pork barrel bill, held unconstitutional by Judge Brill, of Ramsey county, can legally be expended and whether future legislatures can make similar appropriations, is now before the supreme court. W. B. Douglas made the argument for the plaintiff, Senator L. O. Cooke, who as a taxpayer brought the suit to enjoin the state officers from paying out any of this money.

"I brought this suit on my own accord, and am nobody's tool," said Senator Cooke to a reporter after the hearing. "I am not doing it for spite, as several members will testify that I spoke of starting such a suit two years ago and would have done so but for my absence from the state. I started the suit because the law is wrong in principle.

"It amused me to see the senators meet here last week. Their statement then was an admission that they had traded votes on other bills for the sake of getting something in the pork barrel. The great evil of the bill is that the members do not put the money for roads where it is most needed, but in the district where they get the most votes. We have all taken an oath to support the constitution, and I cannot see why so many of the members are opposed to a suit to determine whether one of the acts we passed is constitutional."

Two questions were considered in the suit, whether a state officer can be enjoined and whether the bill is constitutional. The attorney general cites a number of rulings of the supreme court to the effect that the state auditor, as such, is not subject to suit of any nature.

Judge Douglas cited the case of E. T. Young, in which the federal supreme court held that a state official could be enjoined because there was no other way he could be kept from doing a thing that was not legal. He also cited a number of cases in this state prior to the Young case, in which the right to enjoin state officers had been sustained.

The attorney general answered that if the action can be maintained against the state auditor, similar actions can be brought against any state officer who is attempting to obey a law which some taxpayer and a lower court may deem to be unconstitutional.

CARRIERS END CONVENTION.

F. M. Truax, of St. Paul, is Elected President.

Lake City.—The seventh annual convention of the Minnesota State Association of Letter Carriers closed its sessions here.

Assistant Superintendent W. R. Hinman, of the salary and allowances department, at Washington, D. C., who was present in behalf of the post-office department, presented the plan which the postmaster general intends to put into effect in regard to giving the carriers an increase of fifteen days' vacation. The matter of retiring the men who have grown old in the service was also taken up with Assistant Superintendent Hinman. The carriers' plan for indefinite leave of absence, with half pay and half to the senior substitute, for the old and disabled men, was indorsed by the convention.

The following officers were elected: F. M. Truax, St. Paul, president; Jens Loye, Red Wing, vice-president; Julius Nelson, Duluth, treasurer; C. J. Romick, Lake City, delegate-at-large. Charles W. Schwerin, of Minneapolis, was re-elected secretary.

Galernault Is Named.

John Galernault, of Aitkin, was appointed by Gov. Johnson yesterday state superintendent of banks, under the new banking law. Mr. Galernault is at present a member of the state highway commission. He received the indorsement of the State Bankers' Association for the position. Gov. Johnson did not announce who will be Mr. Galernault's successor on the state highway commission.

FIREMEN AT JACKSON.

Lively Tournament Ends to Meet at Mapleton in 1910.

Jackson.—Two hundred firemen attended the second annual meeting of the Southern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament Association.

Mapleton won most of the prizes. The meeting will be held at Mapleton in 1910. The following officers were elected: Edward Hayes, Jr., of Wells, president; W. P. King, of Jackson, secretary; D. H. Benedict, of Winnebago, treasurer.

MAY PROSECUTE RAILROADS.

Charged That They Are Lax in Obeying Forestry Law.

St. Paul.—Railroads in the northern part of the state, which are not conforming to the forest fire law passed by the last legislature in which they are directed to detail a patrolman to each mile of right-of-way where fires are likely, may be haled into court charged with misdemeanor, according to Gen. C. C. Andrews, state forestry commissioner. Although preparation for prosecutions are not under way, according to the commissioner, information has come to his office that some of the northern roads, instead of employing regular patrolmen, are having the duty prescribed in the law performed by section hands in connection with their regular work. Gen. Andrews said yesterday that this is not permissible.

The law states plainly that during the dry seasons when forest fires are probable and in districts which are susceptible to fires, a regular patrolman must be detailed to each mile of track. When the law went into effect Gen. Andrews communicated with the roads, requesting that copies of their order detailing men to such service, be furnished him. Thus far, but two lines have complied with this request.

During May, it was very dry in the northern part of the state and is still so. Gen. Andrews stated yesterday that all the railroads had fair notice and if they are found violating the law, court procedure will have to be initiated against them. The minimum fine for each offense is $50.

PREPARING FOR CAMP DUTY.

Colonel Wright Announces Battalion Assignments of Second Infantry.

St. Peter.—Colonel A. W. Wright, commanding the Second Infantry, Minnesota National Guard, has announced the battalion assignments preparatory to the annual tour of camp duty at Lake City from July 15 to 24. The various companies are assigned to the three battalions of the regiment as follows:

First—Major N. Nicholson, Austin, commanding; Company D, Captain W. W. Kinne, Northfield; Company H, Captain George P. Rodman, Mankato; Company L, Captain M. W. Hingeley, Redwood Falls; Company G, Captain Charles G. Cook, Austin.

Second—Major John Buschers, New Ulm, commanding; Company I, Captain H. F. Leurs, Owatonna; Company F, Captain S. S. Smith, Worthington; Company M, Captain M. A. Larson, Madison; Company B, Captain F. U. Davis, Faribault.

Third—Major W. T. Mollison, Faribault, commanding; Company A, Captain Albert Pfaender, New Ulm; Company K, Captain O. J. Quane, St. Peter; Company C, Captain W. F. Brandt, Winona; Company E, Captain E. N. Chute, Fairmont.

At camp this year much of the time will be devoted to field work, outpost duty and practice marches, and the regiment is preparing for a rigid field inspection by Captain E. G. Ovenshine, Twenty-eighth infantry.

CROP CONDITIONS EXCELLENT.

Red River Valley Will Make a Big Showing This Year.

Barnesville.—The crop conditions in Clay county and this part of the Red River Valley exceed anything in years. Twenty-five per cent more of grain has been sown than in 1908. Mustard is plentiful and has not hurt the grain. The light rains and the warm weather of the past two weeks have been a great lift to the crops. Barley cutting will be general by the end of the week. Wheat and oats stand eighteen inches high, bear a gool color and are about ready to head. Potatoes are in an excellent condition. Corn is showing up well and the hot weather is sending it skyward. New hay is on the market and sells from three to four dollars a ton. New potatoes will be on the market by the Fourth of July.

As a whole Clay county and this section of the Red River Valley never saw crops looking more promising; and a bountiful yield that will surpass any other year can be expected.

ANTI-PASS LAW A BAR?

Railroads May Be Unable to Carry Good Roads Material Free of Cost.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota anti-pass law may prevent the railroads from carrying out their offer to haul crushed rock for good roads for a distance of seventy-five miles from St. Cloud. One of the companies raised the point in a letter to George W. Cooley, secretary of the state highway commission, and he has submitted the question to the state's legal department.

The railroad official declared that his company was entirely in sympathy with the movement and would be glad to haul the rock without charge, but did not see how it would be possible to do so without violating the anti-pass law. That law is so broad as to cover transportation of all kinds, forbidding free carriage of anything except the special exemptions.

Mr. Cooley says he has received applications for free rock from all counties within the seventy-five mile limit, and intends to send a man through the counties to find just where the rock is needed and how much to ship to each locality. The crusher, which will be started in a few days, only has a capacity of thirty-five cubic yards a day or about a carload, and under the state eight-hour law the plant will probably have to be closed up if the eight-hour run, further reducing its capacity.

In Minnesota

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Fergus Falls.—Johannas Kanarud, an old resident here, died suddenly at his home. He was 68 years of age.

Hastings.—Matt Naumoff, a member of a working crew on the Omaha road, was run over and killed between Savage and Nichols.

Caledonia.—Thomas Buckley, aged 49 years, died of apoplexy at his residence here. He was a prominent merchant and was city treasurer.

Luverne.—Owen McCarthy, a wealthy farmer who lived three miles from Luverne, was killed by lightning while working in a sugar beet field.

Cass Lake.—Lightning struck a sawing machine here, knocking its operator, Alfred T. Tepper, senseless, and firing the box factory in which it was located. The loss was $25,000.

Mankato.—Thorwald L. Christenson of Tyler, engaged in the general merchandise business, has filed a petition in bankruptcy. His liabilities are $8,639.

Hawley.—The second annual meeting of the Society of Numedals, with 200 members, was held here. They are all former residents of Numedal, Norway.

Kerrick.—George W. Preston is under arrest for using a set gun to hunt deer out of season. The discoverer of the gun escaped being shot by it only by chance.

Rochester.—The state training school for Olmstead county teachers has opened here under County Superintendent George F. Howard, with about 150 in attendance.

St. Cloud.—Wesley Carter, one of the most prominent citizens of St. Cloud, died at his home here from heart trouble. He had been a resident of the city fifty years.

Litchfield.—Sam Lockhart, a member of the Minneapolis fire department, who has been spending his vacation in this city, was fined $90 for shipping bass which were not properly labeled.

St. Peter.—Risking her own life to save that of her child, Mrs. Martin Timlin, residing four miles west of this city, in Lake Washington township, rushed into a blazing house and was badly burned.

New Ulm.—Henry Frenzel, a prominent business man, died with paralysis of the brain. He was one of the early pioneers of this city and has been a pop manufacturer for 36 years and had a wide acquaintance throughout the state.

Fergus Falls.—A number of the members of the Fergus Falls City band are planning a very interesting trip. They have decided to walk from this city to Seattle, taking their instruments with them and giving concerts at cities and villages along the route.

Bemidji.—The Grand Forks Lumber Company is taking logs from a big drive in Lake Irving, which is timber that was cut last winter in the La Salle lake country near Lake Itasca. There are more than 1,000,000 feet of timber in the drive. The logs will be taken to East Grand Forks by train.

Rochester.—George F. Howard, county superintendent of schools, has tendered his resignation and will associate himself with a school supply house. Mr. Howard was founder of the Rochester Industrial School. In 1902 he was elected county superintendent and he has held the office continuously.

Mankato.—In grading down the hill opposite the old hotel site near Garden City, twelve miles southeast of here, workmen found a human skeleton in the middle of the road six feet down, and on what was at one time top soil, some pieces of grass being perfectly preserved. The road is sixty years old. Some of the bones were were preserved and some of the teeth perfect.

Winona.—That the animosities engendered by the civil war have largely passed away was demonstrated afresh at the funeral of S. T. Gwinn, a confederate veteran, at Stockton. The John Ball post, G. A. R., of Winona, not only sent a handsome floral tribute to the funeral, but also sent a delegation of union veterans to attend the service.

Park Rapids.—At the state land sale about 400 acres were disposed of, all but one tract being bought by settlers residing near the land or those who wished to settle on land. The prices showed an increase over former years, and the demand was good. The land was appraised at $4 to $6 an acre, and most of it was sold at the appraised value. Some tracts went higher, but none above $8 an acre.

Fergus Falls.—Harry Gilbertson attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat, while in the city jail here. Gilbertson was charged with drunkenness and was facing a prison sentence as he had been taken up for the second time under the Schaffer law.

Fergus Falls.—Mrs. Lena Stal, an elderly woman, was instantly killed by the Great Northern Oriental Limited, west-bound, at Evansville, two stations south of here. She was crossing the track and apparently failed to hear the train, which makes no stop at that station.

NEWS FROM FATHERLAND

A Brief Resume of the Most Important Happenings in the German Empire.

The steamship George Washington, named in honor of the first president of the United States, and the largest German trans-atlantic liner afloat, is the latest addition to the fleet of the North German Lloyd, and extraordinary efforts have been made by the company to make the new steamship in every way worthy of its great name.

France, the traditional leader of visitors, is waking up to a demand for a general old-age pension system. France is a year or two behind England in this respect. But Germany has enjoyed such a system for twenty years, and so well does it work that German emigration has been cut down to a trifle as compared with many neighboring nations.

With four military airship stations already built on the western frontier, the German war office has decided to erect similar stations on its eastern borders. The first of the eastern stations will be erected at Lyck, close to the Russian frontier. The new aerial station will have a huge shed, capable of accommodating two airships of the Zeppelin type.

It is significant that Kaiser Wilhelm did not take his chancellor with him when he met the Czar of Russia in the Baltic. Despite the national protest last autumn, the kaiser still directs the foreign policy of his empire; and so successfully has he managed in his extrication of Germany from its difficult diplomatic position of nine months ago, that his subjects are willing to let him stay in the game of international politics.

Former Premier Tewfik Pacha came to Berlin to notify Kaiser Wilhelm of the fact that Mehmed V has ascended the throne of Turkey. He stated while in Berlin that Col. General Baron vonder Goltz has accepted an offer to come to Turkey to re-organize the Turkish army. He is going to stay in Turkey five months a year for that purpose. Several German officers are going to accompany him as instructors. At the same time many Turkish officers are going to serve in the German army.

Copenhagen, Denmark.—While the European press generally considers the meeting between Nicholas II and Kaiser Wilhelm highly significant, it is, according to a Russian diplomat here, of no poltical importance. The czar originally thought of creating a new political situation by meeting the kaiser, but his ministers, especially Mr. Iswolsky, made him understand that any alliance with Germany would ruin Russia in the future and that public opinion in the empire was anti-German. This converted the meeting in Finnish waters into an interesting social ceremony merely, and led to no change of any kind in the European concert of powers.

Berlin.—While marked reserve characterizes all official expressions regarding the result, the kaiser's meeting with the czar is viewed with unmistakable satisfaction. Both in and out of government circles, Germany is considered again to have scored an important victory in the work of strengthening of its international position by evoking a demonstrative showing of friendliness on the part of the czar immediately after forcing Russia to undergo a sharp diplomatic reverse. In financial circles the meeting causes particular satisfaction, as one direct result of the conference, it is believed, will be the better protection of German interests in Persia, which lately have been menaced by the arms of Russian and English government for the commercial exploitation of the territory. Hints emanating from official sources here indicate that this question, as well as the Balkan problem, was among the most important subjects discussed at the conference.

The per capita wealth of the little town of Cunnersdorf, in Silesia, has been suddenly increased as a consequence of the visit of a Berlin merchant, who sought to cure a temporary fit of mental depression by throwing away handfuls of money and precious stones. He arrived from a neighboring village in a cab, which he discharged after handing the driver $25. A 4-cent bridge toll, payable upon entering the town, he discharged with $12.50. On every person he met he forced a $2.50 or $5 gold piece. Among others he distributed his gold watch, his diamond tie pin, his pearl cuff links and other articles of jewelry. Reaching the market square, with several pockets still full of cash, he drew forth handfuls and threw them into the air, with the result that the square soon become the scene of wild scrimmage among the townspeople. At the tavern where the unknonw benefactor took lodging for the night, he explained that he was suffering from "soul-storms" in consequence of the death of his wife. He said he had got rid of $750 in coin and of jewels worth the same amount.

The reichstag rejected the financial plan of the German government, and now the government, supported by the bundesrat, has proposed a new plan. This provides for higher taxes on drafts and other documents, and taxes on land deeds, inheritances and insurance policies. These sources are expected to net the government a little over $30,000,000.

Kaiser Wilhelm has presented Grand Duke Alexis Nikolaivetch, son of the Czar of Russian and heir to the Russian throne, with a model of the Zeppelin airship.

Principal Happenings of the Week in the Scandinavian Countries.

DENMARK.

Sindal, Jylland, is the first rural community in Denmark to have all the meat sold within its limits officially inspected.

Balotti, the foreign anarchist, who killed a farmer named Beck, has been sentenced to death, and it looks as if he is going to forfeit his life.

A woman has confessed that she has started several serious fires in Copenhagen during the past few months. She can give no cogent reason for her action—she must be simply a pyromaniac.

An astronomical observatory is to be erected in Marselisborg Park, near Aarhus, for the use of a German astronomer named Kruger. The city has given a bonus of $6,750 and free grounds. The plant will revert to the city at the death of Kruger.

The cold weather did not injure the crops so badly as the earlier reports indicated. The winter grain stood the strain well in all parts of the country. The wheat suffered worst, but even that is recovering. The spring grain looks fine. The oat crops are doing well, and weeding is in full swing.

The Aldershvile palace at Bagsvard lake, Sjalland, was destroyed by fire. Valuable art collections were lost. The total loss exceeded $200,000. Two wheelbarrow loads of melted gold and silver were dug out of the ruins the next day. The property was owned by a Danish lady of a highly romantic past. Her fourth and present husband is an English sportsman named Evans.

The Danish rigsdag convened to an extra session June 9. The opening services took place in the Fredrik church, and all the members of the cabinet and a great number of members of the rigsdag, representing the different parties, were in attendance. Bishop Rordam pointed out in his opening sermon that a great responsibility had been placed on this session, and that each member ought to feel this responsibility—they all ought to find inspiration in a common love for their country. This session is expected to agree on a definite plan for the military defense of the Danish capital. No matter what the details of this plan may be, it will surely involve the expenditure of millions of dollars.

SWEDEN.

The Swedish army will soon have a regular balloon service.

The city of Stockholm has floated bonds to the amount of $8,300,000.

The Mission Covenant has decided to start a national young people's union.

The prices of stock are low in northern Skane, good cows fetching a price of only $20 to $25.

Gophers are doing more damage than usual in the fields and gardens of southern Sweden.

About 300 Swedes residing in Kristiania, Norway, have organized a Swedish reading club.

"Live stock" must not be sent by mail in Sweden. But the regulations have been changed so as to admit bees.

Telephone connections have been made between Stockholm and Kohn, Germany, and the service is satisfactory.

During the first five months of this year 6,742 persons emigrated from Sweden from the leading seaports, as against only 2,591 during the same period in 1908.

The crops look much better than they did some time ago, especially in central and southern Sweden. High, light ground even promises an extra heavy yield.

At farmer who was called as a witness at a trial in South Roslag became confused and gave contradictory answers. Finally the magistrate became impatient and ordered the witness to tell no more than he knew, punctuating the instruction by rapping the desk with his mallet. This was too much for the witness. He staggered and actually fell to the floor in a faint. He soon came too again and was taken out of the court-room.

At a meeting called at Karlstad for the discussion of the dogma of the devil, two clergymen, H. Hallen and E. Borjeson, rejected the dogma of a personal devil. Some free church people defended the dogma. One of their arguments was that if there were no personification of evil it would be easy to assume that neither is there any personification of good; that is to say, the denial of the devil naturally leads to the denial of God.

The Swedish Mission Covenant has raised the salary of P. P. Waldenstrom, as president of the covenant, by $270, and he is to receive another $270 for editing Pietisten, the official organ of the covenant.

Money has been raised in different parts of Sweden for a Swedish meeting house in the Shetland Islands, where many Swedish fishermen are spending part of the year.

The Y. M. C. A. of Stockholm requested Roosevelt to lecture in that city in 1910; but he answered that he had to decline for lack of time.

The Swedish academy, by vote of 9 to 8, has declared itself in favor of modifying the reformed spelling, which has been used in the public schools since 1906.

June sixth, the one-hundredth anniversary of the adoption of the Swedish constitution, was fittingly celebrated in many Swedish cities, and by some Swedish colonies in foreign cities.

A number of teachers at Swedish gymnasiums are going to Greece this summer to make archeological state studies. Their leader is to be John Bergman, a noted historian. The party will stop at Olympia, Mycena, Tyrius and Athens.

It is proposed to make a radical change of the sewer system of Stockholm. Several pumping stations will be needed and the sewage will be carried far out into the sea. The cost of the improvements will be about $1,000,000.

A balloon which ascended at Stockholm, landed near Lappo, in the wilds of Finland, 10½ hours later, having covered a distance of about 370 (English) miles. Only Finns lived in the neighborhood, and the aeronants do not understand Finnish. Finally two men were found who had been in America, and the English language helped the strangers out of the difficulty.

A German named Grossmann gave an exhibition on water skis at Stockholm, and many people came to the lake shore to see the performance though they had to pay an admission fee of 7c. Mr. Grossman did well. But all of a sudden a Swede named A. Zetterstrom also appeared on skis made by himself, and the German was evidently perplexed. But he soon concluded that peace would serve him better than war, and so he received the competitor with politeness. The two shook hands and divided the honors between them.

Now that the Social Democratic labor unions are losing ground in some of their strongholds, the employers who have been dealing with them are encouraged to speak more freely. In many cases employers who got into trouble with the labor unions prevented their men from striking by paying certain sums of money to the leading officers of the labor unions. An employer in Malmo has published receipts showing that he has paid $135 to avert a boycott against him, and the files of the organ of the labor organization show that at the same time it was officially announced that the man who paid the money was "in good standing."

NORWAY.

Hallvard Handle, of Slidre, Valders, produces more sweet peas than any other farmer in Norway, and he is also raising large quantities of ruta baga and cabbage seeds.

Verdens Gang, for thirty years the most popular newspaper in Norway, suddenly dropped the old orthography and the Gothic types and took up the latest orthography and the Latin or English types.

New York.—The announcement that the proposed direct line of mail and passenger steamers between this point and Bergen, Norway, would be established by Norway alone, was made by Counsul General Christopher Ravn, of this port. Only Norwegian and Norwegian-American capital will be used. The sum to be raised is $2,700,000, of which half has already been subscribed in Norway. The Norwegian government has pledged a subsidy of $135,000, and the prospects for a profitable operation of the line are said to be excellent. Consul E. H. Hobe, of St. Paul, Minn., and R. With, of Kristiania, are in New York to complete arrangements. The proposed line will make possible travel between New York and Norway in less than nine days instead of eleven, at present consumed.

Norway has explained her position on the question of the jurisdiction of Spitzbergen and Bear Island in a note to Belgium, Denmark, the United States, France, Holland, Russia, England, Sweden and Russia. The note is intended as a program for the diplomatic negotiations which are to take place in Kristiania. The Norwegian government adheres to the principle that the present political status of the islands ought to be maintained, that is, the islands shall not be looked upon as the property of any particular country, but shall be open to citizens of all countries. The time for the conference can not be fixed until the foreign governments have had time to become acquainted with the Norwegian vote. The governments of all the countries mentioned have consented to take part in the conference.

Marit Svendsen, a Christiania lady, has completed her one-hundredth year. She has been blind for many years past, and her hearing is poor. But she has a good memory, and she is still doing a little work from day to day.

The government has bought the Philipstad property at 62 Munkedamsvei, Christiania, for $120,000. A freight depot for the Western railway is to be built on the ground.

On May first there were 2,767 ministers in the churches of Sweden. Ten years ago there were 90 more.

Looking After Business.

"I like this flat very well," she said. "I will be very glad to rent it to you," replied the landlord.

"But we have two children?"

"They need not interfere with you and your husband having the flat. I have a house two blocks down the street which you can rent for the children and the nurse."

You never know how much good there is in men until some dark day falls on us all.

News for Dad.

Tommie—"I see wood yields about one-fifth as much heat as coal."

Bobbie—"I guess my dad don't know that."

"Why?"

"Because, when he warms me he always uses a shingle."

Had a Good Start.

She—What an air of well-bred repose Cholly has.

He—Yes, but Cholly was naturally lazy to begin with.

Another Hatchway.

"Why, the squire fell over the hatchway and hurt his foot," chuckled the village cut-up.

"Hatchway? Has the squire been aboard a ship?"

"Naw. He fell over an old incubator in Josh Weatherby's barn."

A bill poster knows his places, and there he sticks.

At the Game.

"Charley, dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "I am learning a lot about baseball. I can pick out the umpire every time."

"Oh, you can!"

"Yes. He's the gentleman with the Marcelle waves on his chest."

An Omission.

Knicker—Did your father give you an auto?

Bocker—Yes, but he didn't endow it.

Girl of Many Colors.

Mrs. Bleakem—George, this is the most interesting novel I ever read. Just listen, dear: In the tenth chapter the heroine sees the hero approaching and she turns pink. He kisses her and she turns red. A footstep is heard and she turns white. Five minutes later the villain arrives and she turns purple with rage. Now wouldn't you call such a girl as that a heroine, George?

Mr. Bleakem (absently)—H'm! I think I should call her a chameleon.

In Defense of Old Maids.

The average old maid is, as a rule, infinitely more amusing, kind and tolerant than the average married woman, who is so entirely preoccupied with her own family and their interests that she has no time to spare for other people.

A Poor Privilege.

Landlady—I give my boarders a good many privileges.

Stude—es. We seem to be getting in on half fare this trip.

THE WOMAN'S CORNER

NEW PILLOW COVERS

LATEST MATERIAL CLOSELY RESEMBLES LEATHER.

Burlap Tops Are Embroidered and Finished with Fringe—Pretty Flowered Lawns and Scotch Ginghams with Ruffles.

The girl who wishes to render the verandas of the summer cottage attractive should take time by the forelock and make up an assortment of pillow covers. One of the most serviceable tops is of a new material which closely resembles leather and comes in red, blue, green and leather shades made up plainly and fringed with imitation leather fringe.

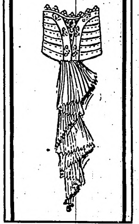
Burlap covers are embroidered with flower, foliage and bird designs, or with water and rural scenes, and are finished with fringe made by fraying the edges of the face and the back and the back of the pillow top.

Lingerie pillows are of muslin all over emproidery, of batiste banded and frilled with embroidery and of dotted and sprayed swiss. Any of the flowered lawns are pretty if finished with wide ruffles, and so are the Scotch ginghams striped in two tones of one color. Some of them have a broken tartan plaid border that makes an effective ruffle. Scotch madras in two tone or solid colors furnishes a serviceable and smart looking pillow top, and there are most attractive plain French linens in such shades as wistaria, catawba, champagne, Van Dyke brown and old rose.

Ecru scrim is an excellent material for a porch pillow cover, and is charming when decorated with Dalmation embroidery in oriental color combinations with embroidery silk. Cream colored scrim is used to carry the Brenta embroidered, which are done without a pattern, as is also the German cross stitch known as serial work.

For the Doeblinger work, done on colored monks' cloth, the eight-fold Germantown yarn is used to develop art nouveau or oriental patterns.

PRETTY BIT OF NECKWEAR.



Jabot of net. Collar of fine linen with insertion and narrow edging.

SMART AND USEFUL DRESS.

Pretty Garment in Gray Cloth or Serge Suitable for General Wear.

This is one of the smartest designs of the season for a really useful dress. Our model is in silver birch gray cloth, but the design might be equally well carried out in fine serge; in navy it would be very useful for general wear.

The sleves have a wrapped seam up outside of arm, and are ornamented with buttons, braid trims the bodice below the small round yoke, which is of tucked net, with high collar of the same.

Pretty Slip Covers.

Slip coverings for the furniture are especially pretty this year. They come in the figured cretonnes and cost no more than the dull linen ones which have been used for so long.

FOR THE BIRTHDAY CAKE.

Convenient Candle Boards That Save Much Trouble and Keep Grease from Icing.

The mother who has many birthday parties to give should by all means invest in a candle board. It is a much more convenient and more pleasant way to trim a cake than to stick candle holders into it, with the danger of grease mingling with the icing.

These boards can be bought, but if you have cake pans of a certain size it is wiser to have them made. They should be circular and big enough for the cake to slip down easily between the rows of candles on the outside.

The outer rim of the board is filled with small holes, into which can be screwed as many tiny candle holders as are needed. Often these boards are made of burnt wood with an appropriate motto burnt into it as "Many happy returns of the day," "Another year, another leaf, is turned within that volume brief."

If one does not wish to go to the expense of a decorated board, any carpenter will make you a large circle of white pine or any other wood, which can be finished with a white shellac, or can be given a coat or two of white paint, covered with white enamel so that it can be easily scrubbed.

Shoes for Summer.

The new fabric shoe is one of the most attractive of the new footwear.

The white shoes of the coming summer are to be of linen, canvas and kid, and many will be very high boots, although the white-beaded tie will be popular.

Suede in all colors still holds its own.

One dainty house slipper in delicate colors has set at one side a bewitching little bow of a matching chiffon.

For Fluffy Hair.

The girl whose hair will not curl naturally, can save herself many a bout with hot tongs by wetting the hair thoroughly with equal parts of green soap and water. This should be carefully rinsed off with fresh water. While the hair is still damp it can be fluffed by running the fingers through it or by tying narrow ribbons tightly around the head, as a fillet is worn, and combing up the hair between. Unless the hair has a tendency to oiliness, the green soap mixture should not be used too often, as it is drying in its effects.

WASH COAT FOR THE BABY.

Garments of Embroidered Batiste or Dotted Muslin That Are Easily Laundered.

There are many days in summer when the small child needs an extra wrap, something neither as heavy nor as everyday as a sweater, reefer or knit sack. For ordinary occasions the pique coat fills every need, but when baby is to be dressed up and made to look its fluffiest, nothing takes the place of the lingerie coats over a lining.

These lingerie coats may be elaborate affairs of handkerchiefs linen or mull, bedecked with hand embroidery and insets of real lace, worn over white or colored silk slips. Quite as effective, much cheaper and more easily laundered, are the little coats of embroidered batiste or dotted muslin.

They are made simply from any good coat pattern that reaches to the end of the frock. The bottom is cut long enough to turn up in a three or four-inch hem, that can be let out as the child grows. Sometimes the fulness at the back is arranged in side plaits fastened to a yoke; more simply it is gathered to a yoke, the fulness being confined to a few inches at the back.

The coat is untrimmed, but a small cape deep enough to cover the yoke is edged with a row of Irish lace, or any other washable cotton lace that looks well with the muslin. The cape may be made round or it can be cut in points, tabs or other fancy shape. A pretty touch is aided by briarstitching the edge where the lace is joined to the cape. The turn-down collar of the coat is also lace-edged, a narrower width being used.

Such a coat can be worn over any straight slip-coat. They are most fancied in a color, though for tiny babies white is preferred by many mothers. China silk makes a good lining as it can be washed. For very warm weather the undercoat could be mercerized gingham or even of colored lawn. There is a surprising amount of warmth in these cotton fabrics.

Miss Lucy and the Simple Life

By Lucy Copinger

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

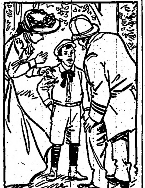
"To open the eyes and the hearts of her young charges to the glories of Nature, to reveal to them the wonders of the world beautiful—this indeed is the blessed privilege of the teacher." Thus rashly, the enthusiastic Miss Lucy at a Teachers' Meeting. The Principal, caught by the aesthetic inversion of adjectives, beamed approval upon her and the next day he came into Room 20 with an invitation for Miss Lucy. It was from the Playground Association, and in it Miss Lucy was offered the use of the Park Playground for an afternoon. At this announcement, "How nice," Miss Lucy gushed with hypocritical fervor, "and how kind of you to get it for me."

This was how it came about that the next day,—the end of June and the last day of school,—Miss Lucy, feeling like the Matron of the Home for Friendless Waifs, found herself walking at the head of a two-by-two line thirty deep. It was Class A in search of the wonders of the world beautiful.

In accordance with an iron rule of the Board, each child had been required to bring six cents for his car fare. Bum O'Reilly, however, had appeared with only four and a letter from his mother addressed to "Miss Loosy teecher" in which the sad "sirkumstanzes off Mrs. O'Reilly" were set forth. However, her man was described as having his eye on something, and "Miss Loosy was the darlin of her James and would she lend him the other two cents."

As for Frederick William, he had brought the six cents but they had been carefully hidden away in his pocket by a shrewd mother and were only to be used in extremity.

In the vernacular of Bum O'Reilly, Class A had on its glad rags. There was one boy who had even washed his ears. Bum himself it spite of the warm weather wore his Sunday pants of red plush and cut from an old chair cover. Frederick William was just as clean and a little shinier than usual, and he had on his best stockings, upon which shone strange zebra-like stripings. Sophie Bauerschmidt wore her sister's beads. At the end of the line straggled Anna Karenina with her mother's pink chiffon veil around her neck.



"If I Ain't Bust Me Sunday Pants."

In spite of her dirtiness that day had seen a great moral upheaval in Anna. She was going to be good. Vainly Miss Lucy had struggled for this regeneration. The only response had been a perverse wickedness. That dinnertime, however, in splendid rivalry of Sophie's beads she had stolen her mother's veil. She had tied it around her neck, and as Anna was as truly feminine a creature of clothes as Miss Lucy herself, instantly there had come over her an overwhelming sense of the goodness of beauty and the beauty of goodness. When she had tied back her greasy forelock of hair with her blue garter, her conversion was complete, for that was the way Marie Schaefer wore her hair and Anna was going to be even as good as Marie.

This new morality of Anna's—though the mere matter of a dirty chiffon veil—had brought her safely through the journey to the Park. At the cars frantic cries for "Miz Luzy" were heard, but it was found to be Sophie and not Anna who had stopped to make faces at an envious neighbor who had been so nearly left behind.

At last the Playgrounds were reached a pleasant and sheltered stretch of lawn guarded by a fat policeman. There one found many see-saws and a big sand-heap. In one corner there was also a pile of rafia and Miss Lucy seeing, thought with a guilty helplessness of the Rafia Meeting that she had hooked to go to a matinee.

However, the children amused themselves unassisted until Bum O'Reilly fell off a see-saw. When Miss Lucy and the fat policeman ran to his rescue, "Gee," he remarked with Celtic cheerfulness, "if I ain't bust me Sunday pants." At which Miss Lucy and the fat policeman blushed.

After Bum had been repaired with numerous safety-pins Miss Lucy called the children together and distributed some sandwiches that she had brought. In the silence that fell upon the eating children she heard the reverent tones of Sophie Bauerschmidt.

"It's chicken, ain't it?" she whispered to Anna.

Anna had never tasted chicken but, "Hod air," she whispered back cynically, "thad chicgen. Ids weal."

While the children were eating, Miss Lucy, looking around on the green beauty of grass and tree, thought a little nature talk would not be inappropriate. She selected the grass as her subject.

"Children," she began, in her schoolteachery voice, "I am going to talk to you about what we see all about us over the ground—something that you have all been sitting on. Frederick, what?"

"Three ants and some sand," said the exact Frederick William.

"Very good," said Miss Lucy with resignation, "and now let's play some games."

Miss Lucy suggested Blind Man's Buff. This was popular and was only stopped by Josef running his nose into a tree.

The great catastrophe occurred during Hi Spy. Marie Schaefer was "it." Miss Lucy, sitting on one of the benches, leaned back and looked dreamily up at the lazy clouds that drifted through the sky like gypsy angels through a blue world—clouds that were neither white nor pink but an elusive primrose echo of both. She had just gotten to the second stanza of a beautiful poem she was composing about it all when she noticed that Marie Schaefer was standing with her hand raised in quite the proper school-child manner.

"I can't find Anna anywhere," said Marie plaintively, "I have looked everywhere for her and I can't find her She's gone."

"Gone!" she echoed wildly.

Then began a search which, as the sun passed behind the trees, became a frantic and vain wandering up and down endless paths—a search in which was enlisted the fat and sympathetic policeman. Anna was indeed gone.

At last when an hour had passed and Miss Lucy had just sunk upon a bench and was beginning a nice comfortable attack of hysterics, she saw the fat policeman coming down one of the paths. In his arms he had a dripping, squirming bundle from which came thick sobs and a long string that had once been Mrs. Karenina's chiffon veil.

"Oh, Anna," cried Miss Lucy tearfully, "Oh, Anna, where have you been?"

"Id was the chicgen," wailed the unhappy backslider,—"the whide chicgen in the wader. He was so fad und glean und shiny und I liged him und I wanded him und I wand him now." Then—all her new morality buried in the ruins of the chiffon veil—the wretched Anna kicked her fat rescuer viciously on the shins. "I wand him now!" she screamed.

"She fell in the duck-pond," the policeman explained. Then, as he saw the puddle of muddy water that had dripped from Anna's clothes, "You had better take her home, Miss," he said kindly, "she ain't used to it and she'll take cold. I'll carry her down to the gate."

The return to the gate was a rush. At the transfer corner Miss Lucy met the Principal, wild eyed and on his way to the Park. He was in a state of wordy reproachfulness.

"I can't help it," Miss Lucy snapped femininely, "it was all your fault, anyhow. Why did you get me that old invitation! I didn't want it."

Then they waited in mutual sulkiness until the car came. It was crowded with the six-o'clock rush and Miss Lucy, her hair coming down, her hat over her ear, and her dress wet from Anna's clothes, was angrily conscious of many looks of amusement.

Anna, her nose dug into Miss Lucy's arm, had gone sniffingly to sleep and Miss Lucy, as she grudgingly supported her, felt a sudden new bitterness in her heart against this ugly little stumbling-block to all her plans.

At last the school was reached and the other members of Class A having been delivered to anxious relations, Miss Lucy hurried down to the tenement section with Anna. In a nervous tremor at Mrs. Karenina's anticipated wrath she stumbled up the greasy flights that led to Anna's home. Half way up, a door was opened and a drunken, blasphemous voice inquired hospitably as to who it was that wanted to get his block knocked off.

In reply to this inquiry Anna swore back cheerfully over the banisters, but Miss Lucy turned pale and sped fearfully up the steps—only to find that Anna's mother was out. She was probably down the river or to a ball.

So Miss Lucy gingerly undressed Anna, hung her clothes over an improvised line, rubbed her dry with the dish towel, and, as her wardrobe was limited to one set, wrapped her in the sheet and left her already asleep on the unspeakable mattress where the six other Kareninas usually reposed.

A little later she opened the door and for a moment she looked remorsefully at the sleeping Anna. Then she felt a sudden smart in her eyes.

"Poor thing," she said angrily, "poor ugly little thing! She might never have come home at all, and her dreadful mother would not have cared. She would have been glad."

Then she shut the door carefully and started to grope her way down the stairs.

Half way down she made a wrong turn and fell down several steps. She made quite a noise over it and the owner of the blasphemous voice opened his door and threw a chair-leg at her. It was then that Miss Lucy decided that the wonders of the world beautiful were not worth while.

In a panic she flew up the narrow street where dirty little children, ghastly in the electric light, played and fought and cursed. With her eyes still open for chair-legs she at last reached the street of her own protecting home and people. As she ran thankfully up the steps, "Don't say blessed privilege of the teacher to me" said Miss Lucy wearily.

Shaky on His Golf.

"It is sadly evident," said the editor, "that you have no practical knowledge of the game of golf."

"I got all my technical references from an old paper," replied the new reporter, resentfully.

"I don't know much about the game myself," said the editor, thoughtfully, "but I'm afraid I'll have to throw out your story on the strength of the closing paragraph."

"What's wrong with it?"

The Retort Courteous.

The Paris critic, Martin, once only had taken his chocolate in a place other than the Cafe Foy, and he then found it not good. This happened at the Regence, and the young woman at the desk, to whom he expressed his displeasure, said: "You are the only one to complain. All of the gentlemen of the court who come here find it good." "They also say, perhaps, that you are pretty," he replied slowly.

A CEREAL STORY

By Melville F. Ferguson

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

"I remember that when I was a boy, and laboriously traced the maxim graven at the top of my copy-book, variety was reputed to be the spice of life," casually remarked the Man, gravely contemplating the steaming breakfast food before him. "How times have changed! How fickle the fashion in spices! Pass the cream, please."

His wife cast a sidelong glance at him over the top of the coffee-urn. She was used to his circuitous method of attack, and more than suspected what was coming. Therefore she held her peace.

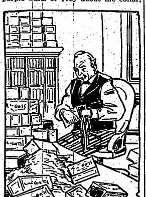
"This—er—pasty substance," said he, holding up a spoonful and allowing it to plump back into his bowl in a long elastic gob—"haven't I seen something like this before? Didn't we have it yesterday? Didn't we have it day before yesterday? Has there been any day this month, or last month, or the month before, when we didn't have it?"

"I thought you were so fond of cereals!" deprecated the woman.

"Cereals—yes. This particular cereal, to the exclusion of all others—no. Come, now, be honest. What's the prize? Tell me about the premium. Enlighten me as to the generous offer of the philanthropic manufacturer. What is it?"

"Oh, I dare say it's very amusing," retorted his wife, with an ominous snap in her voice. "You're an ingrate. But for my interest in the things you sneer at you wouldn't have the coat you've got on."

It was true. He wished he hadn't. He was attired in a vivid green smoking-jacket tastefully trimmed with purple walls of Troy about the collar, cuffs, and tail. It was a nightmare his thoughtful helpmeet had brought upon him by succumbing to the offer of what was described as a "magnificent $20 house-coat to be given away absolutely free" with a thousand cigars—of awful memory. He sat in a chair to obtain which as a "gift" his better half had made herself obnoxious throughout the neighborhood by forcing upon unwilling friends and acquaintances unbelievable quantities of soap, starch, and perfumery that they didn't need and didn't want. He ate from dishes that had been procured by the assiduous collection of reams of vari-colored trading-stamps. The abortive urn in which was served the morning ration of coffee represented weeks of nauseating effort to dispose of the ten pounds of chiccory and charred peanuts with which it had been presented. Mustering these fortifying facts in martial array in his mind, he returned to the charge.



His Desk Was Full of Oats.

"What are we going to get for nothing this time?" he demanded. "Come, tell me how it works."

"I just knew you'd be perfectly horrid about it," said she. "It's a beautiful gilt boudoir clock—something I've wanted for ages and age. You see, there is a little pasteboard letter in every box, and when you get enough to spell the cereal people's name they give you the clock as a present. It's grand; Mrs. James has one, and it didn't cost her a penny. I wish you could see it."

"Didn't cost her a penny, eh? No, I can't see it," rejoined the Man, with sinister double entendre. "How much do you pay for this stuff? Fifteen cents a box? And we've been using three packages a week for say twenty weeks—that's nine dollars. Seems to me you must have bought enough letters to get two or three clocks. The fellows who got up this scheme must have a name long enough to reach all the way around the box and lap over some at that. What do they call themselves?"

"It's the name of the food you have to spell—not the company's. The letters are P-r-e-t-t-y-m-a-n-s P-r-e-d-i-g-e-s-t-e-d O-a-t-s, and I have them all but one. I've four or five of some of them."

"Well," said the Man, glancing at his watch and shedding his giddy house-coat hurriedly, preparatory to the usual rush for his train, "if your heart is set on getting this clock for nothing, let us hope you find the missing letter before I am bankrupted—that's all."

Oats was a dangerous topic for many days. The Man absorbed his fodder in silence morning after morning, leaving a constantly increasing quantity in his bowl on the plea of allowing himself more time to reach the station.

One morning he casually asked his wife which letter in the magic name she had so long unsuccessfully sought. It was the "Y." He left the house five minutes earlier than usual and stopped in at the corner grocery on his way to the train. When he emerged it was with a decidedly guilty air. Under his arm was a small square package wrapped in brown paper.

At the office the Man opened his parcel surreptitiously and drew forth a carton of Predigested Oats. He slit the top with a penknife and groped in the interior until his fingers encountered a small square of pasteboard. With far greater agitation than moves the professional stock-gambler who notes on the ticker the gain or loss of thousands, he examined the little card. It bore the imprint of an "M."

Somehow the Man could not fix his mind on his business. A little leaven had leavened his whole lump.

Queer things transpired at the office within the next week or so. Each morning the Man appeared with two or three packages under his arm, and yet he never took any bundles away with him. The boy was sent so often to various downtown groceries for Predigested Oats that he confided to the janitor his fear that the boss was turning into a horse. The janitress querulously complained that a poor woman's life wasn't worth living, the way No. 242 littered up his carpet day after day with that brownish powdery stuff that was so hard to sweep out. The Man himself began to get cramped for room. His desk was full of oats. His coat and overcoat had to be laid over the back of a chair during the day—the clothes-lockers were crowded with square boxes. The stationery closet was bulging with predigestion.

There comes a point when the addition of one little straw to the camel's burden brings that faithful animal to an untimely end. In desperation the Man one day bought a dozen packages of the detested oats at one fell swoop, and found within them a dozen duplicates of letters he already had, but no "Y."

"This game is an infernal swindle," he cried, hurling a shower of oats and cartons through the open window into the light-shaft. "By the Great Horn Spoon, I don't believe there ever was a 'Y' in any of their boxes! It's robbery, but they tried their game on the wrong man when they tackled me. I'll see whether there's any law in this land!"

Determined to strike while the iron was hot, the Man telephoned to his attorney, who roosted several stories higher in the same skyscraper, asking him to stop in on his way to lunch. Within an hour the lawyer appeared, and listened attentively to the Man's recital of how his wife had invested vast sums on the representations of the cereal manufacturers, and of how much evidence she had acquired by purchase of the absence of an essential letter from the packages. In thus setting forth the case the Man deemed it irrelevant and unnecessary to mention his own purchases. For the sake of convenience he simply added his expenditure to hers and represented the sum total as her outlay.

"Now, tell me, Calloway," he concluded, "is there no way of getting back at these people? Couldn't we get at them through the postal laws, if by no other procedure? Are they to go on robbing the public indefinitely?"

"Well," said the lawyer, pressing his finger-tips together reflectively, "I could tell better if I were acquainted with the exact terms of the company's offer. I suppose they are printed on the package. Couldn't you bring down a carton to-morrow?"

"Certainly. Come to think of it, I believe I have one of their old boxes down here somewhere. Let me see—where did I put it? You're taller than I am—just look on top of that bookcase, won't you?"

As Calloway turned his back to grope for the carton on the bookcase, his client hastily slid open a drawer of his desk, grabbed the topmost package, and pushed the drawer home.

"Oh, here it is; I had it in my desk," he said, passing it to the attorney.

The latter read the printed proposition carefully and glanced over the top of his spectacles at the would-be litigant.

"What did you say was the missing letter?" he asked.

"It is 'Y.'"

"'Y?' Where does 'Y' come in?"

"In Prettyman's, of course. P-r-e-t-t-Y-m-a-n-s."

The lawyer looked at him suspiciously. "You're not trying to 'josh' me, are you?" he asked.

Plainly the Man was puzzled.

"See here," said the lawyer; "without prejudice to your general intelligence, it seems to me that in this particular instance you've been making a monkey of yourself. Here is Prettiman's spelt in letters an inch high on the carton—P-r-e-t-t-I-m-a-n-s."

The client took the box incredulously and looked for himself. His face was very red. He tossed the package a foot or two in the air, and as it descended he met it half way with a kick that sent it hurling to the ceiling, where it smashed three globes on the chandelier and produced a snowstorm of oats that would have made the stage manager of an Uncle Tom's Cabin company turn green with envy. And the lawyer's fee was $15.

Do you think that Man went home and made a full confession to his wife? Not he. He "cashed in" what letters he had acquired, gave the clocks to the stenographer and bookkeeper, made an exaggerated pretence of discovering his wife's error all by himself, and twitted her about it for two months. For he was a man.

Characteristics of Dutch Painters.

Perhaps this might be defined as a capacity for honest seeing and for honest doing and certainly it was in this way that the moral character of the Dutch displayed itself. It was equally a notable distinction of the Dutch painters. As a school they were unanimous in choosing for their subject life; the life about which they knew most and in which they were most interested—their own. They represented it with straightforwardness and sincerity. Thus, with few exceptions, their motive was simply and sincerely realistic, and at the same time their brushwork was extraordinarily skillful.—St. Nicholas.

The city of Douai is going to erect a monument to John of Bologna, one of its most famous citizens. The sculptor was born there in 1524, and died at Florence in 1608, the appellation of Bologna being a corruption of his own name of de Boullogne, an old Flemish family still in existence—The Athenaeum.

WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES.

It Is a Warning That the Kidneys Are Sick and Need Help.

A bad back makes every day a dull round of pain and misery. It's a sign the kidneys are sick and cannot keep up their never-ending task of filtering the blood. Lame back, backache, dizzy spells and urinary disorders are warnings that must not be overlooked. A. G. Smith, 405 E. Mills St., Liberty, Mo., says: "I was racked with pain, stiff and lame, had dizzy spells and a terrible condition of the kidney secretions. I got so miserable I went to bed, but the doctor did not do anything for me and no one expected me to recover. Doan's Kidney Pills first relieved, then cured me, and I have had no kidney trouble for seven years since."

Fearful Eczema All Over Baby's Face —Professional Treatment Failed.

A Perfect Cure by Cuticura.

"When my little girl was six months old I noticed small red spots on her right cheek. They grew so large that I sent for the doctor but, instead of helping the eruption, his ointment seemed to make it worse. Then I went to a second doctor who said it was eczema. He also gave me an ointment which did not help either. The disease spread all over the face and the eyes began to swell. The itching grew intolerable and it was a terrible sight to see. I consulted doctors for months, but they were unable to cure the baby. I paid out from $20 to $30 without relief. One evening I began to use the Cuticura Remedies. The next morning the baby's face was all white instead of red. I continued until the eczema entirely disappeared. Mrs. P. E. Gumbin, Sheldon, Ia., July 13,'08."

A Tall Bear Story.

"Why, once, do you know, I found a bear inside a hollow log. Well, of course, I couldn't get at him to shoot him, and the log was too heavy to move. I didn't know what to do. So at last I thought of cutting four holes in the log, about where the bear's feet must be, and I got his paws through slick. Then I tied a rope about the log and made him walk with it into camp. And—would you believe it?—we had all our food and all our fuel for the winter out of that one deal."—Outing.

TUMOR OF FOUR YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindley, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound removed a cyst tumor of four years' growth, which three of the best physicians declared I had. They said that only an operation could help me. I am very glad that I followed a friend's advice and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it has made me a strong and well woman, and I shall recommend it as long as I live."—Mrs. May Fry, Lindley, Ind.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give confidence and hope to every sick woman.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

The Duluth Herald says that northern Minnesota can't afford to forget reapportionment.

The people of Todd county are very much excited over the discovery of what are believed to be iron ore deposits.

Talking politics in the closed season is excusable on the ground that "any thing to fill up" is permissable in dog days.

Now that the Fourth is over, the small boy, if he escaped unmaimed, might be profitably employed shooting potato bugs with Paris green and a squirt gun.

Breaking a world's record is an unusual feat to perform and one to occasion some loud and noisy expressions from the bleachers. Here's to the world beating flag team. All together now!

The congressmen who say now that they pledged themselves to tariff revision without specificiation as to whether the revision should be up or down will find that they are too accomplished in their hair-splitting nicety of reasoning and evasion of the implied conditions of the pledge.

The Duluth News Tribune says Senator S. D. Works has decided to remain in the state and be a candidate for re-election. Outside of the fact that he is a democrat, Mr. Works has about everything in his favor in Minnesota politics and even being a Democrat is not always an unsurmountable obstacle.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Walker Piot: In some sections, one of the most important pieces of a country printer's harness is the postoffice collar

Walker Pilot: The ladies have got to look for something besides the tariff to keep hosiery up. This is one of the conclusions reached by congress.

Princeton Union: From this distance it might be implied that the sugar trust has succeeded in sweetening the dispositions of those gruff old tariff-tinkering senators—that is, so far as application to itself is concerned, of course.

Bemidji Sentinel: There is one thing in favor of the gasoline launch, no matter how fast it goes there are no pedestrian to get in the way of it. Besides, the chauffeur (or is it pilot) can alway see far enough ahead to avoid accidents.

Stillwater Gazette: 'Ere's hanother candidate for governor, on the Democratic ticket—W. E. McEwen of Duluth, secretary of the labor union and state labor commissioner. It is a year at least ahead of time, but it flatters the boys to be mentioned and does no harm to the public.

Brainerd Tribune: That Frank B. Kellogg will ask the indorsement of the republican state convention for the United States senatorship is generally accepted. The next legislature will determine his status in the fight to come, but those behind him are not without knowledge of the advantage to be gained by friendly concessions on the part of the Republican convention, and it is believed they will ask for it.

Ogilvie Sentinel: Some men of colossal fortunes get lots of credit and applause for their supposed generosity to charitable institutions. But if the people were not compelled to pay tribute to monopolies whereby a few men amass immense fortunes which are good neither for themselves, their children nor the country, there would be fewer objects of charity.

Winona Republican-Herald: Mr. Bryan has critised Governor Johnson for vetoing the tonnage tax, and thereby smashing his own state platform, and Governor Johnson comes back and tells Mr. Bryan that he doesn't know what he is talking about—that if he read his veto and learned all the facts of the case he would have vetoed the bill himself. It doesn't take any very erudite mind to understand that Mr. Bryan has very little personal or political interest in the tonnage tax, but he is apparently possessed of a desire to give Govenor Johnson a slap whenever opportunity offers and to pull him down as a presidential candidate. Reading between the lines of his criticism of the tonnage tax veto, therefore, one readily sees an indication of trouble ahead for any democrat who aspires to Mr. Bryan's place as national leader. His criticism of democratic possibilities here and there, and his unmistakable antipathy to the Minnesota governor all point to the inevitable conclusion—that whoever aspires to the democratic nomination in 1912 will have to go over the prostrate body of the battlescarred candidate from Nebraska.

JUVENILE COURTS.

New Way to Handle Complaints Against Youthful Offenders.

One of the most important laws passed at the recent session of the legislature was thati extendng the operation of the Juvenile Court to all the counties of the state.

The matter was urged upon the notice of the legislature by a joint committee of the State Conference of Charities and Correcton and the State Educatonal Association. This committee in presenting the need showed that a boy in say, Austin, who does the same wrongful act as a boy in one of the three large cities, is branded as a criminal and tried with other criminals, while the boy in the large city is brought to the Juvenile court by his parents and the matter is adjusted in a manner to safeguard the state and save the boy.

Under the new law the Probate Court is to have jurisdiction in all cases in which the welfare of the children is involved. As generally is known, where the question relates to dependent or neglected children, the matter is disposed of in the Probate Court at present. This practice will continue under the new law, but the proceedings will be simplified and strengthened. It will not be necessary for County Commissioners officially to certify cases of this kind to the Probate Judge. Any reputable citizen may file the petition. In most things the practice will be similar to that now followed by the Juvenile Courts in the three large counties.

The cheif change will have reference to children who are charged with violaiton of some law. Under the new statute these cases will come before the Probate Court also. If a boy is believed to have committed, say larceny, the procedure will be to file a petition in the Probate Court alleging that he is in need of proper guardianship. The boy and his parents will be summoned in to court. No warrant, no arrest, if it is possible to avoid such. Some kind, firm friend who will undertake to help this boy, to be called a probation officer, is called into the case. The difficulty is canvassed thoroughly and with the utmost informality by the court, the probation officer, the parents and the boy. The court will lay such emphasis upon the mistakes of the the parents and the boy as may seem fitting, and will probably continue the case, placing both parents and boy in charge of the probaton officier, and allowing them to return home. The probation officer, by association and suggestion, will endeavor to improve the home life of the family and will consult with the court from time to time as to progress. If when the case comes on for hearing again satisfactory impovement has been made a discharge may be ordered. If no improvement can be reported the court may, after probabely two or three such trials, remove the boy from the home and place him in some other family home, or place him in some institution certified to the Board of control to be qualified to give the boy the attention he needs or perhaps commit him to the State Training School. In any event there is nothing savoring criminal trial. The vengeance idea is eliminated and, many bad boys by these means have been reformed and their parents have acquired much better the capacity to bring up the other children. The law contains provisions to meet various difficulties that may arise in its enforcement. It repeals no law now in force. It only opens up a better way. The act went into effect June 1st.

standing at the country station reading the warning to women and girls, exclaims: "I'd like to see the man I'd be afraid of." But notwithstanding this libel on the country girl of Minnesota and the ridicule to which among the thoughtless it submits them, the cartoon by no means represents the attitude toward them of all the people of St. Paul.

Local Co operation with Labor Bureau Plans.

If we have among us those who think any one coming from the country of an inferior class to the city bred and the proper game of the town wits, we have here, too, many philanthropic men and women who recognize the sterling worth of our country girls, how attractive and accomplished many of them are, and the duty they owe to those of them who come to St. Paul to look for the employment they cannot find at home or to better their condition. These, so far from condemning what the labor bureau is doing, are co-operating with it, and, as a result, of the prospective provision by the Young Women's Christian Association of a suitable home for girls and a place where strangers may safely go, young ladies in the future coming to St. Paul in search of employment may be certain of meeting a cordial welcome and such protection and assistance as they may happen to need. Better, thanks to the labor bureau, and to St. Paul women who take an interest in settlement and other social work, they will find kindness, sympathy, friendly companionship and those to whom they may safely and confidently appeal if in need of advice os material assistance.

The First District Judgeship.

As a result of the death of the venerable Judge Williston, a vacancy has occurred and the district bench in the first judicial district which comprises Goodhue and Dakota counties, which the governor will shortly be called upon to fill. It does not yet appear whom he shall select, although an intimation has been made that the place may be offered to Hon. O. M. Hall, an ex-member of congress who at present is one of the members of the state tax commission. There is no question that Mr. Hall is eminently qualified to discharge the duties of the office, but entering upon them would mean later engaging in a political campaign to which it is probable Mr. Hall would be averse, although his well known popularity in the populous county of Goodhue, which, although it is Republican and he a Democrat he has repeatedly carried in previous contests by substantial majorities, would probably inure his success. It is intimated that in any event, Mr. Rochne, who was speaker of the house will be a candidate for the judgeship in the 1910 election.

Not for Joel.

The fairy tale of a St. Paul reporter brings out Northfield's Solon, Joel P. Heatwole, as the Republican candidate for the state senate, to contest Rice county with Senator Glotzbach. The wily Joel, however, is little likely to profit from the suggestion. He is rather too old and too wise a bird to walk into the lure spread out for him. Anyway he says he is out of politics, a fact which repeated reiteration has made familiar to us all. Still it will do no harm to keep one's eyes on him. Poitics are full of surprises.

The Corporations' Advocate.

It is a curious circumstance that whereas Senator Clapp has offered just such a halfhearted opposition to the Aldrich abortion as house sentiment would not permit him to avoid, when it is proposed to tax corporations, he suddenly becomes conspicuous and eloquent in denunciation of the measure. The indications of an intention on the part of a prominent trust-serving trust buster to encroach on what Mr Clapp has been accustomed to regard as his local preserves may account for this. It is noticed that Senator Clapp conjures with President Roosevelt's name. In this he is at one with the corporation press. There are others who use the livery of heaven in which to serve a master from the nether reigons.

Sunday Descecration.

The popular disregard of the sanctity of the Lord's Day has been sternly and bravely rebuked by Rev S. G. Smith, the popular and able pastor of the People's church. It is not the laboring man who, tired from his weeks work, finds breathing space and rest and needed change of atmoshere on Sundays in the city's parks, who are the subjects of his censure but rather his weathly paishoners who at the Town and County Club make the day one of sport and pastime, and exhibit in setting Sunday apart for golf tournamen s a callous disregard both of religious obligations and of the law of the state. While with all the arrogance of newly acquired wealth they resent his interference with their sacreligious pleasures as an impetinence, and declare they are a law unto themselves, Mr. Smith's timely strictures have been indorsed by the sober sense of the community. Indeed he has merely voiced a sentiment already general in his plea for a return to a more seemly and devout observance of the day set specially apart for the worship of God.

✿ SCISSORETTES

The Anaconda (Mont.) Standard says it takes more than benzoate of soda to preserve a man's temper when his wife pays $16 for an inverted bushel basket and calls it an Easter hat.

Three tired citizens—a lawyer, a doctor and a newspaper man—sat in a back room recently in the cold gray light of the early dawn, says the Boston Record. On the table were many empty bottles and a couple of packs of cards. As they sat in silence a rat scurried across the hearth into the darkness beyond. The three men shifted their feet and looked at each other uneasily. After a long pause the lawyer spoke:

"I know what you fellows are thinking," he said; "you think I saw a rat, but I didn't."—Lake County Herald, Painesville, O.

"Yes, sir," replied the young man at the desk. "I can take in any kind of items. What have you?"

"Why, it's this way," said the caller, lowering his voice. "My wife gave a swell party last night, and I'm willing to pay to have this report of the affair put in your paper."

"We don't charge anything for publishing society news items," observed the young man at the desk, taking the proferred manuscript and looking it over.

Heart Strength

Heart Strength, or Heart Weakness, means Nerve Strength, or Nerve Weakness—nothing more. Positively, not one weak heart in a hundred is, in itself, actually diseased. It is almost always a hidden tiny little nerve that really is all at fault. This obscure nerve—the Cardiac, or Heart Nerve—simply needs, and must have, more power, more stability, more controlling, more governing strength. Without that the Heart must continue to fail, and the stomach and kidneys also have these same controlling nerves.

This clearly explains why as a medicine, Dr. Shoop's Restorative has in the past done so much for weak and ailing Hearts. Dr. Shoop first sought the cause of all this painful, palpitating, suffocating heart distress. Dr. Shoop's Restorative—this popular prescription—is alone directed to these weak and wasting nerve centers. It builds; it strengthens; it offers real, genuine heart help.

PROCEEDINGS

Commissioners' Proceedings of Red Lake County, Minn.

June 19th, 1909.

Pursuant to adjournment the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, Minnesota, met in special session at the office of the County Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Members present: Lindquist, Aubol, Demann and Pigeon.

Joseph Johnson elected on the 18th day of June, 1909, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Daniel Shaw as County Commissoner for the 4th Commissioner District, County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, having filed his oath of office took his respective seat with the board.

The matter of the petition of Tobias Skjerping and others for the construction of County Ditch No. 35 duly came before the Board of County Commissioners. The said Petition was read and the arguments of all persons interested for or against the construction of same were heard.

On motion duly carried the Board took a recess until 1:00 o'clock P. M.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 1:00 o'clock P. M.

All members present.

On motion duly carried the report of the viewers was referred back to them for correction as to the assessments against certain tracts of land.

Two of the three viewers were present at the hearing, namely G. K. Haavi and Joseph Belair, K. O. Gigstad being absent, and they proceeded to make the necessary corrections in their report as agreed upon, after which on motion made by Commissioner Demann and seconded by Commissioner Johnson the Petition and the Report of the Viewers and the Engineer thereon were accepted and the following order establishing County Ditch No. 35 in Red Lake County was made.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake, ss.

In The Matter Of the Petition of Tobias Skjerping and others, for the public ditch in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, designated and numbered as County Ditch No. 35.

The above entitled matter came on duly to be heard by and before the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at a Special meeting of said Board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter on the 19th day of June, A. D. 1909, at ten o'clock A. M. of said day, and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of said time and place of hearing thereon, and that C. H. Martz the Civil Engineer, appointed by the Board to survey the route of said ditch has completed his work and duly filed his report thereon in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that the Viewers appointed by said Board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made and filed their report in due form of law in the office of said County Auditor, the County Board did at the time above specified, proceed to hear said petition and said viewers' report thereon; and said Board having duly considered said Petition and heard all the parties interested for or against the construction of said ditch and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows, to-wit:—

First: that the said Civil Engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second: That the Viewers appointed herein have duly completed their labors thereon and have made and filed their report according to law.

Third: That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than its actual cost, including damages awarded.

Fourth: That the damages and benefits arising from the consruction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and pormote the ublic health and that said reports of said engineer and Viewers are complete and correct.

Fifth: That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said Viewers' report and said Engineers report has been duly given, published and posted and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

Now, therefore, As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at said special Session of said Board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience, do hereby locate and establish the said ditch according to the report and the specifications of said Civil Engineer made and filed herein; and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the Viewers made and filed herein.

It Is Further Ordered, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the Viewers' report herein in excess of benefits, be paid out of the County Treasurer of said County on warrants to be drawn and attested by the Auditor of said County and signed by the Chairman of this Board, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

Given under our hands this 19th day of June, A. D. 1909.

By the Board,
C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman of County Board of Red Lake County, Minnesota.

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is due to impurities and poisons in the blood. Instead of being rich, strong and healthy, the circulation has become infected with germs of disease which destroy the rich, red corpuscles that furnish nourishment and strength to the body, and reduced this vital fluid to such a weak, watery condition that it is no longer able to keep the system in health, or ward off the countless diseases and disorders that assail it. The loss of these red corpuscles takes the color and glow of health from the cheek, and we see pale, sallow faces and washed out, chalky complexions among the first symptoms of Malaria. But Malaria is a general systemic disease, and as the blood becomes more heavily loaded with its germs we have more serious and complicated symptoms; the impure blood having its effect on all parts of the body. The appetite fails, digestion is weakened, chills and slight fever are frequent, and the sufferer loses energy and ambition because of a constant tired-out and "no account" feeling. The lack of necessary nourishment and healthful qualities in the blood causes boils and abscesses, skin affections, and in some cases sores and ulcers to break out, and sometimes the patient is prostrated with a spell of malarial fever which may leave his health permanently impaired. To cure Malaria both a blood purifier and tonic are necessary, in order to remove the cause and at the same time build up the system from its weakened and run-down condition. S. S. S. is the medicine best fitted for this work. It is the most perfect of all blood purifiers, and the purely vegetable ingredients of which it is composed make it the greatest and safest of all tonics. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and removes every trace of impurity or poison, and at the same time gives to the blood the health-sustaining qualities it needs. It cures Malaria thoroughly and permanently because it removes the germs and poisons which produce the disease, and while doing this tones up and strengthens every part of the system. When S. S. S. has cleansed the blood the symptoms pass away, the healthy color returns to the complexion, the old tired, depressed feeling is gone, and the entire health is renewed. Book with information about Malaria and any medical advice free.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi river and became so impregnated with Malaria that for a year I was almost a physical wreck. I tried a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures, and Malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S. S. S. The result was that after taking it for awhile I was as well and strong as I ever was. I have never had a chill since nor the slightest symptom of Malaria. I hope others will be benefited by my experience, and with that end in view I give this testimonial, knowing that S. S. S. is the best remedy for Malaria.

COLOGNE CATHEDRAL CRUMBLING TO PIECES

Only Prompt Action Can Save World Famous Structure From Disintegration.

Cologne cathedral, which it required six centuries to be built, is in imminent peril of disintegration.

Begun in the middle ages and not completed till within little more than a score of years ago, the superb building which is the pride of the city whose name it bears, may crumble and collapse at any moment.

The danger of a catastrophe is pointed out in a report made by the Cathedral Revolution society, an organization formed to collect funds for the periodical repair of the building.

Becoming alarmed at the appearance of cracks throughout its superb surface and the doleful prediction of experts that it was in peril, the society engaged experts and ordered a most careful investigation.

The report just made public has greatly alarmed the state and local authorities, and the steps to make instant repairs have been put under way.

According to the report, there is a portion of the structure where the need for repairs has become so imminent that millions of marks will be necessary to carry them out.

Moreover it will require not less than ten years and possibly twenty before the cathedral can be made safe.

According to the noted government architect, Hartel, who had charge of the investigations, stone after stone has peeled away from its place, rotting with time, and unsettled by the traffic and and bustle which have resulted from the constantly increasing traffic which the result of Cologne's increasing importance from a commercial standpoint.

Prompt Action Imperative.

When the cathedral was built its inceptors had no idea of a city such as has now developed, and the foundations are said to be not of a character to withstand the constant rumbling and shaking. Repairs can be made, for the structure itself is most solidly built, but in order to get the results it will be necessary to start work at once.

Any accident happening the cathedral, similar to that, for instance, which resulted in the loss of the Campanile, would incite the indignation of the entire world, for there is no finer specimen of Gothic architecture in existence.

In all the many superb cathedrals of Europe, none is classed with Cologne as a sample of a pure style of architectural beauty, and the man who would dare suggest that any other edifice, ancient or modern, bears comparison with it, would have a very hard time in making his case good.

The minds turn almost dizzy in contemplating the remarkable antiquity of the cathedral.

Way back in the middle of the thirteenth century it had its origin. Then it was that a humble building erected by the Archbishop Hildebold was burned to the ground.

Even at that early age this building represented the survival of a structure that was already some four centuries old. It had been started by the good Hildebold in the ninth century, and served as a place of worship before many of the nations that now control the destinies of Europe were even dreamed of.

The devout knelt in the church of the sainted Hildebold for many a year, and when it fell in a conflagration details of which can still be found in early history, there was a willing response to an effort to raise funds for a new church.

This new church is the beginning of the cathedral, which is now to be saved by the prompt action of its custodians.

Seventy-four Years to Build Choir.

It took seventy-four years to complete the choir, which was the first part dedicated, for the work was done in the days when the science of building had not progressed to its present advance, and men did not have the devices which now aid so materially in the quick uprising of the wonderful buildings of to-day.

All of those who had had any part in the original plan were dead before the time came for dedicating the choir in 1322, but the work was carried hurriedly on, and never knew a stop until the coming of the era of the Reformation.

Naturally a church designed for the worship which ran directly counter to the spirit of the Reformation was not allowed to go forward in the country where the Reformation had its greatest strength, and the building came to a dead stop, and for many years in a condition of only partial completion, was allowed to remain as it was.

It took the nineteenth century to discover what unrivalled beauties were being allowed to go to waste while the cathedral remained uncompleted.

The Emperor Napoleon, when he visited the city, declared it to have the possibilities of being the finest cathedral in the world, and other experts agreed with the French emperor, who, whatever may be said of his devotion to warfare, and of his zeal to be the conquerer of the world, nevertheless had a keen gift of artistic perception that would perhaps have won him recognition even had he never been the great captain he was.

All Germany became aroused to the beauties of a building that had been studiously neglected, and in the excitement associations were formed which had for their object the raising of funds to bring it to a conclusion.

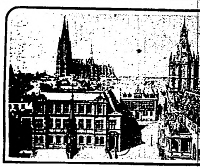
Scientists Sent Delving.

The wise men of the science of architecture were sent delving to find out what had been the first thought of the builders and designers who had carried the building along as far as it had gone, and so logical are the Gothic principles, so absolutely scientific, in fact, that it was not difficult to carry out the thought of those who had dreamed out the cathedral centuries before.

Funds were not only forthcoming from Germany, but every other part of Europe promptly rallied to aid the cause, and even from the United States, the devout sent their stipend to help the cause.

On Sept. 4, 1842, the king of Prussia, who had borne a big part of the burden in collecting funds, and who had also given liberally from his own means, laid the foundation stones of the transept, and from this time great progress was made, the builders straining every effort with the idea of completing the building while the monarch was still on the throne, a dream that was not designed to be realized.

The naves, aisles and transepts were opened in 1848, with most elaborate ceremonials.



Another View of the Cathedral and Cologne.

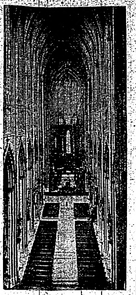
It took eleven years more to bring to completion the magnificent south portal, and the iron central spire, a feature which is admired by every American who inspects the ancient pile, was added in 1860.

It was in 1863 that the building, excepting only the towers was finally completed, and despite the fact that the Civil War then raging in the United States, had done much to deplete the pocketbook of Uncle Sam, many Americans went abroad to see the ceremonies that marked the opening.

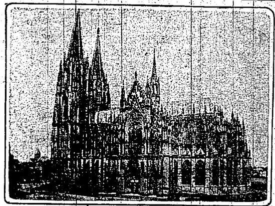
Finally Finished in 1880.

The towers were finally finished in 1880, and on the 15th of October, the entire cathedral, after centuries of preparation, was pronounced at last to be finished, down to the last detail, and in the presence of the venerable William I., most of the sovereign princes of the Fatherland, and the great Bismarck, the hero of the war that resulted in the United Germany, the cathedral was thrown open to the admiring gaze of the world with ceremonies of most impressive beauty.

The cathedral is a massive of proportion as it is beautiful, graceful and artistic in outline. It is 440 feet in length and has a width of 200 feet. This means that it covers considerably more ground than can be found in the average block of even a big city. The roof towers 201 feet in the air, and the top of the spire of the central tower over the crossing is 357 feet. The two main towers go almost as high as the Washington monument, being 537 feet high, which is only a difference of 13 feet smaller than the notable edifice at Washington.



Interior View of Cologne Cathedral.



Cross View of the Cathedral.

The interior of the cathedral has been fitted up with a lavish indifference to expense. The wealth of Europe has been liberally poured into the church for the placing of altars, shrines, vestments, and a host of other features of religious worship.

The foremost singers of the world have been delighted to sing in the famous choir, and the organ is notable for its richness of tone and the fame of those who have played on its keys.

Americans visiting Cologne have always in great numbers made it a point to attend services in the Cathedral on Sundays, and there are times when it is little short of impossible to gain admission, so great is the outpouring.

Already money has been liberally subscribed to assist in the work of saving the cathedral, and the work will begin at once.

The Imposing Spires of the Cathedral.

WHAT KILLED THE PONY.

Drank From an Alum Spring and the Constriction Shut Off His Breath.

"I had a little experience with animals and water myself," spoke up another whose attire did not speak of the traveling man but rather of the native Montanan.

"I used to be in the Yellowstone National park before there was ever a road there or a forest guard or soldier. In fact, I helped pick out the routes by which the tenderfeet of the present day see the wonders of nature and occasionally the wonderful nerve of the highwayman. Naturally the old trails led along a different course from the present roads, for we used to take the shortest way across and where we could not ride we would walk and lead our ponies.

"One day I was riding between the upper and the lower geyser basin, and my pony and I came to a creek which looked as if it would be pleasant to taste. I stopped the nag to taste the water, but the pony beat me to it. He had his muzzle buried up to his eyes in an instant, and in less than half that time he had it back out with a roar of pain that could be heard a mile away. The water was boiling hot, but the heat of the ground near the earth kept the steam from rising. The pony jerked away from me and went bucking and bawling through the trees, carrying my blankets and grub with him.

"It was two days before I found him and caught him again. Then all of the hair was off his muzzle from his eyes to his nostrils. I greased his head with bacon fat and made the nag as comfortable as possible. It was necessary that I should ride him, for I had an appointment on the banks of Yellowstone lake with the rest of the party, and I turned his nose gently in that direction.

"Next day we came to a stream which came directly out of a snow bank, and the pony, depending upon that sign of coolness, put his head down and took another drink. The result was that his mouth and nostrils shrunk up so that he could no longer whinny or breathe. Within two minutes he was dead. Investigation showed that he had drunk from an alum spring; what we believed to be snow was alum crystals. I stripped the saddle from the horse and packed it ten miles to camp.

"From that day to this I have never tasted water on my occasional trips to the Yellowstone Park, and I do not see how I can be blamed for my action either."

Mournful numbers—the balance on the wrong side of the sheet.

PAYS TO HAVE EYES THAT WON'T BEHAVE

Anna Held Makes Million Dollars in Twelve Years, and Will Quit Stage to Reform Her Eyes.

After a dozen years of trial, Anna Held has decided that she can never make her eyes behave while before the public, and is going to quit the stage and, in quiet domestic life, attempt their reformation.

There is ample balm for the fair Anna as she takes her departure, for in her stay on Uncle Sam's boards she has made something like a million dollars with those lustrous eyes.

Not all of that million remains, for not every production in which the little French comedienne figured, has been a success, but enough of the pile remains to assure Miss Held, or to be accurate, Mrs. Ziegfeld, comfort for the remainder of her days, and she is still a very young woman at that.

It is to the witchery of a wonderful pair of orbs that Miss Held owes most of her stage success.

When she was first brought from Paris some dozen years ago, she enjoyed a reputation made on the other side by her beauty, but the critics who first noted her work here, while conceding that she was handsome, with a fine pair of shoulders and stunning head of mouse-colored hair, could not see occasion for the vogue she had enjoyed in the French capital.

Then Anna knew only French, and this naturally militated much against the understanding of her songs. About that time, too, the wonderful French artist, Yvette Guilbert, was astonishing this country with her tragic recitations, and the inevitable comparisons, though the lines of the two women are entirely dissimilar, reflected somewhat on the talents of Anna.

Maiden Effort in English.

But then some wise person wrote for her the song: "Oh, Won't You Come and Play Wiz Me?"

This she sang in English, her maiden effort in the tongue.

The words of the verses were not particularly inspiring, but the chorus which she usually sang at some member of the orchestra, preferably the bass violin, made an instant triumph.

She broke out in a short time as a coon song singer, and made good.

Then she had the good fortune to get another song that peculiarly suited her, one of the kind that only come to a performer once or twice in a professional lifetime.

"I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave" was its name and it became a national sensation.

All there was of charm in that beautiful pair of eyes disclosed itself to the full alluring possibility when she sang this song.

Eyes Her Greatest Asset.

The Held voice was never wonderful. It is small and somewhat pinched, but the eyes are the most attractive in existence, and as soon as Anna turned them loose on an audience, from that minute the crowd was hers.

Men and women alike were unable to resist that pair of orbs, in which at will she could flash every shade of meaning and charm.

There was merriment, languor, romance, appeal, winsomeness, hope, excitement, every shade of expression, in the deep colored orbs, and a rush of encores never failed to follow every repetition of the song.

But that great pair of eyes won something besides audiences and applause.

One of the foremost of young American managers, Florence Ziegfeld, early fell under the charm of the fair Anna, and became a violent suitor for her hand. Just to what extent Anna had to try on him the glory of her pupils and lashes none but herself or Mr. Ziegfeld could tell, but it is a certainty that before she had been in this country long she had become the bride of the young manager, and was lifted into prominence in a series of the most sumptuous productions.

Sumptuous Productions.

Ziegfeld put on his young bride in sumptuous operas and musical plays, "Mlle. Napoleon" being a production that cost an enormous sum of money.

He never failed to pit in rivalry against his wife the most beautiful bevy of young women that money could procure.

Many another star might have feared this competition, but Miss Held welcomed it, in spite of the fact that she is short of stature.

But at all times she enjoyed an advantage for she had the Held eyes, and these were mercifully denied to the other girls against whom she courted comparison.

Anna Held got into court several times, but it was almost impossible to beat her.

Whenever she faced either judge or jury the Held eyes got in their work. The hardest hearted old cermedgeon of a judge could not but melt when he looked into the depths of the lamps of her soul, and as for juries, they were a hopeless mark against the battery of glances which she could fire into them without seeming to be conscious of what she was doing.

In one case her use of her eyes actually became a matter of court record.

Miss Isabelle Evesson, a well known actress, had been engaged to play Coralie, in the production of "Papa's Wife."

On very short notice she was discharged, and at once she entered suit, claiming that under contract she was entitled to thirteen weeks' more salary than was granted her.

Miss Evesson's attorney claimed that it had been jealousy of Miss Evesson's beauty, and the superb gowns she wore that had led Miss Held to get her out of the company, while the Held counsel argued that it was incapacity that had caused the discharge of the actress. When the case came before the court both actresses were present, and counsel for Miss Evesson actually complained to court that by the use of her eyes, Miss Held was seeking to prejudice the jury. Anna Held won the case.

Now the Held eyes are to pass off the footlights, and their charm will only be known in the domestic circle.

But their reward for a dozen years' work, a million dollars, justly entitles them to a little rest and good behavior.

"Oh! Won't You Come Out and Play With Me?"

"I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave."

Anna's Glance Is Certainly Most Alluring.

TREMENDOUS OIL WELL PUSH.

California Gusher Breaks Through Eight-Foot Cap of Cement.

The breaking out of the great Paumer well in Cat canyon, Santa Maria, after being shut in for some two weeks while the great sumpholes and tanks were being emptied, again draws attention to that great wonder of California.

So big is the gusher that the Eastern oil man's mind seems incapable of grasping it. The well was capped by an enormous block of solid cement eight feet in height, placed right over the top of the pipe. The pressure upon this was reckoned at some 400 pounds to the inch.

The well broke loose on Friday evening, according to the dispatches. That it should have lifted the huge block seems incredible. It was anticipated on Thursday that this would be removed in a day or two and preparations were then on for that event, which was looked forward to with anticipation all over the vast field. Quite a few in the older district and in town were keeping posted with a view to going in automobiles eighteen to twenty miles to see it start again.

The All City Derrick, the organ of Pennsylvania oil that lays claim to being a special authority on the industry but which never reaches beyond Oklahoma, recently declared flatly that it was impossible for statements published about this well to be true, as, for instance, it insists that a flow of 4,000 barrels daily through a four-inch pipe is beyond belief. The Derrick's statement simply arouses derision among those who know the facts, for what it declares impossible is known to all to be actually short of literal truth.

The Palmer has earthen sumpholes for some 40,000 barrels, two completed steel tanks of 10,000 capacity each and two others of like size nearly finished. The quantity of sand that comes to depths of ten to twelve feet. The shut down was to get an opportunity of cleaning the sumpholes so they could be utilized as well as to get rid of the oil.

Costly Extras.

"I wanted to send a silver spoon to my little nephew for his first birthday," said the fond aunt, "so the other day I went down town to get it. I found a pretty one for 85 cents and congratulated myself on getting off so cheap. Of course, I wanted it engraved. That was 3 cents a letter. Eight letters in the child's name and eleven letters in the date made 57 cents. My car fare down and back to select the spoon was 10 cents; then to get it after the engraving was done, 10 cents more. Postage to register and send the package, 14 cents. So the spoon was 85 cents and the extras 91 cents. Next time I'll send him a $1 bill in a letter."

Which One Owns This Tree?

For sixty years and more a tree has stood on the dividing line between two properties in Germantown, Pa. It is a big tree now, and the base of the trunk extends twenty-two inches on land owned by R. G. Beale and fourteen inches on the property of Charles Spoerl. The latter, making improvements, arranged to have the tree cut down, but Mr. Beale has obtained a preliminary injunction, and the case will be thrashed out in court.

Enemies Now.

They were not on the best of terms by any means.

"Do you believe that genius and insanity are the same?" said the one in the green mushroom hat.

"Why do you ask?" demanded the tall one in the turban.

"Well, a genius proposed to me last night."

"Oh, well that shows insanity."

Successful theatrical managers should thank their stars.

In the Bill.

"Doctor," said the shrewd looking man, "how many feet of gas does it take to kill a person?"

"That's rather a queer question," replied the doctor. "Why do you wish to know?"

"Well, you see, one of the guests at my hotel used enough of it to kill himself, and I want to send in a proper bill to his executors."

Nautical Learning.

Little Mermaid—I have read of the origin of the papa shad, but can't find how the mamma shad was created.

Mamma Mermaid—She was fashioned from a rib of the papa shad.

A woman's idea of a brave man is one who isn't afraid to go into a dark closet in which there may be a mouse.

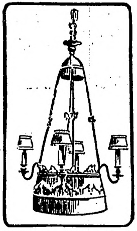
WOMAN AND HOME

YELLOW LIGHT BEST

IT MAKES THE LIVING ROOM SEEM COZY.

How the Glaring Blaze of Incandescent Lamps in the Home May Be Toned Down with Tinted Shades.

The indefinable thing that we call atmosphere in a house, cottage or apartment depends to a large extent on the lighting of the place. Under the glaring blaze of incandescent lights streaming from above, the coziest place in the world becomes bleak or garish looking, while with shaded lamps, low lights or candles the most modest dwelling takes on an indescribable charm.



Chandelier in Yellow with Gilt Decorations.

The matter of lighting seldom impresses women as more necessary to their appearance even than dresses and complexions. The wrong light in one's sitting room extinguishes any claims to good looks one may believe one's self to have, while, on the contrary, with the right sort of light faces and frocks appear at their best. The most flattering light comes from electric lights placed in rows in the cornice of a high wall. This, however, is only possible to the extremely rich.

Yellow is an excellent color for a strong light. It softens and at the same time intensifies it and a yellow shade can be veiled in different colors until just the right degree of illumination is reached. The chandelier illustrated here combines yellow with gilt. The shades are of stiff yellow paper with gilt garlands and fringe of yellow beads.

Japanese lamp shades made of rice paper can be tinted any color that harmonizes with the furnishing of the room or can be covered with silk, cretonne or any material desirable. A good effect is obtained by taking two thicknesses of silk, a darker color for the outside and a light color for reflecting the light inside of the shade.

KITCHEN RACK FOR LIDS.

Bright Woman Devises One of Wire Stretched Across the Pots and Pans Shelf.

The tidy housekeeper finds the many lids of pots, pans and kettles needed in the kitchen a problem to arrange with any degree of order and neatness.

They cannot be hung up, many of them, owing to the shape, will not lie in a pile, and they are woefully unhandy in the dresser drawers.

A bright woman to whom the lids were as the hosts of the evening has now solved the question in a way both easy and inexpensive.

She got a length of strong wire, stretched it across the pots and pans shelf by means of a couple of nails, and on this the lids accompanying all the cooking utensils are neatly arranged. The wire supports them perfectly, and the even row of shiny tin things is by no means unornamental in addition to its handiness.

FURNISHING THE COTTAGE.

Cheap and Pretty Articles That Will Make the Summer Residence Attractive.

If one has the means to furnish a cottage it is quite an easy matter to make an attractive showing, but often one must curtail expenses, and at such times it is best to know just what to purchase to have the cheapest and best articles for the money. There are any number of cheap woven rugs, some in good colors—not lasting, perhaps, but good enough for the cheap cottage. Indian print curtains look very attractive in the cottage, and this material comes in colors that can be used to match other furnishings. The cheapest of light wood furniture must be selected. It is called light mission furniture, because of the square standards, but, in reality, it is merely the cheapest of stained pine, etc. Carpets can be made of denim. It is necessary to stretch this tightly upon the floor. Moss-filled cushions can be made of denim, filled with moss. The cheapest and prettiest of dishes should be included, and a good grade is picked up in the five and ten-cent stores.

In a bungalow home made last summer the interior of the house was nothing but cheap boards, stained a medium shade of green, the curtains were cream cheesecloth and the rugs and carpets the very cheapest of jute. The rooms were given a homey aspect with flowers, books and magazines, but there was not one expensive article in the place, yet inhabited by persons of considerable wealth.

Embroidered Net.

Many of the new summer frocks will be made of heavy net, embroidered in cart wheels. Plain white floss will be used, singly or triple, and the work need not be done by expert hands. It looks very much like rough darning.

Ribbon for Coiffure.

Ribbons are no longer worn threaded in and out through the hair puffs, but are drawn smoothly around the head, with the ends tucked out of sight.

DRESSING TABLE NOVELTY.

Combined Pincushion and Watch Stand That Is Handy and Simple in Construction.

Our sketch illustrates a very handy little article for use either on the dressing-table or the writing-table, and it is very simple in construction.

A piece of fairly thick cardboard three inches wide and 12 inches long, of the shape shown in diagram C., should be cut out and scored across at the points indicated by the dotted lines. This should be covered with velvet or silk, and bent into the form shown in the right-hand diagram and sewn together at A. The interior, B, should then be filled with cotton wool, and the sides covered in with pieces of the same material that has been used for covering the cardboard.

Next, it is entirely edged with a fine silk cord carried into three little loops at the upper corners. In front, a large dress hook is sewn on, and this, for appearance sake, may be bound round and round with narrow ribbon of a color to match the rest of the materials. The sides form the pincushion, and the watch may be hung upon the hook.

SUMMER MOURNING WEAR.

Thin Fabrics Used to Make It More Comfortable in the Hot Months.

Everything possible is being done these days to make mourning as light in weight and comfortable in wear as can be during the summer season.

The fact that thin fabrics are fashionable instead of the weighty ones of the past is of the greatest aid in this respect.

Some of the bordered materials are beautiful, not the least useful among them being the black ones.

Crepe de soie, cashmere de soie, voile and surah silk are fashionable fabrics for mourning gowns. They are trimmed with jet of the dull and brilliant kinds, with filo floss, silk traceries and with net bands covered with braiding.

A mourning suit for walking comprises a dress of black cashmere de soie, with a coat of black ottoman silk, bordered with stitched bands of the cashmere and finished with a single strand of dull jet beads.

The draped veil, once more fashionable, is of net in a rather wide mesh, edged with narrow gofferings of taffeta, or with silk fringe ruched with silk.

Handkerchief Bib for Baby.

A pretty handkerchief makes a neat bib for a baby, a short corner turning over a larger one concealing a little pad of quilted cotton. There is nothing prettier than these for children's yokes. They are also a pretty finish for a small girl's aprons. They may be applied to a white linen parasol, one in each section, diamondwise, with extremely good effect. Cases for gloves and for veils can be made of silk the size of a handkerchief with an interlining of perfumed cotton and covered on one side with a handkerchief folding once in book form and furnished with pink ribbon ties. Bows of ribbon on the upper half will form the decoration. Again a sachet for a drawer may be developed by inclosing a large perfumed sachet in a slip of thin silk and then into a bag formed with two handkerchiefs, a large bow in one corner being the finish.

TRIFLES OF THE WARDROBE

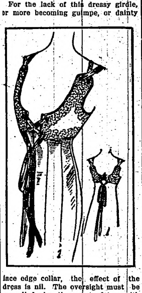
VALUE OF REMNANTS

PRETTY BITS THAT COMPLETE THE WARDROBE.

Black Satin, Silk and Taffeta for Belts and Sashes—Guimpes Made of Net and Fancy Lace Scraps.

No matter how carefully a season's wardrobe has been prepared, there is always something which is lacking at the last moment. This may be a single trifling thing which a rush to the shops will at once supply, but quite as often it is some supplementary article found absolutely necessary to make a garment becoming.

For the lack of this dressy girdle, or more becoming guimpe, or dainty lace edge collar, the effect of the dress is nil. The oversight must be remedied nine times out of ten, with home sewing, and then, if the sewer has been wise in her generation and bought the pretty remnants which are needed some time or other in every sewing household for just such touches, the labor is diminished by half. For it is far easier to shape a pretty thing from generous lengths of material on hand than it is to make it from a skimpy guessed-at quantity.



As black is so generally becoming I would advise all gatherers of fixing remnants to consider lengths of rich black satin, silk or taffeta. Unnumbered and most begaying belts, sashes and scarfs on colored dresses are in black, and the sharp contrast is far richer than when the costume is all in one color. But the black note is scant—just the belt and sash alone, or the bias cravat which ties at the throat and is finished with gold or black tassels.

For the indispensable guimpe which so many summer dresses need, the pretty scraps of net and fancy lace which are sold so cheaply everywhere are found most useful when on hand, as well as any thin white material out of which collars, cuffs and jabots may be turned. In fact, if one keeps her wits—for the remnant fever is a species of disease when carried too far—the daintiest flummeries can be turned out at home for less than half the cost of the same thing in the shop. Besides there will be a great deal more individuality if the sewer has taste of her own, and paints her work, as you might say, with the roses of her own heart.

A charming bodice decoration is displayed in our illustration. The upper fixing is made of cashmere with soutache braid as trimming, and is laced with black velvet ribbons, while the lower garniture is of satin, richly embroidered, and its sash portions of soft messaline silk. Less than three-eighths of a yard of cashmere in the usual width would be needed for the first fixing and the bordering shoulder straps and lacing demand only 6½ yards of ribbon.

Little Dutch collars are now popular and pretty for young girls. Any scrap of linen would make each design, and if the sewer is gifted in needlework the trifle may become a thing of exquisite daintiness.

A little imported pongee frock seen showed one of these neat neck fixings in the gown material, with needle work of bright scarlet. Another dress—a charming little conceit in soft gray silk—had the collar and jabot of deep yellow batiste, finished with narrow quillings of pure white footing. Both gowns showed what wit and taste could do with a little variation of the conventional thing.

Fashion is a word to obey when it concerns the important features of a get-up, such as the lines of a costume or the shape of a hat, for here marked departures from prevailing styles effect a look of eccentricity. But when it comes to the little thing, home sewers who have taste and ample time may do wonders with a garment and employ all the pretty odds and ends accumulated this long while.

These sensible women, and those who direct the greatest makers themselves, are really the best-dressed in the world of women. They make a point of not following the moods of fashion, which turn every street corner, and set the pace for a number of their own ideas.

So if you are quite certain of your taste—this is essential—go ahead with the summer fixings, and turn out something nobody has ever seen.

UNDERWEAR MUST BE SNUG.

Each Piece Should Be Hipless and Without Gathers to Give Slim Effect.

Unless a woman is of extraordinary slimness every garment she dons must go towards simulating this look. Each piece underlying the willowy picture—corsets and petticoats—must be as nearly as possible hipless, without gathers and void of fullness. In fact, for extremists there are some delightful absurdities in secret garments, these so closely hugging the figure that they are scarcely more than a second skin.

Freakish names are frequently given to some narrow freaks which are really drawers in substance and divided skirts in effect. These are redeemed from utter hideousness with leg falls of deep ribbon-trimmed kiltings; and since they cover tights of silk or fine gauze, they may with decency be the only excuse for a petticoat. Chemises are made mostly in princess form, fitting the figure most carefully, and being low enough also to do away with the need of an extra skirt.

In fact, fashion's one cry in regard to underwear is, "Wear as little as possible." It may not be entirely modest in the opinion of many women, nevertheless the visible movement of the limbs is necessary to give cachet to the beautiful clinging skirts of the hour. Folds seem carven on the marble beneath. The empire dress is the drapery for more "Winged Victories" and other Greek statues of surpassing loveliness.

The Care of Shoes.

When shoes are removed take a moment to put them on the trees and they will keep their shape twice as long. Watch the heels that they do not run over. Nothing looks more careless than boots run over at the heels. It also fatigues one to walk in them.

HAT OF PERIWINKLE STRAW.

Bronze Kid in New Forms.

Bronze kid, hitherto familiar only as a material for slippers or low shoes, is now being made up into all kinds of feminine belongings for which leather is used. Some smart and unusual handbags are shown in this form of kid, also belts, purses and card cases of various shapes and sizes.

To Make Waist Fit.

If a shirt waist has to be raised at shoulder take pattern and lay a small tuck across back and front at center armhole. This will leave original shoulder and neck and will not pucker as if you take up shoulder after it has been cut. My waists always puckered until I discovered this.

Pearl buttons, triangular, oblong and irregular in shape will be worn as trimming on many wash dresses.

CHEAP HOME-MADE RUCHING.

With Paris Muslin for Material, Clever Girl Can Easily Make It at Home.

Now that ruchings are once more in favor the girl who must consider her allowance is often perplexed how to keep up her supply. There are few things so perishable as a ruche and the pretty, becoming ones are not cheap.

Instead of paying from 15 cents a yard up for a ruching that soils in a few wearings, the deft girl makes her own. She uses bias folds of Paris muslin as sheer as can be bought, of organdie or of wash batiste or blonde net.

The double fold is cut to any desired height—the short-necked woman should go easy on deep ruching. The fold is sewed into narrow bands to fit collars and cuffs, after being gathered on the lower edge.

To give the ruche a creped look a steel or wooden knitting needle can be slipped through the folds and the ends pushed as tight together as they will go.

Often the folds are put ungathered into the bands to form a flat ruching. In such case the depth should be much less than when the material is fulled.

The woman who likes a flat ruching can make folds of thin white wash silk sewed into a band. They give just the necessary touch of white at neck and wrist and are easily laundered.

It is wise for the thrifty girl to "do up" her own ruching. Make a pure suds and either add a little stiffening as starch or gum arabic or iron when very damp. Later the ruche can be pulled into fluffiness with the fingers or it can be crinkled over the long needle as described.

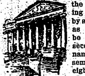
Lingerie hats are to be worn rather more this summer than last, and most of the shapes have drooping brims and broad crowns, flowers or ribbon being used as trimming.

Different colored ribbon bows, to match one's different colored sashes, may be constructed and attached or detached at will.

LITTLE PLAY TIME

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES IS VERY BUSY MAN.

His Working Hours Taken Up with Callers from Every Part of the Country — White House Sometimes "Worked."



One of the most prominent United States senators came out from President Taft's office the other day, having been with him by scheduled time, as it chanced to be recorded, 82 seconds, and yet named to the assembled reporters eight topics of national and international importance which he had discussed with the chief executive. Of course no president of the United States is likely to issue a denial of such a report. Roosevelt overdid the denial business. The statesman himself would probably deny in such a contingency that he had ever given the papers the interview in question; but its issuance helps to make him a big man at home. He is known as conferring with Taft on all sorts of questions, and the amount of beating on the tympanum of the president, which is done purely in aid of the personal ambition of individuals in all walks and grades of life who can get access to him defies exaggertion. A prosperous real estate agent in Washington made his start in life by borrowing White House stationery on which to write letters to his friends in the south while waiting to see a Democratic president of the United States. He used to go regularly to the White House, having no real business with the president, but apparently to borrow the engraved letter heads of the White House with which to impress persons hundreds of miles away from whom he was seeking money for investment in Washington real estate. And the game worked. At the other end of the line he was the house guest of the president. The thrifty promoter rarely took pains to deny this, although he may not absolutely have claimed that honor in so many words. Is it any wonder that the president becomes suspicious?

The cabinet room is filled chock a block during all the waking hours with persons who want to see the president. It is said that he does not pass them along so successfully as Roosevelt did. While this may be true, the fault is primarily with the public, which is pressing him with so many requests. The invitations are among the most difficult with which the president has to deal. Any group of men who arrive in Washington think that as the bearer of an invitation to the dedication of something they have a right to see the president, and while Mr. Taft has accepted an extraordinary number he is probably declining more than any other occupant of his office. The trouble is that the founders of the constitutiton, when the country had but 3,000,000 people, supplied but one man for the presidential office and made little provision for the distribution of its duties among subordinates. One need not go back to Franklin Pierce, who was said to have looked forward to the arrival of a train from this part of the country, which reached Washington in the early evening, because it might bring some welcome callers from his home land, to see the piling up by geometrical ratio of the demands upon the time and attention of the president. Twenty years have made an astonishing difference.

The changed use of the telephone is not without its suggestiveness. Twenty years ago the White House contained just one telephone standing against the wall in the northeast corner room, where the office telegrapher made his headquarters. No one responded to it except during office hours. The president's wife used to send out a maid to transmit a message, usually through one of the clerks, perhaps twice a week. No general appointments were made by it except in the rarest emergency. Its use was not greatly different from that of a fire alarm signal. The White House occupants, either of the family or of the clerical staff, had acquired no telephone habit and were virtually uneducated to its possibilities. What is the situation to-day? The White House central, "Main No. 6," is manned day and night. The exchange connects with virtually every room in the mansion, in the office building and in stables; the man at its switchboard partakes of the nature of a private secretary. Upon him is poured a list of appointments and he is busy making them. It seems as if the entire town were connected with the White House, and also the larger centers of the country. The access of the telephone to the old mansion has repeated the experience of the railroad. It has geared up the wheels of business to a newly accelerated speed, with the result that the pressure upon the president's time is unremitting.

Afternoon Tea with Mrs. Taft.

At her afternoon teas Mrs. Taft serves sandwiches instead of cake, and the table is in the red room. About 25 guests are asked each day to take tea with Mrs. Taft, the invitations being over the telephone. While the guests are arriving a friend pours the tea, but is afterwards relieved by Mrs. Taft, who pours and passes sandwiches and makes the occasion a delightfully informal one.

Strangely Enough, English Firm Failed to Understand Letter from Its Japanese Agent.

An English firm, whose shipment of goods was delayed in reaching Japan, received the following communication from their newly-appointed Japanese agent: "With regard to the matter of escaping the penalty for non-delivery of this—there is only one way to creep round same—by diplomat. We must make a stir or strike occurring in our factory. Of course big untrue. I place my presence on inclosed form of letter and believe this will avoid the trouble of penalty of same. As Mr. ——— is most religious and competent man, also heavy upright and godly, it fears me that useless to apply for his signature. Please therefore attach same at Yokohama office, making forge. But no cause for fear of prison happenings, as this often happens by merchants of high integrity. But if this involves that your honor look mean and excessive awkward for business purpose, I think more better a little serpentlike wisdom of polite manhood and thus found good business edifice." The firm knows as much now about the delay as it did before.

Seek Prevention of Consumption.

The municipal authorities of Berlin have decided to introduce another feature in their administration of tuberculosis. Heretofore, municipal effort has been confined to the maintenance of one or two homes for curable consumptives, but it is recognized that, as useful as this is, it alone cannot cope with this disease. They have resolved, therefore, to devote more attention to preventive measures.

A Broad Discrimination.

There is an elder of a certain church up-state who thinks that things are only half done or not well started in which he has no voice. At a prayer meeting he offered thanks for the safe return from their vacation of the minister and his wife. Albert Draeger, a farmer residing near Wylie, suffered the painful fracture of a leg yesterday aftenoon. Mr. Draeger was in town and started home with a heavy load of lumber. When he was driving down the hill approaching the bidge over the Red Lake River in the north part of town his team started to run. The horses became unmnageable and when they made the turn after crossing the bridge Mr. Draeger was thrown to the ground and suffered the fracture of both bones of the right leg just above the ankle joint. W. H. Fisher and Harry Chapman, who were dirving an automobile, witnessed the accident. They took Mr. Draeger to the Grand View hotel and will be compelled to remain there until the bones have mended sufficiently to warrant his removal to his home. The fracture was reduced promptly and Mr. Draeger will probably suffer no permanent ill effects of the injury.

DR. ARGUE, POLITICIAN

Campaigns for Election of Friend to State Examining Board.

Crookston Times: Dr. Thomas Spence, of this city, and Dr. Argue, of Red Lake Falls, returned ths morning from Minnetonka, where they have been attending the meeting of the State Dental Assn., at which Dr. Robertson and Dr. Remele were also present.

A high honor was conferred upon Dr. W. A. Robertson when he received the unanimous endorsement for appointment on the state board of dental examiners to succeed the member from Duluth, whose term expires soon. This means that Governor Johnson will appoint a Crookston man, as he always follows the recomendation of the state association in making his appointments.

The honor came entirely unsolicited and as a complete surprise to Dr. Robertson. Dr. Spence, Dr. Argue and a few more of his friends started the movement some time ago and the result was unanimous endorsement which is an emphatic recognition of abiliy and personal popularity.

The Star Township assessor is about to depart on the "overland" for Red Lake Falls returning assessment books and lists.

County division? Which direction? East and west? North and south? Suppose we say the latter and wait for a realization.

The Star studio artist is holding his photo machine in shape for a "snap shot" at the promised Soo railroad surveyors. Anyone knowing of their whereabouts, please notify so that some gang of poll tax workers shall not be "mistaken" for railroaders.

Did we hear anything about ditching? Down the Isthmus of Panama they are digging a forty mile long ditch across some very rough country. The largest launches will be able to pass thru this ditch or canal when finished.

O say! Did you hear the latest? The Wall Street R. R. Co. is going to build a new railroad from New York to Coney Island! Talk about railroads! At New York, Philadelphia, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and Winnipeg many scores of them center to points. That is where railroad dreams are real dreams.—Suburban.

THE FORTUNE TELLER

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

One of the church edifices in the town of Harland needed painting, and as the congregation was few in numbers and not well off it was known that the necessary sum could not be raised without a struggle. It was finally decided that a festival and fair should be given, and the various committees went to work with a will. The minister was new to his position and a young man at that, and his zeal probably carried him further than it would an older man. When the committee on entertainment came to him to get his opinion as to introducing a fortune teller for the great evening he seemed a little doubtful, but did not decidedly object. It would bring in a good many extra dimes, and of course no one would take the matter seriously.

The first idea of the committee was for one of themselves to dress up as a gypsy, but a better thing offered. A strange lady who was stopping at the inn for a few days volunteered her services and was on hand at the appointed hour. Her robe was a great success. In fact, it was the attraction of the evening. It might have been noticed by a close observer, however, that, while each patron of the tent entered it with a grin, he or she came out of it with an altogether different expression; also that after about an hour the people began to cool off toward each other, and in a few instances wrangles arose. The festival broke up early and was not the success hoped for. Something had gone wrong, but if anybody could tell just what he didn't come forward.

The next day and every day for a week afterward reports that made the minister uneasy reached his ears. He heard of family quarrels and gossip with an edge to it and at length ascertained that he himself was being talked about. He made one or two efforts to pin certain persons down to certain things and then called for an evening meeting of the entire congregation. They came to the last one in response, and some of them refused to rub elbows with each other. In a plain way and in plain language the good man wanted to know all about it and called on one of his deacons to lead off.

"Well, I can tell you what ails me," replied the deacon as he arose. "My wife paid 10 cents to have her fortune told, and the woman told her that I had pizen in the house to kill her off so's I could get another. It's an infernal lie, but my wife seems to believe it and won't eat at the table with me."

The other deacon was then called upon, and he said that his wife had also had her fortune told. She was told that he had committed a murder before their marriage and would soon be arrested and hanged for it. She was groaning all day and walking the floor all night, and every time she saw a constable pass she had a fainting spell.

Miss Jackson, the spinster, was reluctant to take the floor, she said, and still more reluctant to repeat the words of the prophetess. She felt it her duty, however, and she must say that she was told that the minister was secretly in love with her and would propose within three months. She never had believed in fortune telling and never should, but—but—you know—And she sat down amid a painful silence.

Elder Todd, who hadn't been an elder for twenty years, but had a venerable look and had passed his seventieth birthday, arose to say that his wife had had her fortune told. He had given her a dime, and she had gone into the tent with a smile on her face, but had come out with a buzzsaw expression to tell him that if he didn't take her right home she would murder him. After reaching home she charged him with having kissed the Widow Scott on the bridge one night a week before and her loud talk had probably been overheard by the neighbors. He wanted to deny the kissing in toto. He was getting ready for the grave instead of frolicking around at his age. His wife still stuck to it that he was a guilty wretch, but that was one of the crosses he must bear.

The Widow Scott was waiting for him to finish. She had had her fortune told. Nothing had been said about her being kissed on a bridge in the dark of the moon by a man with venerable whiskers. What she had been told was that Mr. Taylor, a neighbor, had stolen cucumbers from her garden. She had charged him with it, and he had threatened to begin a lawsuit. Let him begin and be hanged to him! She was a woman that couldn't be bluffed.

Then there was the case of the Widow Clymer. She had always had a contempt for fortune telling, but what could she say when told the exact date of her poor husband's death, the color of his hair and the age of the cow that stove his ribs in with a kick? Then she had been told that three different sisters of the church were gossiping about her and saying she used powder and dyed her hair, and she wanted them and all others to understand that she was no such woman. Others were waiting to speak, but the mystery had now become clear to the minister, and he said:

"The money that we raised will go to the heathen instead of for paint, and in future our church festivals will consist only in ice cream and cake and spelling school. Special services will be held next Sunday afternoon to see if we can't get our common sense back."

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby Given, That on the 30th day of July 1909, at Two o'clock P. M., at the auditor's office in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 35 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, State of Minnesota, by their order bearing date the Nineteenth day of June, 1909, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the Engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet, and from thence, successively, up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from Station Number "0" to Station Number "346" inclusive, being the whole of said main ditch No. 35 and contemplating the excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth, the same to be placed along the side of the ditch in such a manner as to form a turnpike or grade and in the time and manner described in the plans, profile, maps and specifications of the Civil Engineer in charge, all on file in my office, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to completed within the time required, and in the manner specified, in said Engineer's report. And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said County, with two freehold sureties for the faithful performance and fulfillment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file, and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of such ditch is as follows: The excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth being estimated at Seven thousand three hundred and seventy three and 50-100 ($7,373.50) Dollars.

The estimated total cost of the work is $9,678.85-100 Dollars.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said County, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved.

Dated June 28th, 1909.

RED LAKE COUNTY EXHIBIT AT STATE FAIR

Will be an Excellent Advertisement of Agricultural and Dairy Industries.

Commissioners Appropriate Five Hundred Dollar to Cover the Expense.

At the meeting of the county commissioners held this week a resolution was passed appropriating $500.00 to cover the expense of making a Red Lake county exhibit at the state fair. This is certainly an action that cannot be criticized. Red Lake county has been making great progress as an agricultural and dairy country. Nothing will prosper the country more than a greater development along these lines and a little advertising such as the commissioners have made provision for will be valuable.

Every farmer in the county should become interested and contribute to making the exhibit the success it should be. Farmers should from time to time bring samples of their best products to town to be prepared for the exhibit. At this time clover, timothy, and other grasses should be brought in. Later, as they mature, the small grains, corn, and potatoes should be brought in. Mayor Duffy or any of the land men will see to it that any products brought in for the exhibit are taken care of so that they will be in the best condition for the display at the state fair.

GOT MOST MONEY.

Red Lake Falls Firemen Got $255 at Tournament.

The athletes of the Red Lake Falls fire department got $255 in prize money at the tournament at Crookston last week. Crookston got $237.50, Warren $122.50, Bemidji $45, Ada $30. Of the special prizes Theodore Garceau of Red Lake Falls got a silver medal, Crookston won a silver set and the Crookston team will hold the association banner, having won the association race, until the next tournament, when it will be necessary for them to defend it. The Crookston Chronicle stated that Red Lake Falls won $225 in prize money, but the Chronicle's adding machine was out of order on the day when the tournament story was written. The tournament will be held at Bemidji next year and no doubt the people of that city will make strenuous efforts to equal the fine showing made by Crookston in entertaining the firemen.

Big Farm Sold.

The Jos. Laurent farm in Terrebonne, considered by many the finest farm in the county, and it is doubtful if there is a better one, was sold this week to Mrs. Napleon Lusian of Charles City, Iowa. The farm contains about four hundred acres and it is reported that the purchase price was fifty dollars per acre. That is probably the biggest price that Red Lake county land has ever sold for. While this sale is an indication as to the value placed on Red Lake county, it does not mean that this sale price is a market value for all good land in the county, for there are few farms in the county or in the northwest that would be considered as saleable property as the Laurent farm. The sale was made by E. A. Columbus.

THE BAND WILL PLAY

Red Lake Falls Concert Band Will Give Open Air Concert.

Director Brunelle advises the Gazette that the band boys will give a concert next Tuesday evening. No set program has been arranged, but the band boys will play a number of their best selections. The fine concert given a month ago is a guaranty that the air will be filled with pleasing and harmonious sounds Tuesday evening.

Columbus-Morinville.

Miss Florence Columbus and Mr. Telesphore Morinville were married Wednesday, July 14. The ceremony occurred at St. Mary's church, Rev. Fr. Ambrose officiating, at six o'clock in the morning. It was a quiet wedding only a few relatives witnessing the ceremony. Mr. Morinville and his bride drove to Perrault Station and there boarded the Northern Pacific train for a short wedding trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Morinville have many friends in Red Lake Falls and in the county who are glad of the opportunity to offer congratulations and well wishes.

Jeffers Was There—Very Much.

Frank Jeffers, the county register of deeds of Red Lake county, spent the past two days in the city and yesterday was very much in evidence in the firemen's events. He was naturally very highly elated at the splendid showing made by the Red Lake Falls firemen and after the victories yesterday he acted as bandmaster in a few stunts before the Hotel Crookston which made a hit with all the spectators. A firemen's tournament would not be complete without Frank Jeffers. —Crookston Times.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

Gathering of Christian Workers in the Saintly City.

Paul Pry's Newsy and Spicy Political and Personal Comment.

St. Paul, July 12.

Thursday was parade day of the international society of Christian Endeavor now in convention in St. Paul. It was an inspiring as well as an unusual sight to see this Christian army of ten thousand marching through the streets of St. Paul from the auditorium to the state capitol singing on their way songs of rejoicing in the glory of the cross. And indeed this is the day of a militant Christianity. It is doubtful if there ever was a time in the history of the world notwithstanding any discredit to which mere theories of dogmatists and theologians may be subject, when the cardinal doctrins taught by the men of Galilee were so much a rule of life. Bryan was unquestionably right when he saw in the signs of the time the evidences of a great ethical revolution which is impressing itself more and more on the lives of the people of the nation and of the world.

Bryan Prominent.

In Thursday's proceedings Bryan was whether through accident or design, given the most important part. I believe the situation is at least in this country quite unique in which a man whose principal occupation is recognized as that of a professional politician should be given precedence at a purely religious demonstratation over bishops, ministers and other dignitaries of the church, and it is more peculiar still that there was nothing incongruous in it. For whatever people may think of Mr. Bryan as a political leader or of some of his theories of finance of government or of administration, we all recognze in him a great moral teacher and a man of as nearly pure and blameless life as falls to mortals. It seems to me to speak well for a political party that it should for years recognize the leadership of such a man and that so many of its members should give to him a confidence which it has been rarley the fortune of anyone to enjoy. And in this connection I think it more than anything else evidences the innate uprightness and probity of the character of the American people that they have singled out as typical and natural leaders Roosevlet and Bryan because of a conviction that the men are possessed in a superior degree of those sterling qualities of honesty and sincerity which are the corner stones of Christian character.

His Views on Temperance.

The St. Paul papers, unfortunately, as I think, have failed to give more than the baldest outline of any of the three addresses made Thursday by Mr. Bryan before the Christian Endeavor convention. His most notable utterance was made at the auditorium, when he took in a subject on which a democratic leader is not popularly assumed to be an authority, namely, temperance. On this subject he was singularly outspoken. He made it quite plain that in his opinion a professed Christian, if for no other reason than the influence of his example, should be a total abstainer. To the political phase of the question he made but a passing reference, but he made it clear that in his opinion the world would be better and people far more happy and more prosperous if the traffic in intoxicating drinks could be entirely suppressed. Referring to the fact that there were many occasions on which persons were induced to accept a glass of wine offered for fear of giving offense he was greeted with a hearty round of applause when he said, "I hope to see the day when the offense will be, not in refusing to accept a drink, but in offering it."

Man or Money.

Mr. Bryan used a phrase in his speech at the capitol which struck me as being unusually pregnant and full of meaning. He spoke of a tendency of too great devotion of money getting, being that a man shall become "the slave of his possessions." If to accumulate wealth the development of a full manhood is sacrificed it is natural that as our possessions increase individuality and character should be dwarfed. "The application of Christian thought and Christian purpose of life," he continued, "mean the regeneration of the man and woman. It means that the man will be a higher type, a better illustration of what he ought to be; it means that business will be made more honest, that conscience will not be an outlaw in the counting room. It means above all that conscience shall become a factor in the public life of the nation."

Minnesota's Governor.

There was a good deal of disappointment because Governor Johnson could not be prevailed upon to address the throng that crowded the steps of the state capitol. He occupied, however, a prominent place on the platform, and there wasn't a loyal Minnesotan that did not feel a thrill of pride as he noted how distinguished he looked as he sat beside these men of national and world-wide reputation, and a confidence that in any situation in which he might find himself placed he had the presence as well as the ability to adequately uphold the dignity of the state over whose destinies he presides.

A Cosmpolitan Cathering.

The gathering was not merely national; it was cosmopolitan in character. India send greetings by the missionary delegates from its Christian Endeavor society. Mr Phelps, the British Minister at Washington, who hoped to be present, sent an appreciative letter regretting his inability to attend the covention, as did also Mr. Nicholls, a working man's representative, now takng a distinguished part in the debate on the budget in the the British

GIVE THE FARM A NAME

A law, chapter 154, passed by the last legislature, provides for the registering of names of farms, giving them the same value to the owner of the land as attaches to trade marks and trade names.

There is no doubt that for advertising purposes, if for no other reason, the naming of a farm has a value and since the property right in the name is protected no doubt the practice of naming farms will become more common.

The law provides that owners of farm lands in the State of Minnesota may designate special names of his farm lands and the said name together with desciption of said farm lands, according to the government survey thereof, may be filed with the register of deeds of the county wherein the said lands or a part thereof are situated and the said name together with the description of said land shall be recorded by the register of deeds in a book to be provided for such purpose, upon payment of fifty (50) cents therefor, but no two names so designated and recorded shall be alike in the same county.

Buse Will Sell Maps.

E. G. Buse has accepted the agency for the Red Lake county map published by Ex-Register of Deeds E. L. Quist and will call on the progressive citizens in the near future.

This map is one of the finest productions for the price of any map ever published in this state and from an educational standpoint is one of the finest investments that a farmer could make. It should be found in every farm home as a convenience in transacting business.

King Edward a Busy Man.

Even Theodore, the much occupied, is a person of leisure compared to Edward VII. The Langdon correspondent of "Town and Country" reports the content of a note from one of the King's equerries stating that "his Majesty's engagement do not warrant him in the disposal of a single hour before September." TELEPHONE WAR AT THIEF RIVER FALLS

People up the River Having All Sorts of Trouble Over the Hello Business.

Northwestern Wants to Use Streets—Municipal Ownership Proposition Defeated.

There is a telephone war at Thief River Falls and it is causing the people of the city much concern. The Tri-State has had a local exchange in the city for many years. After its establisment a franchise for a long distance line was granted to the Nortwestern. That company later desired to put in a local exchange, but the city refused to let them do so. There was a legal fight over the matter and it was judicially determined that their franchise did not give them the right to do as they desired. The next move is to seek to connect with the Finch-Winslow-Carlyle wholesale grocery house and other business places and give them long distance, but not be local, service. The city is resisting this move and the fight has again gone into court. The issues in the case were last week argued before Judge Watts who has not yet decided whether the company can make the proprosed connections under the franchise for a long distance line.

On Tuesday a special election was held to vote on the proposition to establish a municipal local exchange, the city either to construct a system or purchase of the Tri-State. The proposition failed to carry, the vote being exactly even, 153 to 153.

IN SEARCH OF BROTHER

Chas. Sall Goes to Alaska on Serious Mission.

Chas. Sall of Equality township has gone to Alaska to make an investigation, the object of which is to determine what has become of his brother.

Some two months ago the brother, Oscar Sall, went to Alaska to look after extensive mining holdings. For some time nothing has been heard from him directly and this has caused his relatives much concern. Recently it was learned that he had sold some valuable mining property and that in one bank he had deposits amounting to $10,000, but as to his whereabouts nothing was learned. These facts are enough to arouse suspicion and it is feared that he may have met with foul play. Chas. Sall is accompanied on the trip by Attorney Loring of Crookston.

Visiting Her Brother.

Arriving here recently was Mrs. Emma Marshall of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, and Mrs. C. C. Jackson of Thief River Falls, also in Minnesota, who are at present visiting with Mrs. Marshall's brother, L. M. Klepper, the well-known monument dealer of the city.

The two ladies, who are close friends, have been traveling for some time and will still travel extensively before returning to Minnesota.

They first visited Los Angeles, after arriving on the Pacific coast, then San Francisco and Eureka. After leaving here they will proceed to Portland and the Seattle exposition, before they will return to their Eastern homes.—Eureka (Cal.) Daily Times.

J. L. TRACY PROMOTED

Has Gone to Fergus Falls—Omar Hall Now Local Agent.

J. L. Tracy, who has been the Great Northern agent for the past six years in Red Lake Falls, has been promoted. Mr. Tracy left Monday for Fergus Falls and in the future will be the company's agent in that city. The people of Red Lake Falls know that Mr. Tracy's promotion is deserved and all are glad that it has come to him, though his leaving means a loss to Red Lake Falls. Many friends here will wish Mr. and Mrs. Tracy prosperity and contentment in their new home.

Omer Hall, who has been connected with the local station as operator since Mr. Tracy has been here, has been promoted to the agency. It is a well earned promotion and one that is pleasing to Mr. Hall's many friends.

Commissioners Meet.

The county commissioners were in session Monday and Tuesday and much business of importance was tansacted. A part of the proceedings of the meeting are published in this issue and the remainder will be published next week. The meeting was adjourned until next Tuesday. On Monday the commissioners will meet as a board of equalizaton.

FIRE AT BAGLEY.

Mill Burned Tuesday Morning Loss $20,000.

The 75-barrel roller mill at Bagley was destroyed by fire early Monday morning. The fire is believed to have originated from spontaneous combustion. The loss is about $20,000, with $12,000 insurance.

CHARTER COMMISSION WILL MEET TUESDAY

To Frame Amendments to the City Charter to be Submitted to Voters.

Amendments Will Be Voted Upon at Next City Election.

Mayor Duffy has called a meeting of the charter commission recently named by Judge Watts. The members of the commission will meet at the city hall at one o'clock p. m., Tuesday, July 27. The commission will draft che proposed amendments to the city tharter to be submitted to the voters at the next city election.

State Mortuary Record.

Mortuary statistics for Minnesota for the year 1908 are the most complete ever, obtained owing to a law of 1907, requiring death certificate to be filed before buial permits are issued.

The state board of health record shows 43,018 births and 20,715 deaths, not including 1,296 still births. The 1907 record was 39,277 births and 19,945 deaths, including still births. The increase for 1908 is attributed patly to increase population and partly to more complete reports.

The total for three large cities was as follows: Minneapolis, births 5,836, deaths 3,108; St. Paul, births 4,6064, deaths, 2,177; Duluth, births 1,735, deaths 882. March leads the other months in both births and deaths.

MINNESOTA HONORED.

Senior Editor of The Gazette Honored by Librarians.

Minneapolis Tribune: The kitchen cabinet is feeling fit and fine. One of its members has been highly honored. John King, state librarian, has returned from New Hampshire, where he attended the national convention of state librarians, and modestly announced upon his return that all he had carried away was the presidency. The association is an affiliated branch of the National Association of Librarians. Mr. King is one of the youngest members of the kitchen cabinet and one of the cleverest. His confreres have been showering congratulations upon him.

Game Opens Early.

J. A. Duffy, of Red Lake Falls, is favorably mentioned as representative for the upper end of this district. The game seems to be opening rather early.—Twin Valley Times.

RED LAKE FALLS, MINNESOTA

REIGN OF TALL GIRLS.

At Its Height Now, but the Small Girl's Turn Is Coming.

Brigades of exceptionally tall girls practically rule hospitality all over the country. They need not be pretty or intelligent, for they are expected to do nothing except be tall.

A tall girl season now means that every hostess must endeavor to produce a predominating impression of tallness at her parties. Tall dinners and tall dances become a social ambition; small men find themselves suddenly useful as an effective means of creating a contrast when semi-Amazons must be entertained.

There is no limit which can be regarded as reasonable when once the craze for tallness commences, yet at the moment when with that mysterious facility of the feminine nature tall girls seem to be looming up in all directions the edict goes forth that her reign is over and the little woman is in the ascendant.

Men would seem to have rather ingeniously guarded against fashions in height by becoming almost uniformly of medium stature. The present prediction of smaller men need not be taken seriously; from every point of view moderation in inches has been found satisfactory, now that we never know from one year to another whether women are going to be ridiculously small or absurdly tall.

BUSINESS AFTER PLEASURE.

Effect of Regulation Handout on the Wealth of a "Poor Old Beggar."

The prosperous wholesale grocery dealer had sold out his buisiness preparatory to departing for the west to live. He was reflecting the next morning on the prospect of getting a good price for his house, which the day before he had advertised for sale, when the doorbell jingled merrily.

"Sir," said the maid, putting her head in at the library door a moment later, "it's the old beggar from the corner near your store, sir."

"Old Joe, the beggar, eh?" rejoined the retired buisiness man, taking from his pocket a coin. "I presume the wretched old fellow missed my customary contribution this morning and has come for it. Here, give him this dollar."

The maid went away with the money and again returned.

"I gave the dollar, sir," said she, "and he seemed very thankful for it, but he says he'd like to speak a moment with you on business, sir."

"What business can that old beggar have with me?"

"He says that if you can bring the price of this house down to $20,000 cash, he'd buy it, sir."

The Way of Authors.

James Whitcomb Riley is evidently no believer in the greatness or enduring quality of modern literature. Some time ago a friend was talking to him about the good times that novelists of today have compared with those of the past.

"You modern writers don't work so hard," he said, "and you are paid twenty times as much as you ought to be."

Mr. Riley gently shook his head. "You labor under a misapprehension, my boy," he replied. "The chief difference between the old authors and those of today is simply this: They died and their works live; our works die and we live—as best we can."—Judge.

One of the Regulars.

During the encampment of several regiments of British soldiers in a certain district the wood and turf used for cooking purposes were carted by the neighboring farmers. One day a donkey cartful of turf was brought in, the driver being a country lad. As a regimental band was playing he stood in front of the donkey and held the animal tightly by the head. Some of the "smart ones" gathered round highly pleased, and the wit of the party asked why he "hold his brother so tightly."

The reply was crushing: "I'm afraid he might enlist."

The Best Part of the Speech.

Young James had never heard his papa speak in public, and it was thought time to take him to hear his father delivering a lecture. During the evening a stray dog which ventured upon the platform was disposed of as gracefully as possible. On the wa yhome James was asked how he liked his father's lecture, and gave the answer, "It was all right, papa, but I liked the part where you put the dog out the best."

The Result.

"I thought you were working on Smith's new house," said the house painter's friend.

"I was going to," replied the house painter, "but I had a quarrel with him, and he said he'd put the paint on himself."

"And did he do it?"

"Yes, that is where he put most of it."

The Price of It.

"There," said Borem, "that's what I think you should do in the matter. I'm no lawyer, but this is just a little bit of advice that costs you nothing. What do you think of it?"

"Well," replied Wise, "it's worth it."

Caring for the Dogs.

Dogs are well provided for on the Prussian railroads. The latest arrangement for the comfort of touring canines is hot-water pipes and spring mattresses. A bit of hard board with no spring in it is the ordinary man's or woman's portion.

WASTE OF WATER IS TO BE STOPPED

SURVEY WILL SHOW VALUE OF CONSERVING LAKE AND RIVER RESOURCES.

TO PUSH WORK TO COMPLETION

Engineer Ralph Points Out the Need of a Comprehensive Plan—Drawbacks in Drainage.

St. Paul.—The government engineers, who are co-operating with the state drainage board in making a topographical survey of the state, are at work in Otter Tail and Pope counties, where they started making a topographical map of the whole state. The Pope and Otter Tail region was selected on account of its many lakes and streams.

"We desire to impress upon the people the importance of preserving our lakes and water resources," said George Ralph, state engineer. "These maps will show up the lakes and their storage capacity. In some places the people try to drain some of our beautiful lakes."

Push Work to Completion.

A topographical survey of the country surrounding the Twin Cities and also the country around Duluth was made some time ago by the government, so that work will not be gone over again. The work now started in the lake region will be continued as fast as possible so that before very long a complete survey of the whole state will be made.

"We are trying to work for the future as much as possible," said Mr. Ralph.

Need Comprehensive Plan.

"We are giving as much of our time and resources as possible to helping out the regions of the state which are settled or which will be settled in the immediate future. We are doing all we can toward getting surveys which will show where the reservoirs, empounding dams and the like can be built.

"The great overflows in the Minnesota valley show the results of building ditches without any general plan. It the channel had been improved and reservoirs built a great deal of those floods would have been averted. We needed just that kind of an object lesson."

LOOKS OVER UPPER RIVER.

Federal Engineer Investigates Navigability of Mississippi.

Brainerd.—E. J. Dugan, United States engineer in charge of the government water reservoir system in the upper Mississippi valley, has completed an examination of the river from Grand Rapids to Little Falls.

He says he found the river from Grand Rapids to Aitkin in fairly good shape. From Brainerd to Aitkin it is in fairly good shape and navigable except for the Deerwood bridge, which is too low to let the large boats used on the upper river pass under, except at the very lowest stage of water.

From Deerwood to Little Falls the river is a succession of wide, shoal stretches with gravel bars. The only thing which makes navigation possible is that the logs have formed bars and restricted the water to a narrower channel with a minimum depth of eighteen inches.

It is very probable, he says, that the war department will, when money is appropriated by congress for the purpose, clear the river of snags and the banks of trees.

PROTECT COUNTRY GIRLS.

Labor Bureau Will Post Warnings in the Country.

St. Paul.—The state labor bureau has prepared a notice which will be posted in every railroad station in the state, warning women and girls against the snares and pitfalls of city life. The following is the notice:

Notice to Young Women and Girls.

Do not go to the large cities for work unless you are compelled to.

If you must go, write at least two weeks in advance to the Woman's Department, Bureau of Labor, St. Paul, or to the Young Women's Christian Association in the city where you want to work.

They will obtain for you such a position as you ask; tell you about wages, boarding places, etc.

Two days before you leave home, write again and tell the day and hour when your train will arrive, and a responsible woman will meet you at the station and take you safely to your destination.

Do not ask questions of strangers nor take advice from them.

Ask a uniformed railway official or a policeman.

REVENUES ARE HALF MILLION.

St. Paul.—Customs receipts for the port of Minneapolis amounted to $495,487.15 in the fiscal year ended today. This is a drop of $91,199.86 as compared with 1908.

Clayton R. Cooley, collecter, cannot account for the deficiency, except that last year was an unusual one. Notwithstanding the decrease in receipts there were 102 more separate entries for immediate withdrawal than in 1908, or a total of 1,292.

Defying the Ancient Gag.

"Don't I make myself plain?" roared the angry husband.

For a moment the wife wavered. The old reply that invariably follows this question in the English comic papers rushed to her lips. For a brief second she hesitated. Then, sternly repressing an almost overpowering impulse to tell him he couldn't make himself plainer, she bit her lips and strode haughtily away.

PORK BARREL LAW UP TO COURT

Injunction Suit Is Argued Before the Supreme Court.

The question whether the $600,000 appropriated by the last legislature for the building of roads and bridges, in the so-called pork barrel bill, held unconstitutional by Judge Brill, of Ramsey county, can legally be expended and whether future legislatures can make similar appropriations, is now before the supreme court. W. B. Douglas made the argument for the plaintiff, Senator L. O. Cooke, who as a taxpayer brought the suit to enjoin the state officers from paying out any of this money.

Attorney General George T. Simpson and Assistant Lyndon A. Smith made the arguments for the bill.

"I brought this suit on my own accord, and am nobody's tool," said Senator Cooke to a reporter after the hearing. "I am not doing it for spite, as several members will testify, that I spoke of starting such a suit two years ago and would have done so but for my absence from the state. I started the suit because the law is wrong in principle.

"It amused me to see the senators meet here last week. Their statement then was an admission that they had traded votes on other bills for the sake of getting something in the pork barrel. The great evil of the bill is that the members do not put the money for roads where it is most needed, but in the district where they get the most votes. We have all taken an oath to support the constitution, and I cannot see why so many of the members are opposed to a suit to determine whether one of the acts we passed is constitutional."

Two questions were considered in the suit, whether a state officer can be enjoined and whether the bill is constitutional. The attorney general cites a number of rulings of the supreme court to the effect that the state auditor, as such, is not subject to suit of any nature.

Judge Douglas cited the case of E. T. Young, in which the federal supreme court held that a state official could be enjoined because there was no other way he could be kept from doing a thing that was not legal. He also cited a number of cases in this state prior to the Young case, in which the right to enjoin state officers had been sustained.

The attorney general answered that if the action can be maintained against the state auditor, similar actions can be brought against any state officer who is attempting to obey a law which some taxpayer and a lower court may deem to be unconstitutional.

BALANCE IS $2,367,247.26.

State Treasurer Reports Financial Condition of Minnesota.

St. Paul.—The cash balance in the Minnesota state treasury at the close of business, June 30, was $2,867,247.26, compared with $2,579,688.04 a year ago. The items to the credit of different funds follows:

Revenue fund, $1,103,608.58; soldiers' relief fund, $45,052.72; funding tax fund, $55,488.17; state road and bridge fund, $69,616.64; university campus fund, $208,021.06; permanent school fund, $200,616.66; general school fund, $480,433.66; permanent university fund, $5,935.50; general university fund, $53,824.64; internal improvement fund, $48,027.47; internal improvement land fund, $5,992.52; internal improvement land fund interest, $6,875.95; swamp land fund, $10,736; swamp land fund interest, $21,261.75; hay inspection fund, $1,721.55; grain inspection fund, $50,035.39.

CROP CONDITIONS EXCELLENT.

Red River Valley Will Make a Big Showing This Year.

Barnesville.—The crop conditions in Clay county and this part of the Red River Valley exceed anything in years. Twenty-five per cent more of grain has been sown than in 1908. Mustard is plentiful and has not hurt the grain. The light rains and the warm weather of the past two weeks have been a great lift to the crops. Barley cutting will be general by the end of the week. Wheat and oats stand eighteen inches high, bear a gool color and are about ready to head. Potatoes are in an excellent condition. Corn is showing up well and the hot weather is sending it skyward. New hay is on the market and sells from three to four dollars a ton. New potatoes will be on the market by the Fourth of July.

EDITORS AT BEMIDJI.

Great Northern Editorial Association to Gather July 15 for Outing.

Wadena.—The Great Northern Editorial Association will hold their annual outing at Bemidji July 15, 16, 17 and 18. The Commercial Club of Bemidji has charge of the arrangements. Besides the regular program of speaking and "shop talks" there will be a boat trip on the lake. This meeting will be an outing and the ladies are expected to attend. The regular meeting was held in this city last year.

DEATH CALLS AUSTIN'S MAYOR.

George Sutton Dies in Hospital at Omaha From Apoplexy.

Austin.—George Sutton, the mayor of this city, and one of the most prominent men in this part of the state died at Omaha, where he had been in a hospital for several weeks for nervous prostration, which developed into apoplexy. He was serving his second term as mayor and was one of the city's most progressive citizens, many improvements having been made under his administration.

Enemies Now.

They were not on the best of terms by any means.

"Do you believe that genius and insanity are the same?" said the one in the green mushroom hat.

"Why do you ask?" demanded the tall one in the turban.

"Well, a genius proposed to me last night."

"Oh, well that shows insanity."

Successful theatrical managers should thank their stars.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Stillwater.—Frank Rainer, a farmer of Forest Lake, was killed by the accidental discharge of a shotgun while shooting hawks on his farm.

Caledonia.—Thomas Buckley, aged 49 years, died of apoplexy at his residence here. He was a prominent merchant and was city treasurer.

Red Lake Falls.—George Gamache, twenty-three years old, was struck by lightning and instantly killed here during a rain and electrical storm.

St. Cloud.—Sebastian Rechert, the well known St. Cloud merchant, died of sunstroke. Mr. Rechert was overcome by the heat while out driving.

Fergus Falls.—Judge Baxter today sentenced Matt Rohn to Stillwater for eighteen months for wife-beating. Rohn used a hot flatiron in his last assault.

Bemidji.—The Minnesota and International railroad will spend $30,000 improving and enlarging its terminals at this point, abandoning the present terminals in South Bemidji.

Hastings.—At a special meeting of the board of education, L. L. Sloreiger, of Cresco, Iowa, was elected principal of the high school at a salary of $100 a month.

Hastings.—The store of L. P. Warmeg, at Rosemont, was burglarized, knives and razors worth $25 being stolen. The saloon of Joseph Lynch was entered and $7 taken.

Bird Island.—The village council of Olivia has granted a twenty-year franchise to the Bird Island Telephone Company to install a modern telephone plant in that village.

Spooner.—Indian Agent R. S. McKenzie, of the district of Ontario, is making treaty payments along the Lake of the Woods and the reservation bordering on the Rainy river district.

Fairmont.—Henry Brocker, of Ceylon, aged 14 years, was drowned in Clear Lake. He was wading in shallow water and stepped into a deep hole. He was the son of a retired farmer.

Litchfield.—Sam Lockhart, a member of the Minneapolis fire department, who has been spending his vacation in this city, was fined $90 for shipping bass which were not properly labeled.

Bemidji.—At the meeting of the city council the contract for the city pumping plant was let to J. J. Robinson company of St. Paul, for the sum of $6,324. They will install the plant complete for that amount.

Brainerd.—Herman Hub, a machinist employed at the Northern Pacific shops in this city, was drowned while bathing in the Mississippi river about a quarter of a mile below the Northern Pacific railway bridge.

Waseca.—The city council has voted to pave ten blocks on Lake avenue with vitrified brick. Boulevarding up to the curb will be enforced. The cost of making the improvement will be met by a deferred payment plan.

Duluth.—Charles O. Mills, an ice dealer of Proctor, Minn., was killed by a fast passenger train on a hill near Duluth. He was walking on the track and stepped aside when a train approached from behind him, but did not get far enough away.

New Ulm.—Henry Frenzel, a prominent business man, died with paralysis of the brain. He was one of the early pioneers of this city and has been a pop manufacturer for 36 years and had a wide acquaintance throughout the state.

Fergus Falls.—A number of the members of the Fergus Falls City band are planning a very interesting trip. They have decided to walk from this city to Seattle, taking their instruments with them and giving concerts at cities and villages along the route.

Rochester.—George F. Howard county superintendent of schools, has tendered his resignation and will associate himself with a school supply house. Mr. Howard was founder of the Rochester Industrial School. In 1902 he was elected county superintendent and he has held the office continuously.

Mankato.—In grading down the hill opposite the old hotel site near Garden City, twelve miles southeast of here, workmen found a human skeleton in the middle of the road six feet down, and on what was at one time top soil, some pieces of grass being perfectly preserved. The road is sixty years old. Some of the bones were were preserved and some of the teeth perfect.

Park Rapids.—At the state land sale about 400 acres were disposed of, all but one tract being bought by settlers residing near the land or those who wished to settle on land. The prices showed an increase over former years, and the demand was good. The land was appraised at $4 to $6 an acre, and most of it was sold at the appraised value. Some tracts went higher, but none above $8 an acre.

Fergus Falls.—Harry Gilbertson attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat, while in the city jail here. Gilbertson was charged with drunkenness and was facing a prison sentence as he had been taken up for the second time under the Schaffor law.

Fergus Falls.—Mrs. Lena Stal, an elderly woman, was instantly killed by the Great Northern Oriental Limited, west-bound, at Evansville, two stations south of here. She was crossing the track and apparently failed to hear the train, which makes no stop at that station.

Noises Are Deceiving.

"Is there a stone quarry being worked in the vicinity?" inquired the traveler, as he stood waiting to board his train at the country station. "I thought I heard loud reports like the explosion of dynamite in the blasting of rocks."

"No," rejoined the station employe, with a chuckle; "those noises come from that little structure off the ticket office. It's the baggage room."—Judge.

NEWS FROM FATHERLAND

On the recommendation of several medical men in Vienna the municipality last year opened an open air sanitarium for healthy persons. The old idea that sunlight, air and water are the main restoratives was long ago taken up by a nonmedical philanthropist, who opened an establishment of the most primitive kind on the banks of the Danube on the outskirts of Vienna. The results obtained by him have prompted the municipality to enlarge the establishment and conduct it on modern principles. An immense area covered with fine sand, a long river bank with shallow, rapidly flowing cold water and the absence of any shade-giving trees are the three principal health-giving factors relied on. Special care has been taken to enable schools to make use of the facilities offered there; four thousand persons can undress at the same time and free tickets have been granted to schools and workshops, so that on some days last summer ten thousand persons were seen there, going about in the open air nearly naked. No less than two hundred thousand persons availed themselves of the opportunity offered them, and for this year an increased area has been thrown open for the "air cure." There is a special medical attendant present.

Complaining that the nation's foreign trade is being ruined by the greed of the agrarians in closing the frontiers to the importation of cattle and meat, the principal manufacturing and commercial interests of Austria organized an imposing demonstration of protest against the government's policy of favoring agriculture at the expense of commerce. This country in the last decade has lost more than half its export business with Roumania and Servia through tariff wars originated by the Agrarians, resulting in heavy penal duties being placed on Austrian wares. Germany seized the opportunity and has trebled its trade with these states. Speakers at the meeting held to protest against this state of affairs urged the completion of the commercial treaties with the Balkan and South American countries, now only awaiting the sanction of parliament. This sanction a powerful group of Agrarian deputies hitherto has managed to postpone. Following the demonstration in Vienna, public indignation meetings have been organized in several of the outside cities and towns.

The Austrian war on the Standard Oil Company will be aided by the government. The oil producers and the refiners have agreed to take over and assume the management of the Austrian government's factory for the purpose of providing oil fuel, which is being used on the government's railroads. The old oil producers and the refiners go further and declare they will not buy any more oil from the Standard if the government will build adequate oil tanks and pipe lines to store the various tank supplies. The ministers of the government have signified their intention of complying with these conditions. Such a move will in effect practically bar the Standard from further business in Austria and Hungary.

It is reported that a new design for a dirigible airship elaborated by Prof. Schutte, of Dantzig, has been approved by Herr Karl Lanz, the head of a large machine works at Mannheim and the founder of the German Aerial Navy League. Secrecy is being preserved as to the details of the new airship, though it is stated that it will be on the rigid system, the frame being made of wood instead of aluminum. It will contain 19,000 cubic meters of hydrogen gas—that is, 3,000 more than the Zeppelin airship. The propelling power will be supplied by four benzine motors capable of developing together 500 horsepower.

Prince yu Eulenburg was permitted to go to the Gastein watering place, Austria, for the sake of his health. He is under a bail of $25,000, and may be tried for perjury at any time by the government of Prussia. But he feels sure that nothing will be done as long as he keeps quiet. He has a "cinch" on his enemies in the form of an immense number of private letters from many of the most prominent Germans, and he threatens to publish these in Paris and London if he is hard pressed. To avoid such a scandal the authorities are expected to leave him alone.

The airship Zeppelin I., travelling from Friedrichshafen to Metz, landed at Biberach on account of overheating of the machinery, which caused a fusing of certain metal parts. The landing was effected during a rainstorm without difficulty. The crew of four officers and four men held the craft down until a detachment of soldiers arrived and gave aid. Major Sperling, in command of the craft, sent for duplicate parts of the damaged machinery.

Some of the smaller powers, notably the Scandinavian countries, passed laws favorable to the French vine trade in order that their stocks might be listed on the Paris bourse. Not so in Germany, it seems, and the French wine trade is alarmed. The finance commission of the reichstag proposes to increase from 120 to 150 marks the duties on every hundred kilogrammes of champagne. On cognacs in casks the duties will be increased from 160 to 300 marks, and on cognacs in bottles from 260 to 500 marks.

Utility of an Orchestra.

A young chap from the country went to see a pantomime for the first time. The start was greatly delayed and he grew impatient. At last the orchestra appeared and began to play. Soon afterward the curtain rose.

"Ah," said the country chap, slapping his knees, "I knew that noise would wake 'em up."

When there is work to be done the buzzsaw is always ready to take a hand.

News of Scandinavia

Principal Happenings of the Week in the Scandinavian Countries.

SWEDEN.

Stockholm is decorated in gala attire in honor of the czar's visit. The czar's yacht was met this morning at some distance from the city by King Gustaf and Queen Victoria, in their own yacht, the Drott. All then went aboard the Russian yacht Standart, which steamed up the stream and anchored. The royal party entered the king's barge and went to the landing stage, where a large arch had been erected. Having been formally received here, they took carriages and drove through streets lined with troops to the royal castle. All traffic on the four sides of the palace was stopped for the day. No untoward demonstration occurred and only the best of feeling was shown. It is expected that the czar and his party will return to the Standart tonight and sail for Tullgarn, Sunday or Monday. Nicholas looked well as he came ashore and cordially greeted those presented to him. His visit is favorably regarded by Swedes in general as indicating that he deems it worth while to renew friendly relations with this country. It also is considered by some to mean that Russian statesmen have in mind some plan of drawing the Scandinavian countries closer to Russia, England and France, which now are aligned in opposition to Germanic ambitions.

King Gustaf recently interfered with the work of the managers of the state railways in an interesting manner. K. O. Erickson, a substitute at a railway station, entered the service of the state railways nine years ago. A year later the front part of his right foot was crushed while he was switching cars at Tomteboda. The wound was well attended to, and Erickson recovered. He remained in the service and did office work part of the time, and finally applied for a regular position. But the railway authorities refused to comply with his request, and he turned to the king. Dr. Nordlund, the railway physician, testified officially that Erickson was strong and healthy in every respect, with the exception of the injury mentioned above. By means of a suitable bandage he could walk on the maimed leg almost as well as on the other, and he seemed to be able to do any kind of work indoors. The king, having made himself familiar with the facts, decided that nothing prevented Mr. Erickson from filling a regular position on the state railways.

A unique funeral. A young man named Almskong, refused to serve in the army, and was imprisoned at Vastervik. He died in jail, and was buried in the Kalmar cemetery. His coffin was covered with red cloth. A great number of young Socialists came to take part in the procession, and before the party reached the graveyard there was a throng of 3,000 people. When the officiating clergyman was ready to perform the last rites, a stove-maker named Bjorklund proceeded to make a lengthy address. The preacher tried to stop him, but in vain. Bjorklund was finally taken away by the watchman of the cemetery, and the preacher performed the ceremonies. Finally a hymn was to be sung; but this was prevented by the young Socialists, who sang the "International Hymn." A black banner with the following motto was raised at the grave: "The State Murdered Him. We Demand Revenge." The police remained quiet.

Many poor people are afraid of insuring their lives for fear that they way not be able to keep up the payments. A Swedish insurance company has contrived a new scheme to minimize this fear. A savings bank of a peculiar construction is left with the insured. It is made in such a way that one may keep it going like a watch by dropping into it ten ore ($2\frac{1}{10}$ cents) every day. If so much as a day is missed the machinery stops. The coin acts as a sort of key, and every coin put in is registered. It is supposed that the insured will not feel the burden of the insurance so much when the premiums are paid in daily driblets of less than three cents each. The experiment has not been fairly tried yet.

The solidary banking concerns of Sweden have a capital of $56,700,000, and the stock company banks $172,800,000. The Skane Enskilda bank heads the list, with a capital stock of $14,445,000. At the beginning of the year the Filipstad bank had the largest percentage of the capital stock on hand, namely, 18.2 per cent. The Stockholm Handels bank gave the largest returns on the investment, the dividend paid to the stockholders being 17 per cent. In point of litigation the Goteborg bank took the lead with 713 lawsuits, involving about $400,000.

The seats in the first and second class passenger cars on the state railways of Sweden will soon be numbered, and when a passenger buys a ticket he will receive a numbered tag which entitles him to a certain seat. The same innovation will be made on the Norwegian and Danish lines connected with the Swedish lines in southern Sweden.

The king has ratified regulations for the new commercial high school in Stockholm, and former Foreign Minister Lagerheim has been appointed chairman of the board of directors.

Nautical Learning.

Mamma Mermaid—She was fashioned from a rib of the papa shad.

Little Mermaid—Gee Whiz! I'll bet he never missed it.

A woman's idea of a brave man is one who isn't afraid to go into a dark closet in which there may be a mouse.

DENMARK.

The surplus of the Danish sugar factories for the year 1908 was $1,425,600. The stockholders receive 25 per cent on their investments, the beet growers an allotment of $612,250, and the managers receive $64,260. The reserve fund now exceeds $4,000,000, or considerably more than 50 per cent of the capital stock.

The Farmers' Bank, which was wrecked by Alberti, will soon be in a position to resume operations, about 7,000 persons having subscribed over $1,000,000 to the guaranty fund.

FINLAND.

The difficulties attending the establishment of definite relations between Finland and Russia seem to be increasing. In Russia it is claimed that after the introduction of a constitutional form of government some of the functions of the monarch passed to the douma and the imperial council, while the Finns hold that the new form of government in Russia has not affected the relations between the monarch and the Finnish landtdag, and that the Russian imperial council has no right to meddle with the internal affairs of Finland. No matter how careful the landtag is, it will be bound to touch upon the rules which provide that certain bills shall be placed directly before the monarch, while the imperial council will ask for these bills in the first place. Trouble will also be caused by the arbitrary ruling of the council that bills passed by a landtdag which is afterwards dissolved shall be void.

NORWAY.

The success of Elias Tonnesen, the notorious—or perhaps famous—burglar, is largely due to a peculiar disinclination on the part of the ordinary Norwegian to assist the police. Almost a hundred years ago Gjest Baardsen became a national hero simply by being a clever fellow to steal from the rich and to break jail. Tonnesen worked on the same plan. It is a good joke on the Norwegians that Tonnesen was caught when he went to Sweden. The Norwegian boy patriots think the Swedes got even with the Norwegians by this catch, the Norwegians being responsible for the death of Karl XII., Sweden's warking! Elias Tonnesen, who in a short while acquired national notoriety as a burglar and jail-breaker, was captured in Gothenburg, Sweden.

The hostility between Admiral Sparre and Admiral Borresen in the Norwegian navy is still causing mischief. Sparre is a Leftist and a friend of the present cabinet, and Borresen is a Rightist. Borresen has asked for a court martial to dispose of certain charges of malfeasance, preferred against him by Sparre. The government is endeavoring to settle the difficulty as a mere business matter, but to this the Rightists in the storthing are opposed. It is not improbable that the Rightists will carry their point in the storthing, and in that case Premier Knudsen may resign.

More young people emigrated from Lom, Guldbrandsdal, last spring than ever before in the same length of time. It is claimed that they left the country because they could not obtain land of their own at home, though much good land is lying around unused in that part of the country. This fact has aroused a lively discussion in the press about the disposition of unused tillable land in Norway.

I. N. Grude, at Sandnas, had 4,000 trout fry put into a pond prepared for the purpose at Hojland church, and they are growing so fast that when they get about 1½ years old they are large enough for a meal at a restaurant. It is now proposed to construct trout ponds where the offal from the canneries may be used to the greatest advantage.

"Doctor," said the shrewd looking man, "how many feet of gas does it take to kill a person?"

"That's rather a queer question," replied the doctor. "Why do you wish to know?"

"Well, you see, one of the guests at my hotel used enough of it to kill himself, and I want to send in a proper bill to his executors."

A PAGE FOR THE FARMER

FIRE IS THE GREATEST FOE OF OUR WOODLANDS

Often Kindled by Sparks from Railroad Locomotive and by Settlers and Farmers in Clearing Land or Burning Brush.

Of all the foes which attack the woodlands of North America no other is so terrible as fire. Forest fires spring from many different causes. They are often kindled along railroads by sparks from the locomotives. Carelessness is responsible for many fires. Settlers and farmers clearing land or burning grass and brush oftens allow the fire to escape into the woods. Some one may drop a half-burned match or the glowing tobacco of a pipe or cigar, or a hunter or prospector may neglect to extinguish his camp fire, or may build it where it will burrow into the thick duff far beyond his reach, to smolder for days, or weeks, and perhaps to break out as a destructive fire long after he is gone. Many fires are set for malice or revenge, and the forest is often burned over by huckleberry pickers to increase the next season's growth of berries, or by the owners of cattle or sheep to make better pasture for their herds.

There is danger from forest fires in the dry portions of the spring and summer, but those which do most harm usually occur in the fall. At whatever time of the year they appear, their destructive power depends very much on the wind. They cannot travel against it except when burning up hill, and not even then if the wind is strong. The wind may give them strength and speed by driving them swiftly through unburned, inflammable forests, or it may extinguish the fiercest fire in a time by turning it back over its path, where is nothing left to burn. In fighting forest fires the wind is always the first thing to consider, and its direction must be carefully watched. A sudden change of wind may check a fire, or may turn it off in a new direction and perhaps threaten the lives of the men at work by driving it suddenly down upon them.

When all the conditions are favorable, forest fires sometimes reach gigantic proportions. A few such fires have attained historic importance. One of these is the Miramichi fire of 1825. It began its greatest destruction about one o'clock in the afternoon of October 7 of that year, at a place about sixty miles above the town of Newcastle, on the Miramichi river, in New Brunswick. Before ten o'clock at night it was 20 miles below Newcastle. In nine hours it had destroyed a belt of forest 80 miles long and 25 miles wide. Over more than 2,500,000 acres almost every living thing was killed.

The Peshtigo fire of October, 1871, was still more severe than the Miramichi. It covered an area of over 2,000 square miles in Wisconsin, and involved a loss, in timber and other property, of many millions of dollars. Between 1,200 and 1,500 persons perished, including nearly half the population of Peshtigo.

The most destructive fire of more recent years was that which started near Hinckley, Minn., September 1, 1894. While the area burned over was less than in some other great fires, the loss of life and property was very heavy. Hinckley and six other towns were destroyed, about 500 lives were lost, more than 2,000 persons were left destitute, and the estimated loss in property of various kinds was $25,000,000. Except for the heroic conduct of locomotive engineers and other railroad men the loss of life would have been far greater.

The means of fighting forest fires are not everywhere the same, for they burn in many different ways; but in every case the best time to fight a fire is at the beginning, before it has had time to spread. A delay of even a very few minutes may permit a fire that at first could easily have been extinguished to gather headway and get altogether beyond control.

When there is but a thin covering of leaves and other waste on the ground a fire usually cannot burn very hotly or move with much speed. The fires in most hardwood forests are of this kind. They seldom kill large trees, but they destroy seedlings and saplings and kill the bark of older trees in places near the ground. The hollows at the foot of old chestnuts and other large trees are often the results of these fires, which occur again and again, and so enlarge the wounds instead of allowing them to heal.

FARMER REGARDS WORK AS SCIENCE

Now Sends Sons and Daughters to the Best of Colleges.

Never in the history of agriculture has there been such a forward movemen on the part of the farmer and for the farmer on the part of state and nation, as is noted at the present time. Prosperity for the last decade has been the constant companion of the man who clothes and feeds the nation. All this good fortune that has fallen to the cause of agriculture has not come unmerited. Progress has been made all along the line in solving the various problems dealing with the tillage of the soil and the production of bountiful crops.

Educationally, the farmers are not so far behind their city cousins as one would naturally think, and if we take proportionate numbers into consideration, the farmers are ahead. The blessings of modern civilization and the advantage of up-to-date methods and labor-saving conveniences are enjoyed almost as generally by the country folk as by those living in the city.

It seems almost needless repetition to cite how, through the agency of the telephone, rural free delivery and interurban electric railway the former isolation of the farmer from the city has disappeared. All these modern developments have their influence on rural communities for the better. Each year the number of farmers' sons and daughters attending our higher institutions of learning is growing larger. Educational statistics, we are told, disclose that the proportion of farm-reared students found in the colleges and universities is larger than that of students coming from other walks of life, either from the wealthy or working classes.

There is a very good reason for the presence of the farmer's son and daughter in the halls of learning. Agricultural education has become the favorite theme with the wide-awake farmer and his family, and as a result those institutions are being patronized almost to overflowing by students eager to make farming their life work. New conditions must be met in our progressive age, such as the remarkable increase of our population and an ever-increasing demand for farm products at high prices; the rush of so many country people to live in the city, impelled by the erroneous thought that farm life is debasing, and that urban existence is more attractive than the monotony of the farm.

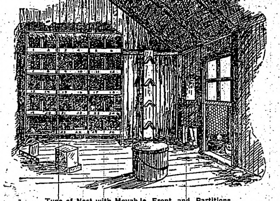
QUARTERS FOR HOUSING PIGEONS IN COMFORT

Description of Economical Loft That Will Accommodate Two Hundred Pairs Without Crowding.

—By C. K. Graham.



Type of Nest with Movable Front and Partitions.

It is a debatable question with squab breeders to-day whether birds should be kept in small or large flocks. While one will advocate keeping not over 50 pairs in a loft, another will advocate keeping 25, and a third will claim that there is no harm in keeping 200 pairs together. Observations have led me to believe that 40 pairs can be kept together quite successfully. These should have about fifty square feet of floor space and the lofts should be at least six feet high.

There should also be a fly from six to eight feet high the width of the loft and from twenty to thirty feet in length. Some breeders make the fly high enough so that it will extend over part of the roof of the pigeon house, in order that the birds may sit in the sun. This is not only injurious to the roof, but encourages the birds to lazy habits, whereas to get successful results in breeding they must be kept working, or at least not encouraged to idleness.

Probably one of the worst enemies that pigeons have is the rat, and in order to fight it the houses are generally built from eighteen inches to two feet from the ground, using trap doors from the floor to the ground in order to keep the wind from blowing under and lowering the temperature of the house during the cold weather.

The most economical construction is a house built five feet from the floor to the eave in front (the south side) and from six to eight feet on the north side. Houses with a roof of this style are naturally very hot in summer, but if built high on the south side it will be found almost impossible to get a satisfactory alley in the building. For this reason a building that is twelve to fourteen feet wide and six feet from the floor to the eave and from eight to nine feet from the floor to the ridge, leaving the loft free from floor to roof, is most satisfactory.

A house such as this with capacity for 200 pairs should cost about $1.50 per pair, including the cost of fly, nests, water fountains, etc.

The partitions between the lofts should be tightly boarded to the tops of the nests, as there is naturally a draft through the house, yet in order to get proper ventilation it is well to use poultry netting for division from the tops of the nest to the roof. This will permit free circulation of air in the peak of the house, especially by having windows on the north side that may be opened when necessary, particularly during the summer months.

WHAT DRY FARMING MEANS

Term, Much Misunderstood, Denotes Constant Working of Soil.

In all the discussion of the term "dry farming" much misunderstanding exists, says Review of Reviews. At the recent congress there was an attempt to change the organization's name to "Arid Farming Congress." In simple phrase it means a method of farming that shall not include deep plowing and frequent pulverizing of the top soil out of as well as during the growing season. It is based on the principle that the moisture falling in rain or snow may sink into the earth if the soil be loosened. Then what there shall be kept above that moistened bed a close, fine blanket of dust that shall prevent evaporation. If the furrows be turned at right angles to the prevailing winds of winter, the snow may be caught, and if the pulverizing harrow be sent over the field after every rain, the seed is certain to receive a maximum amount of sustenance. If it does not get enough in one season it may in two, and a crop every alternate year, if a good one, is ample return on cheap land. Of course there must be good soil as a basis—only irrigation can conquer sand.

To accomplish all this special machinery has come into use. Horses could not pull plows biting deep into the tough centuries-dried soil, so powerful engines that roll majestically along with two dozen plows en train are in their places. Press drills that plant the seed deep; pulverizing harrows that break the surface into powderlike fineness, and other applinaces, are used. "First get your moisture, then raise a crop on it," is the formula adopted by one successful farmer. He told how he had plowed 12 inches deep, had harrowed and cultivated—and then raised 35 bushels of wheat, 50 bushels of corn and generous crops of rough feed on each acre, finally starting a profitable fruit orchard—all this on a rainfall of less than fifteen inches annually. Year after year moisture preservation has increased his supply and the soil bed has constantly grown richer and deeper.

Asparagus and pieplant hardly ever find ground too rich.

OVERRUN BY PRAIRIE DOGS

Forest Service to Run Them Out of Southwest.

In co-operation with the stockmen the United States forest service has begun an active campaign against prairie dogs on the infested ranges within the national forests of Arizona and New Mexico, says the Austin Daily Statesman. Successful attempts at poisoning prairie dogs were made last spring and summer by the forest service in other parts of the country, and this year the work will be carried on much more extensively.

The poison used to put an end to these little pests of the western ranges is prepared by coating wheat with a preparation of strychnine, cyanide of potassium, anise oil and molasses. The stockmen supply horses and men and the poisoned wheat is given out by the government officers for distribution upon ranges within the national forest areas. Each rider carries the wheat in a tin pail supported by a gunny sack slung across his shoulder. One hand is free for the reins and with the other the rider uses a teaspoon to measure out the poison in "baits" and drop it near the entrance of the holes.

The action of the poison is almost instantaneous. Most of the prairie dogs in a town are dead within an hour or two after the bait is dropped.

Early last month 9,300 pounds of wheat was prepared in Albuquerque, N. M., and shipped to the various national forests in Arizona and New Mexico to be distributed. This quantity of wheat will make approximately 6,020,000 baits, which will clear up an area of from 65,000 to 80,000 acres at a cost, exclusive of the labor of distributing it on the ranges of about one to 1⅓ cents an acre.

The poison is used to best advantage in the early spring, when the dogs first come out of their winter quarters and before the green grass is plentiful enough to appease their appetites.

Raise Bees for Recreation.

Mr. Hane of Belt, Mont., raises bees for recreation, and yet they made money for him last year. From 12 hives he took almost 1,000 pounds of the finest quality of honey, leaving a good supply for the bees during the winter. The honey was worth 20 cents a pound.

PRECEDENCE A SACRED THING

Wherein Assistant Secretary of State Adee Is Friend of Washington Hostesses.

A Washington correspondent says that Assistant Secretary of State Adee has certain social functions that are not included in his official duties, but that are rated at a high value by hostesses who wish to avoid the faux pas that are reckoned among the unpardonable sins. Mr. Adee has devoted much time to a study of precedence. Presumably such recondite learning is necessary to him in his duties, and being a good-natured man he places it freely at the service of his friends, who are numerous. The lady who wishes to give a function submits the names of her guests to Mr. Adee, who obligingly separates the sheep from the goats and places each guest in the exact position to which it has pleased the god of social things to call him. A Washington correspondent says:

"Mr. Adee knows more about rank and precedence than Uncle Joe Cannon does about the rules of the house. And if you are not thoroughly posted in the intricacies of official precedence you would best restrict your guest list to plain individuals who have never risen above the rank of mister. Your dinner will be irretrievably ruined and you will make enemies for life if you happen to seat a senator at your right hand and a justice of the supreme court at your left. Or it would be just as bad if you were to give the place of honor to a reverend jurist, with a foreign minister present."

The same correspondent regrets that dinner-giving in Washington is not what it should be. It is "a sad, stilted proceeding. There is but one caterer here, and he has charge of most of these functions. Naturally, they become more or less stereotyped in character. A popular diner-out is confronted evening after evening with the same cut-and-dried fare. It is served by the same hired waiters, with whom before long he acquires, unconsciously, almost a speaking acquaintance."

MEAN TRICK ON GOOD LIVER

Fearing Uric Acid, Victim Had Dieted Unnecessarily and Lost Much Weight.

L. W. Busbey, secretary to Speaker Cannon, was complaining of a severe pain in his knee when Sam Blythe, the magazine writer, happened in and heard the complaint. "I know what it is, Bus," said Blythe. "It's uric acid, and if you don't get rid of it you will be laid up with rheumatism or the gout. I've had it myself and I know what the cure is. You want to go on a strict diet—cut out red meats and all that and live principally on vegetables. Mighty serious thing, and you take it from me the only way to get rid of it is by dieting." Blythe prescribed a proper diet in detail and Busbey, thorougly alarmed, agreed to live on it. For a month he adhered rigidly to the list of permissible food, but the knee still bothered him, and finally he went to a doctor. "This knee has been bothering me for a month, doctor," said Busbey, "and the treatment apparently has done no good. Queer I can't get rid of the trouble. I kept strictly to the diet for a month and have lost 15 pounds in weight, but the pain continues." "Diet?" said the doctor, after he had carefully examined the knee, "what do you think is wrong with you?" "Why, uric acid," replied Busbey. "Uric acid nothing. You've sprained your knee severely, that's what's the matter with you," said the doctor. Busbey now suits his diet to his taste and is trying to make up that 15 pounds.

Three-Fingered Jack.

This story is being told around Washington on Senator Curtis: Senator Curtis came upon two of his fellow members of the upper house playing chess, and offered to bet money on either one of them winning or losing the games. He was willing to bet any old way. Neither had the nerve to wager against the other or for himself.

"You fellows," said the senator from Kansas, "remind me of a man in my state who was always anxious to bet on his game of checkers. Only you remind me of the one time when he backed down.

"He was about to play a game for $10 with a fellow called 'Three-fingered Jack.' Suddenly one of his friends exclaimed:

"'Don't bet, Charlie. Don't you know that fellow wore off two fingers playing checkers? That's why he's called "Three-Fingered Jack."'

"That settled it. The bet was never made. A man who had worn off two fingers by brushing them up and down the checker board was too much for my friend."—Kansas City Journal.

Will Demolish Old Fort.

Fort No. 7, an old fortification at the naval academy, built in 1810, is to be demolished. This decision has been about reached by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Winthrop, who can see no use for the old structure. Objection to Women Golfers.

"Farmers, don't mind renting their fields to golfers, but they are strongly opposed to women."

"Why?"

"Because woman golfers are always losing hairpins and hatpins and stickpins in the grass. Follow the trail of a woman's foursome with a pincushion and I'll guarantee you a cushionful of pins at the end of the ninth hole."

"But why does the farmer mind that?"

"Because afterward when his sheep and cattle graze in those fields they swallow pins. Pins, I needn't tell you, are injurious to the health."

The Earth and the Moon.

That the earth must shine on the moon even as the moon shines on the earth is obvious. To detect this light from the earth on the lunar surface and scientifically prove its existence is another matter. Quenisset at the Juvisy observatory.

An Anatomical Wonder.

Senator Beveridge was criticising the ludicrous speeches of a certain upright but hot-headed congressman.

"He does make queer blunders, doesn't he?" said Senator Beveridge. "Have you heard about his latest?

"Well, it seems that a constituent, visiting him recently, complained of the shabbiness of a pair of ink-stained crash trousers that he had on.

"'A man of your position,' said the constituent, reproachfully, 'ought to wear handsomer trousers than those.'

"The congressman, offended, answered reproachfully:

"'My trousers may be shabby, but they cover a warm and honest heart.'"

Here's a Good One.

A friend of mine told me of a curious experience. He was carefully stalking a big bull elephant in a large herd, when they got his wind, and a big cow elephant charged him. He jumped behind a large tree as the elephant reached him, and, being unable to stop herself in time, the elephant drove her tusks with such force into the tree that they snapped off close to her head. The elephant was stunned for a moment, but luckily turned and galloped after the fast retreating herd, leaving him the possessor of some 80 pounds of ivory, valued at about $250.—Circle Magazine.

Justice Elliot of the supreme court, who was recently appointed to the supreme bench of the Philippine Islands, has left for his new post. If Taft will rise to the occasion and veto the miserable subterfuge that Aldich et. al., is foisting onto the people it will keep the country in the frying pan to be sure, but that is better than to be dumped into the fire, says the Montevideo Leader. And if Taft does less than that, the people will have taken his measure also, and will then know that he, too, is only "seven by nine."

The other day Senator Nelson asked for a tax on sago, because it competes a little with Minnesota starch factories, which by the way pay good dividends. The people of the Northwest might better have the tariff removed from everything they produce than be robbed as they are now every time they buy a pair of shoes, a suit of clothes, a piece of wood or a yard of calico.

The supreme court has declared the "pork barrel" bill illegal and unconstitutional holding that the legislature cannot use money from the general revenue funds for internal improvements. While it is to be regretted that in many counties road and bridge work will be delayed, the method for paceling out the money to members of the legislature is not a business way of doing things. In a year or two we will probably have a special road and bridge fund to be expended under direction of the highway commission. This ought to make for more intelligent work.

Ten republican senators voted against the Aldrich tariff bill last Thursday. Notable among the group were Senators Nelson and Clapp of Minnesota. Clapp's recent conversion to the progressive faith is in the nature of a death-bed repentance, however, as he has not heretofore shown inclination to listen to the Minnesota demand for tariff reform. Possibly the fact that the senator's term expires next year is something of a goad to make a record.

"The fix of many of my estimable Republican brethern in Congess, who want to revise the tariff, but are afraid of the gentlemen who conduct the highly protected infant industries," said John Sharp Williams, "reminds me of a neighbor of mine down in Mississippi who went to prayer meeting one night. After the spirit got to moving, he rose in his place and said: 'Friends, I would like to confess my sins, but the grand jury is in session.' 'Go ahead,' shouted the leader, 'go head, brother. The Lord will forgive.' 'I know,' replied the penitent, 'but he ain't on the grand jury.'"

The bank deposit guaranty law of Kansas went into effect June 30. The law will effect only such banks as shall elect to avail themselves of it, but it is expected that all of the 777 state banks in Kansas will place themselves under the provisions of the law without delay. The new law provides that the banks are to associate themsevles as partners in a sort of a mutual insurance company. They will be obliged to put $1,000,000 in state and national securities to guarantee the payments of deposits. National banks cannot participate in the guarantee feature of the Kansas law and it is expected that many of them, especially those in smaller towns, will denationalize and become state institutions, in order to take advantage of the guaranty law.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

The Lincoln News gives the public the benefit of its opinion on the tariff question, saying that a special session should be called before election and give the consumer a chance to insist upon having something to do with the framing of a tariff bill:

"After pondering deeply over the matter, we have come to the conclusion that if the consumer desires any part or consideration in tariff making, he must choose a different period of the year in which tariff bills shall be moulded. Last year we had a lively campaign, at the conclusion of which we selected several hundred gentlemen to represent us in congress and elected legislatures which chose some thirty senators during the winter. Last year—say about August and September—would have been the proper time to call congress in session and pass a tariff bill. The consumer was the big man at that time. The various candiates were so sure that his interests should be cnsidered above all others that they frankly told him so and assured him that what he needed was a reduction in the tariff so that the cost of living might be lessened. Since then they have gone down to Washintgon, have talked with the manufacturer, have found him to be a very convincing sort of a gentleman and have allowed him to write the schedules. Distance and time have permitted the vision of the consumer to become shadowy, and in some cases he is treated as a purely mythical personage. It is quite evident that he is to receive little consideration at the hands of either branch. The only way open to the consumer, as we view it, is for him to demand that tariff-making be confined entirely to the campaign season when he is somebody."

AS OTHERS SEE US.

It is well to look at our politcial conditions through foreign eyes now and then. More than a hundred years ago the people of Boston rebelled against an insignificant tax on tea, and dumped a few shiploads of tea in the harbor. Now they complacently accept a higher tax on the same article and make no ojection when our government pursues the same tactics with reference to our colonies as did the English king with the New England colonists. The Montreal Witness draws a picture of the situation, saying:

"Rebellion was justified by the revolted Thirteen Colonies on the ground that they were taxed by the British Government without their consent. Today we see the United States, where the right of a dependency to rebel against such injustice has been created into a fixed principle, adoptig the same policy towards the Philippines which lighted the flames of the revolution from Maine to the Carolinas. Senator Root, though he did not refer to this obvious historical parallel, perhaps because it would have been too scorching, made a vigorous protest against the way the Philippines were treated when speaking in the tariff debate. His speech was like an echo of Lord Chatham's famous denunciation of the harsh and arbitrary conduct of the North ministry towards the American colonies. Mr. Root pointed out with reference to the Philippines, as Lord Chatham did with reference to the American colonies, that they were denied self government, placed in the category of wards, and that the United States was under the strongest moral obligation to be scrupulously just to them and watchful of their interests. Mr. Root made out even a stronger case against the party now in Congress than Chatham made against the Tories in the British Parliament over a hundred and thirty years ago. He showed that while denying the Filipinoes the right to buy where they could buy cheapest, and compelling them to buy from the United States, Congress refuses them unrestricted access to the markets of the United States. Goods from other countries are to prevented from entering the Philippines on as good terms as goods from the United States. It follows that other countries will likely penalize Philippine goods. At one stroke the Filipinoes are menaced with the deprivation of one set of customers and the only limited access to the one customer left to them! Spain never did anything more tyrannical than this. Yet the Americans went to the islands with the cry of "freedom and benevolent assimilation"

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Rush City Post: Eberhart is everywhere, preparing a summer fallow for next year's political crop.

Anoka Union: It's a pity such a creature as Aldrich should be allowed to have United States senator attached to his name, and he wouldn't if senators were elected by the direct vote of the people.

Elk River Star-News: It is some compensation for the public to know that congress has to remain in session during the broiling weather and thereby get a taste of what is coming to some of the members.

Appleton Press: No true Democrat can rejoice in the dishonor of the Republican party. We are Americans before partisans, and we must all share in the disgrace of having our government in the hands of men like Taft, Aldrich, Lodge and Cannon, the mere tools of corporate greed.

Hutchinson Leader: Senators fighting for tariff reduction are making a mess of it by demanding a duty on commodities produced by some of the constituents thus playing right into the hands of Aldrich and bolstering up his play for higher duties on even trust made goods.

Red Wing Republican: It would be better to recognize the truth manfully; which is, that if the duties on the necessaries of life are cut down to what they ought to be, there will be ample revenue. It is these that bring in the money. Restore competition by giving them a chance in our market, reduce expenses decently, and the treasury will have more money than it knows what to do with.

Anoka Free Press: There is considerable talk throughout the state of electing a legislature next time that will be pledged to stand by Governor Johnson for United States senator, and among leading men of both parties the project seems to meet with more or less approval. This is not saying, however, that Governor Johnson will not be a candidate for the presidency, because the likelihood in this respect looms up big and strong on the political horizon.

Long Prairie Leader: The basis of division for the political parties the next fifty years is going to be the right and proper methods for the distribution of wealth. That problem has been solved. There is wealth enough and to spare. What the nation is to concern itself with the next two or three generations is the problem of seeing that this wealth is properly distributed. We can never become a really free or a truly happy people until there is a developed popular intelligence capable not only of devising, but of carrying out a system of laws such that every man who labors, whether with head or hands, can have as his own, that share of the wealth he produces to which he is entitled.

Parliament. One of the banners in the procession was borne by a native of Japan; Canada and Mexico were both represented, the former by a large delegation; and a native quartette composed of two members of the Hawaiian branch, a minister and a business man, sang in the liquid language of these American Islands its patroitic songs.

Practical Philanthropy.

A touching incident occured the other day in Minneapolis which illustrates both the practical philanthropy of some of its civic societies, and at what small sacrifice people living in the country may do great practical good and win the unmeasured gratitude of God's poor. They have an outing society there which makes it its business to give those who cannot afford the expense an occasional country outing during these hot summer days. The other day one of these, a poor washerwoman, appeared in the offices of the society in the court house and taking a seat gave way to tears, which coursing down her cheeks were absorbed in her apron as she rocked herself to and fro. Naturally the lady in charge was anxious to know what she was crying about, and if possible to relieve her distress. As it turned out, however, her tears were tears of joy and not of sorrow. She was one of those who had been given an outing, and coming to express her gratitude was so overcome by her feeling that she broke down completely. "I have new strength," she said as she became calmer, "and courage to do the work which means a living for my children. You do not know what good you do. I don't know how to thank you enough for what you have done for me and other women like me who have to work hard and would never be able to get to the country without your aid.

A Bubble Burst.

But if some women are helped in Minneapolis others, both men and women, are also victimized there. This time it is by another of those get rich quick concerns to so many of which the mill city has given birth. The promoter was a man by the name of Morris. He organized the Minneapolis Grain Indemnity Company, which offered sure thing in wheat deals, and kept up the delusion for a while by using the money of secondary investors to pay the dividends of primary investors. His victims were mostly poor people, women, cripples, clerks, and an occasional unpecunious doctor or lawyer who was dazzled by his stories of profit. Finally the bubble burst and Morris has disappeared with, it is believed, $175,000 ill-gotten gains lining his pockets.

St. Paul's Big Stick.

Mayor Lawler has again had recourse to the big stick. "Our Dan" thinks a mayor has more to do than draw his salary, and our expeirence with him goes to show that wherever he sees a wrong he sets about finding a remedy. This time he has struck out for a cleaner city. He lives upon St. Atnhony Hill, and on his way down town the other morning he met two garbage carts with their lids up, distributing the garbage odors impartially to all residents of the fashionable quarter. When he got down town he was mad clear through and before he had time to cool off sat down and wrote a letter to Health Commissioner Renz, who has charge of this service, which he wound up by telling him that he and his entire force ought to be lynched. Of course Renz protested that it wasn't his fault, and tried to lay the blame on some one else. All the same it is safe to bet that the next time the drivers leave the lids up on their garbage wagons they'll take almigthy good care that Dan Lawler isn't within smelling distance.

The Canal Commission.

They are talking now of a canal from Duluth to St. Paul by way of the Upper Mississippi, and in compliance with a law passed at the last session of the legislature, Governor Johnson appointed a commission to inquire into the practicability of the undertaknig, with Judge Collins at its head, a sufficient warrant that the work will be thoroughly done. The ultimate purpose, however, is to interest the federal government in the proposed waterway. Some profess, however, to regard the canal by the route proposed as unpracticable, one by way of the St. Croix river being suggested as an alternative. Quite as much interest is taken in the canal and the river improvement in connection therewith as a source of water power, as for the transporation of freight.

Damming The Mississsippi.

Indeed the economy of making use of our natural waterpower is more and more attracting popular attention. The most practical suggestion made, as affecting this section of the state, is the building of a dam thirty feet high acorss the Mississippi between St. Paul and Minneapolis and Fort Snelling. From such a dam many thousand horse power could be developed. It would be transferred to electricity by what has come to be known as the hydro-ectric process, and in St. Paul and Minneapolis the power could be disposed of, it is believed, at profitable rates. The United States authorities who control this waterway are said to be willing to give their consent to the undertaking.

Weak Women

To weak and ailing women, there is at least one way to help. But with that way, two treatments must be combined. One is local, one is constitutional, but both are important, both essential. Dr. Shoop's Night Cure is the Local. Dr. Shoop's Restorative, the Constitutional. The former—Dr. Shoop's Night Cure—is a topical mucous membrane suppository remedy, while Dr. Shoop's Restorative is wholly an internal treatment. The Restorative reaches throughout the entire system, seeking the repair of all nerve, all tissue, and all blood ailments. The "Night Cure", as its name implies, does its work while you sleep. It soothes sore and inflamed mucous surfaces, heals local weaknesses and discharges, while the Restorative, eases nervous excitement, gives renewed vigor and ambition, builds up wasted tissues, bringing about renewed strength, vigor, and energy. Take Dr. Shoop's Restorative—Tablets or Liquid—as a general tonic to the system. For positive local help, use as well

"ALL DEALERS"

HER TWO PARTNERS.

By SPENCER TROWBRIDGE.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

Several married women were discussing over their afternoon tea the matter of choosing a husband. Mrs. Brown advocated giving way to love, no matter how unpromising a match might be otherwise. Mrs. Tinker considered common sense the most desirable trait to look for in a life partner. Mrs. Evans declared that, after all that had been said against marriages for money, without it there could be no comfort and without comfort love is short lived. Mrs. Twitchell declared that no man could ever have won her who was not a fascinating conversationalist.

"Your remark, Mrs. Twitchell," said Mrs. Anderson, "reminds me of a story—a story in which I was the principal actor. When I was eighteen I went to visit a schoolmate whose father was very intimate with the superintendent of an insane asylum. During my visit a dance was given for the patients, and we were all invited. None of us relished going, but my host was much interested in the sufferers and insisted on our doing our part.

"My first partner was so queer looking and had such a restless, anxious look in his eye that I was afraid of him. Every now and again he would pause or stop short in the dance to look at some other mental wreck, and once I was dreadfully frightened for fear he was going to attack a demure little woman who of all those present looked the most tractable. My partner said very little to me, and when I addressed a remark to him he barely answered me. He seemed preoccupied. I fancied that he considered every one present his natural enemy and if I escaped being strangled by him before the dance was finished I would be fortunate. I was much relieved when the music stopped.

"My second partner was very different. He was about thirty-five years old and handsome as a picture. I shall never forget the quiet, well poised look in his eyes. The matron introduced him to me and as she did so whispered something to me which I understood to be that he was an invited guest. But if she had not so informed me I should have been sure that he was of perfectly sound mind. He made several remarks to me in the intermissions of the dance that caught my attention at once, and I longed to listen to his conversation. Such a man at such an age is just the person to impress a young girl who is naturally flattered by any notice he deigns to bestow upon her. As soon as the dance was finished I put my arm through his that I should not lose him.

"He talked delightfully. He was a graduate of an American, a German and an English university. He had traveled everywhere and had the faculty of imparting not only information on abstruse topics, but of making one seem to visit the places he had visited. His favorite topic was biology. I remember his telling me that scientists were getting every day nearer to a knowledge of the source of life, and he surprised me by telling me that the day would come when they would by chemical substances and forces produce protoplasm, the fundamental living substance.

"While we were chatting my first partner passed us and gave my companion a look which I flattered myself was due to jealousy. I had no mind to be interrupted in my tete-a-tete and showed by apparent rapt attention that I was absorbed in what was being said to me.

"My partner after this, continuing his remarks on the source of life, grew animated. He made me feel that he was a superior being sent down from heaven to demonstrate that our mortal part is nothing more than a chemical combination to hold the soul during its preparation for another existence. My enthusiasm waxed with his. But, though I was rapt in what he said, there was a dual current of thought in my mind, a feeling of how happy I could be with, how proud of, such a husband.

"Again my first partner came near us, and again I noticed that he was wrought upon by jealousy. True, he was a lunatic, but I was at an age to be pleased even at the jealousy of an unbalanced mind. His insanity need not necessarily interfere with his taste. At that moment my companion gave my arm a clutch that caused me to shriek with pain, shouting, 'I will force your soul from your body and put it back again!' And from the look in his eye I knew that were he free to do so he would murder me.

"I heard a sharp whistle. In a moment my first partner was holding my second, and in a few seconds more he was joined and assisted by several keepers. The man I admired was then hustled off like a felon, and the man I did not admire superintended his removal.

"Well, to end the story, it turned out that my first partner was a brilliant young doctor who as medical director of the asylum was studying mental diseases. My second was a lunatic of no special education who had picked up a smattering of various sciences. Such was the judgment of a girl of marriageable age between two men as to which she would marry. I have two daughters, and I am determined that neither of them shall marry without my approval."

"Your husband, I believe," said one of the auditors, "is the eminent brain specialist. Was he your first partner?"

"Yes, and my partner for life."

"At your mother's suggestion?"

"No," replied the story teller. "I acted on my own judgment."

S.S.S. FOR BAD BLOOD

The most important part of the human system is the blood. Every muscle, nerve, tissue, bone and sinew is dependent on this vital fluid for nourishment and strength necessary to maintain them in health and enable each to perform the different duties nature requires. Even the heart, the very "engine" of life, receives its vigor and motive power from the blood. Since so much is dependent on this vital fluid it can very readily be seen how necessary it is to have it pure and uncontaminated if we would enjoy the blessing of good health. Bad blood is responsible for most of the ailments of mankind; when from any cause it becomes infected with impurities, humors or poisons, disease in some form is sure to follow. Muddy, sallow complexions, eruptions, pimples, etc., show that the blood is infected with unhealthy humors which have changed it from a pure, fresh stream to a sour, acrid fluid, which forces out its impurities through the pores and glands of the skin. A very common evidence of bad blood is sores or ulcers, which break out on the flesh, often from a very insignificant bruise or even scatch or abrasion. If the blood was pure and healthy the place would heal at once, but being loaded with impurities, which are discharged into the wound, irritation and inflammation are set up and the sore continues. Bad blood is also responsible for Anaemia, Boils, Malaria, etc.; the weak, polluted circulation cannot furnish the nourishment and strength required to sustain the body, and a general run-down condition of health results. S. S. S. is nature's blood purifier and tonic; made entirely of healing, cleansing roots and herbs. It goes down into the circulation and removes every particle of impurity, humor or poison that may be there, restores lost vitality, and steadily tones up the entire system. It adds to the blood the healthful properties it is in need of, and in every way assists in the cure of disease. S. S. S. neutralizes any excess of acid in the blood, making it fresh and pure, and permanently cures Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and all other skin diseases and eruptions. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism, Catarrh, Sores and Ulcers, Malaria, and all other diseases or disorders arising from bad blood. Book on the blood and any medical advice desired free to all who write.

Your S. S. S., in my opinion, is as good a medicine as can be had; it simply cannot be improved upon as a remedy to purify and enrich the blood and to invigorate and tone up the system. This spring my blood was bad and I was run down in health, and having seen your medicine highly advertised I commenced its use. Today my blood is in fine condition and my general health is of the best. Am filling position as fireman for a large concern here, and if I was not in good physical condition it would be impossible for me to fill the place. Your S. S. S. has been of great service to me and I do not hesitate to give it the credit it deserves.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby Given, That on the 30th day of July 1909, at Two o'clock P. M., at the auditor's office in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 35 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, State of Minnesota, by their order bearing date the Nineteenth day of June, 1909, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the Engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet and from thence, successively, up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from Station Number "0" to Station Number "316" inclusive, being the whole of said main ditch No. 35 and contemplating the excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth, the same to be placed along the side of the ditch in such a manner as to form a turnpike or grade and in the time and manner described in the plans, profile, maps and specifications of the Civil Engineer in charge, all on file in my office, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to completed within the time required, and in the manner specified, in said Engineer's report. And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said County, with two freehold sureties for the faithful performance and fulfillment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file, and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of such ditch is as follows: The excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth being estimated at Seven thousand three hundred and seventy three and 50-100 ($7,373.50) Dollars.

The estimated total cost of the work is $9,678.85-100 Dollars.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said County, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved:

Dated June 28th, 1909.

PLUMMER.

Miss Sophia Steen daughter of Knute Steen residing north of Plummer suffered a very painful accident Monday evening while returning to her home from the celebration. In company with several friends she was walking up the track a short distance from town. In attempting to pass the other members of the party her foot became wedged between the rail and the ties and she lost her balance. The result was a bad fall in which the foot was badly bruised and twisted. The accident will confine Miss Steen to her home for several weeks.

L. T. Bergh is having some trouble with his ditching machine The machine itself does good work but it is too heavy to be operated as was first planned. Mr. Bergh states that he decided to dismantle the dredge and rebuild it on a boat in order to get the work required out of the machine. The boat will be contsructed near a big swamp and will be 50 by 14 feet constructed mainly out of heavy timbers. Mr. Bergh also stated that it would require about two months and that he fears for the successful outcome of the experiment.—Pioneer.

LEGAL EXCUSES

Provisions of the Law Requiring School Attendance.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota:

Section 1. Every parent, guardian or other person who resides in any school district and who has control of any child or children of or between the ages of eight and sixteen years, and in school districts contained in cities of the first class between the ages of eight and eighteen, shall send such child or children to a public or private school in each year during the entire time the public schools of such district are in session.

Provided, however, that such child or children may be excused from such attendance upon a written application to the school board by the parent, guardian or person having control of such child or children for the whole or any part of such period by the school board or board of education of the school district in which such parent or guardian, or person having control over the child or children resides, upon its being shown to the satisfaction of such board:

(1). That such parent, guardian, or person having control is not able by reason of poverty to clothe such child properly; or

(2) That such child's bodily or mental condition is such as to prevent his attendance at school or application to study for the period required; or

(8) That such child has already completed the studies ordinarily required in the Eighth grade; or

(4) That there is no public school within reasonable distance of his residence.

A record of such excuses granted shall be spread upon the minutes of the meeting of the board and a copy of the same, duly signed by two members of the board, shall be given to the applicant.

Nature's Armor.

Lobsters and crabs are familiar examples of armor bearing creatures. The lobsters have wonderful coats of mail suggestive of those devised by human warriors in the age of chivalry. They combine perfect security with ease of movement, owing to their jointed structure. The manner in which crabs when at rest tuck their legs beneath them so as to bring them under the shelter of the hard carapace is interesting. The crab is doubly protected, for it resembles a water worn pebble, and thus looks to large fishes which like to eat the crustacean—so long as it keeps still—very similar to the objects with which it is surrounded.

THE STANDARD OF THE WORLD

MAYNARD'S REVENGE

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

Nearly 200 years ago two British ships of war were anchored off the settlement of Jamestown, in the colony of Virginia. On board one of them Lieutenant Maynard was awaiting his wife, who was coming out to him from England, it being their intention to settle in the new country. A ship was seen making slow headway up the stream, and Maynard, thinking the vessel to be the Thetis, in which his wife had sailed from London, took a boat and was pulled down to meet her. A terrible shock awaited him. The vessel was not the Thetis, but the Europa, and she brought the news that the former vessel had been captured by Edward Thatch, a pirate, commonly called Blackbeard, and all on board had perished.

Thatch had for some time infested the coast, running his plunder into Bathtown, N. C., where he had gained the protection of the governor by dividing it with him. The governor of Virginia had been appealed to with a view to getting rid of the buccaneer and when this last outrage was perpetrated stood ready to act. He furnished two sloops, the war vessels furnished the crews, and Lieutenant Maynard was placed in command of an expedition to hunt down Blackbeard.

One day in November the sloops weighed anchor and sailed away down the river, followed by the prayers of the sturdy settlers of the town and their comrades on the warships. No one doubted that if Lieutenant Maynard fell in with the demon of the ocean he would either bring him back alive or dead or would never come back himself. And they were right. Maynard had been married but a short time before his ship had sailed from England to a girl he worshiped and both being of an adventurous spirit had laid their plans to make a home in the new world. From the moment he heard of her death he knew but one sensation, and that was to be revenged upon her murderer.

Four days after the expedition sailed the pirates were sighted in an inlet near Bathtown. As it was nightfall Maynard anchored to wait for light by which to get at his enemy. When it came Thatch made an effort to escape, but in doing so ran aground. Maynard saw that he had his enemy at a disadvantage, since, being in a fixed position, he could neither maneuver nor get away. Maynard tried to get near the pirate, but drew too much water. Throwing out the ballast from the sloop in which he was, he finally came within close range.

On the pirate's deck stood Thatch. His bushy black beard, from which he derived his name, was tied up with ribbons, the ends of which were thrown over his ears. On his head was a fur cap with a lighted match on either side. Across his shoulders were slung three brace of pistols. In a harsh voice he hurled words of defiance, to which Maynard replied that he would soon board him, which was the only offensive method at his disposal, since he had no guns. The answer from the pirate was a broadside, which put out of the fight twenty of Maynard's crew and nine on his supporting ship.

Maynard, thirsting to get at the demon, ran close up alongside his ship. Suddenly a shower of hand grenades fell on the sloop, and before the crew could recover from the blow Blackbeard and fourteen of his followers were on the British ship's deck.

Maynard and Thatch rushed together. Hand to hand they fought, now with sword, now with pistol. But, since the one barrel weapon of that day was exhausted in a single shot and six of them were but equal to one revolver of the present, it was but a few minutes before nothing remained to them except their swords. Thatch fought for his life, Maynard only for revenge. Time and again he luckily escaped death from his enemy's cutlass. His sword broke, and it seemed that he must fall before Blackbeard's still perfect steel. But he fought on with what remained of his blade, thrusting, cleaving, hacking.

It was a terrible sight, those two men, the one possesed by a demon of cruelty, the other a demon of revenge, struggling in a death grip. Thatch was grotesque in his ribboned beard, Maynard terrible in his greed for vengeance. And each knew that the fate of all his followers depended upon him.

At last the pirate, who had managed to get hold of a loaded pistol, staggering under a dozen wounds, while cocking it fell dead. The end had come, and it had come for the pirates. Every man of them jumped overboard and cried for quarter. They were taken in to be reserved for a different ending.

Five or six days later the settlers of Jamestown and the crews of the warships saw sails down the river, recognized the sloops and waited anxiously the results of the expedition. When they came nearer, on the end of the bowsprit of the foremost vessel was a death's head, the head of Thatch, the pirate, with its ghastly, sunken eyes, its livid flesh, its black beard tied up in ribbons. Then they knew that the lieutenant had wreaked his vengeance.

So much for Blackbeard. What remained was for his crew. When the lieutenant and his men had been congratulated a hangdog looking lot consisting of thirteen pirates were taken out from the hold in irons, rowed ashore and, after a trial distinguished only for its brevity, were swung off at the ends of hempen ropes.

BRAY.

Everybody is now busy making hay while the sun shines.

A. E. Andeson and Emil Larson drove to St Hilaire Friday.

Tillie Hanson left for Adams, N. D., last Friday for a visit with relatives at that place.

Willie Crown of Black River and Lloyd Crown of Thief River Falls spent the Fourth with their parents.

Gust Scholin returned Tuesday from Grand Forks.

Gust, Annie and Tina Swanson visited at Thief River Falls Friday and Saturday.

Doctor Smith of Crookston passed thru here Wednesday in his auto-buggy on his way to town of Sanders on a professional visit.

Mike Ault has had a phone installed in his house which connects with Angus and other points out west. Well, you are the only one so far, Mike, but we all hope to have it in the near future.

Emil Larson returned last week from Seattle and other western points where he spent a month, but he still seems to think that Minnesota is just as good as any of them. On his way home he stopped off at Big Timber, Montana, for a short visit with Mike Ault of that place, a former Brayite, whom he reports in a prosperous condition.

A. E. Anderson had the misfortune to get a valuable horse so badly cut in a barb wire fence that there is little hope for its recovery.

Hans Sande and family of town of Helgeland, Polk Co., visited at Iver Johnson's Sunday and talked about the good old times as Mr. Johnson and Mr. Sande were neighbors in their native county, Norway.

GRIEF AND GREED.

Sorely Afflicted, Yet He Kept an Eye on the Main Point.

The following communication was recently addressed by a grief stricken German husband to the secretary of a life insurance company in Germany:

"Sir—Deeply afflicted, I take up my pen to inform you that my dear wife, Anne Maria, nee L——, insured in your company for the sum of $750, has suddenly died, leaving me a victim to the deepest despair. This grievous blow fell on me this morning at 7. Kindly endeavor to let me have my insurance money as promptly as possible. The policy bears the number ——, as you will find by reference to your books.

"I may say very seriously and in all sincerity that she was a faithful wife and an admirable mother. In order that all formalities may be settled with promptitude I inclose herewith a certificate officially recording her death.

"Her illness was but a short one. Nevertheless she suffered intensely, which naturally renders my grief all the more poignant. I have no doubt that you will afford me partial consolation by sending on the insurance money as promptly as possible.

"In return I hereby formally promise to have my second wife insured in your company for $1,500, double the sum for which my defunct darling was insured.

"My grief is immense, yet the conviction that you will afford me consolation sustains me during this terrible ordeal. In the hope that we shall soon draw our insurance money, my children join me in," etc.—Exchange.

CAME ON THE JUMP.

A Signal That Brought the Busy Waiters In a Body.

To get a waiter quickly in a big cafe is at times very difficult, but a Germantown man recently learned a method from a New York friend which is guaranteed instantly to bring not one but several waiters. This Germantown man was giving a dinner in one of Philadelphia's swellest cafes, with the New Yorker and two women as his guests. After a long delay a waiter came and took the order. Then one of the women decided that she must make a change in her order. The host signaled one waiter after another without avail. After about ten minutes of violent gesticulating on his part the New Yorker said:

"You don't know how to attract their attention. I'll bet you $5 I can bring a waiter to this table within thirty seconds."

"I'll take the bet," said the Philadelphian, drawing out his watch. The New Yorker reached over into the middle of the table, picked up a thin, delicate glass and deliberately dashed it to the floor. Instantly every waiter in the room came rushing up to see what was the trouble.

"Charge one tumbler up on the bill," said the New Yorker laconically, "and change one of those oyster orders to Blue Points."

As the waiters dispersed he added, "I guess you owe me a five spot, old man."—Philadelphia Record.

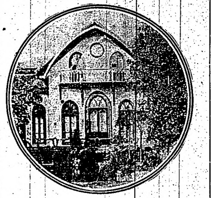
PUBLIC PARK WHERE SULTAN LIVED HIS MERCILESS LIFE

Famous Yildiz Palace at Constantinople to Be Converted Into Pleasure Place for the People.

In the superb grounds surrounding the Yildiz Palace where for three decades the recently dethroned Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Hamid, lived his merciless life apart from the gaze of the world, merry pleasure parties will soon congregate.

Grotesquely almost, it has been decided by the new rulers of the country to turn the once almost sacred grounds into a pleasure park for the public, and here along the very walks where the autocrat planned his atrocities and worked out those crafty policies that protected him from the just vengeance of Christian Europe, children will run and play and the innocent life of the people who replace the secret promenades of the man who so long misruled them.



In this transformation democracy gains another mighty victory in the land of former absolutism.

It has not been difficult to obtain the use of the grounds, for it is part of the law of Turkey that each incoming sovereign must have a new palace, hence the successor of Abdul could not use the Yildiz.

If he has any eye for the beautiful, he somewhat must regret the law that takes this palace out of his hands, for in its charm of surroundings, the beauty of the building itself, the lovely walks of the gardens and the wonderful furnishings of the various rooms, the whole structure is a dream of Oriental lavishness, tempered by the good taste of Europeans whom the Sultan employed for such matters.

Luxury Loving Despot.

Abdul loved luxury. He had little else in common with humanity, but he did insist that his personal surroundings be on a scale with what he deemed the towering importance of his position among the monarchs of the world.

For example he knew that no matter what mystery he elected to invest his personality with, there were times when he must be seen. He must come in contact with the representatives of the nations of the world, and he determined that when he faced them, he should be seen in the midst of a luxury that even their own monarchs could not surpass.

So he had his reception room fitted out in European style, and to do the work he brought to Constantinople some of the foremost decorators of France.

The massive lustres which illumine the apartment were presented to the Sultan by the Emperor of Germany. They threw out an especially brilliant and iridescent glare, and were one of the prides of the Sultan.

The wonderful carpet, which entirely covered the floor in the European fashion, instead of calling for the use of rugs as Turkish tastes dictate, cost thousands of dollars. In fact the entire salon represented the expenditure of fabulous sums of money.

The palace includes two dining rooms. In the largest of these dignitaries and state ambassadors were feted, but not often did Abdul himself appear at such functions. His fear of assassination was so great that he would only eat in the little Messarin Kiosk, where he could have every move of his waiters watched, and where he was guarded at all times by his own trusty men hidden behind the walls, but never for an instant taking their eyes off their royal patron.

This room also served as a smoking room and place of reception for personal friends.

Horror for Gas or Electricity.

The Sultan had a keen horror for electricity or gas as illuminants and would not permit the use of either in the palace. Candles were therefore employed throughout, and these, though masterpieces of the metal workers' art, seemed strangely grotesque and out of place when compared with the remaining modern fittings of the building.

In the Sultan's work room he received and read reports of his confidential agents, that wonderfully organized system of spies with which the young Turks had to deal before they were able to carry their campaign to a successful finish.

A Section of the Palace Showing the Harem Grounds.

Here he took a curious delight in reading all that hostile newspapers of the world had to say of him.

Another chamber that had most interest for all those who were ever fortunate enough to penetrate within the recesses of the palace was the treasure chamber. Here the Sultan had, or was supposed to have, treasure beyond the dreams of even the most greedy. The resources were his personal property, that what was his beyond any demand of the state to call on. The conglomerated wealth of all the millionaires of the world today was supposed to fall short of the value of this treasure. But the investigation of the palace after the fall of the Sultan failed to show money in the amount that had been promised.

Altogether only seven and one-half millions were found in the palace. Of this sum two and one-half millions were in cash and the remaining sum was in first-class marketable securities.

Further investigation showed that the Sultan had on deposit in the banks of Germany, England, France and the United States about fifteen million dollars more.

The cabinet at once took the position that by his abuse of power and his many crimes against the people the Sultan had confiscated his right to these personal belongings and at once confiscated them.

Only Fraction of Secret Treasure.

It is believed by many, however, that this money only represented a fraction of what the secret treasure vaults of the palace may show. It is known that the Sultan was fond of jewels, as most of his predecessors before him have been, and that he made a great collection, which was based on the wonderful assembly of gems he inherited.

Search for these secret places for the hiding of wealth is still going on, and before the grounds are turned over to the public, excavations will be made so as to be sure none of the treasure is secreted there.

Other especially interesting rooms in the palace are those in which the Sultanas had their apartments. These were fitted up with luxury and with a good taste surprising to those who have thought lightly of this phase of the Sultan's life.

The Yildiz palace overlooks the blue waters of the Bosphorus. A private mosque that is a gem of architecture rises from the olive trees near by, and from its graceful minaret is heard the voice of the muezzin calling the faithful to prayer and reminding them ever that Allah is Allah, and that Mahomet is his prophet.

It is to this superb mosque that the Sultan went to do his devotions.

The Palace as Viewed From the Lake.

On the grounds is also the palace of his harem, for only a favored few of those who were the property of the monarch lived in the same building with him. Most of the others were segregated in the lovely building to which the monarch alone had the key.

No one ever knew how many wives were there save the chief eunuch. Those who went in rarely came out unless it happened that the Sultan tired of them and wished to give one in marriage to some bey or pasha who had won his favor.

Soldiers Were Supreme.

All over this fine estate soldiers of the Sultan at all times had supreme authority. The Sultan trusted his soldiers and well he might, for they were loyal to him, until by his own acts directed against the army itself Abdul alienated from him those who might have saved his throne.

In his walks in the garden, though only his own men were near, or could by any possibility pass the guarded walls, the Sultan ever wore his famous coat of fine mail, a close fitting shirt made of steel mail, that certainly would have turned the edge of a sword or dagger and would have resisted an ordinary bullet.

The main building of the palace is of beautiful white marble, which cost a king's ransom.

Constantinople has welcomed the idea of being allowed to run at will over grounds where once to have been apprehended would have meant death.

Europeans also will undoubtedly be interested at the chance to inspect the surroundings of a building rich in romance, and memories, even though they be tinctured with the horror of black deeds.

Woman's Vindication.

The First "Blue Laws."

The name "blue laws" was given to the first collection of laws framed for the government of the New Haven colony. They were published in collective form in 1650, the volume being in a blue cover, which gave rise to the name that has clung to the laws ever since.

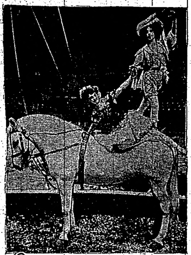
DOMESTIC JOYS IN LIFE OF WOMAN OF CIRCUS

Finds It Possible to Obtain More Out of Home Life Than Her Sister of the Stage.

Not in the life of the woman of the circus would one look for the flower of domesticity.

Yet it blooms there in its best estate. The devoted wife, mother, sister and sweetheart is to be found in legion among the pretty, gaily dressed women in the pink, blue and green tights who daze thousands by their feats of daring on trapeze, on the slack wire, bareback riding and in dozens of other feats that never fail of their fascination for the public.

The woman of the circus leads a much more careful life than her sister of the stage. Drink to her is rigidly denied. Even of her diet she must be most critically careful, for with her a mistake of an inch means death, and to be in the best physical condition she must pay the price in a life almost ascetic.



Two Daring Women Bareback Riders

Add Novelty to Their Act by Using a Filipino Bull.

The girl who spends the working hours of her life flying through the air, thirty feet above the hard tan bark, being thrown and caught from man to man, or woman to woman for that matter, cannot take any chances. She must be right, all nerve, all coolness, all condition.

They are genuine women, these queens of the circus, once they take off the spangles, drop their high sounding titles, and stand in their street clothes as plain American girls. For instance, it is told of one remarkable trapeze artist, who flies through the air in some of the most daring of performances, that she is always afraid when she is on a railroad journey and that this is the one feature of the life of the circus that she fears.

Tight-Rope Artist Afraid of Cars.

Another who is a notable tight rope artist, and capers and dances on the slender surface of a thin wire, twenty-five feet above the ground, is afraid to cross the street in a crowded city, lest she be run down by a street car, an automobile or a carriage.

They have trained and hardened muscles these matchless women athletes of the sawdust arena, but their feminity has not calloused, they are still gentle, kindly women, the same as their sisters in other callings of life.

The actress gets her nerve by reason of the fact that she has lines to speak, that she is constantly in close touch with those who pay to see her, she can pick out faces, they are human beings in the audience. Under this nightly ordeal she becomes cool and a trifle blase. People no longer frighten her.

But the woman of the circus is far away from her audience. They are little more than a blur on the benches back of the glaring lights. In doing her feat of athletics her mind must be centered on her fellow athletes if a tragedy is to be avoided. Hence the woman of the circus comes little in contact with the public, and remains to a surprising degree, shy.

They know the danger of the calling. Accidents happen right along. They are not published to the world, for the circus must ever carry a message of cheerfulness, and people would not go if they had reason to expect to become witnesses to some serious injury.

But the circus woman is never permitted to become indifferent to the perils she runs. For one thing the insurance companies see that she has it ever in mind. They will grant insurance to a locomotive engineer, but to a circus acrobat, never.

The woman on the bare back of a flying horse, the girl making a leap from one pair of hands to another high up in the air there, never lets herself contemplate this peril while in the midst of the performance, for she knows that to do this is to beckon the approach of the spectre of death. If she has a qualm or two she chases it by a smile. Many a time the beautiful smile that comes to the face of the woman up there on the bar of the trapeze is nothing more than the symbol of a victorious battle with fear.

Even on the road there is plenty of domestic life to be found among these women. Many of them are great readers. The foreign performers spend a large part of their time learning the language of this country. They have their books of the language and on points of accent they are given assistance by their fellows.

A family, a mother and a couple of daughters doing an act, will contrive to have for themselves a comfortable sort of a home tent, a dressing room in name, but something more than that in fact.

Some of these women of the circus have sons or brothers at college. In fact this is nothing uncommon, and it is their dream of saving enough money so that eventually they can retire somewhere in the country and change for the life of stress the peaceful rural existence of the farmer.

Enter a dressing room, and the occupations of the women will be a surprise to those who have cherished the foolish idea that it was one round of the pleasures common to the Great White Way.

Idle Hours Are Occupied.

Here will be one noted trapeze artist working away for dear life on an embroidered pillow which she hopes to finish before a start is made for the next town. There is a woman knitting a necktie, which she is planning to send to her little boy who is away at school. A bareback rider is making herself a lace collar, which promises to be quite a skillful piece of needlwork. Half a dozen of the girls are busily engaged writing letters home, and if the visitor could go to the impertinent point of gazing over the shoulders of the writers he would find that in the penmanship and the character of the composition the letter of the woman of the stage shows the result of an excellent education.

The come from all over the country, these skillful mistresses of a hundred dazzling acts of daring, strength, grace and agility. Texas furnishes its share, so does Maine, so does Florida and California. And outside of the territory of Uncle Sam pretty nearly every country of the world has been drawn on for performers, though it must be admitted with great candor that in the life of the circus the possession of a foreign name by no means implies that its owner first saw light outside of the domain over which floats the stars and stripes.

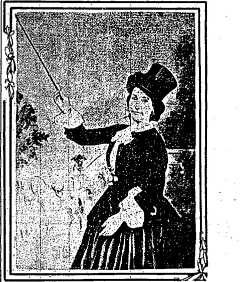
A far greater pecentage of circus women are married than of stage women. A. T. Ringling, a noted member of the famous family of circus owners, which has largely succeeded to the mantle of Forepaugh and Barnum, estimates that seventy-five per cent of the women performers in the circus are married. A large proportion of these accompany the acts of their husbands, and are never separated from them.

Another interesting point about the life of the circus that would commend it to most any woman is the fact that it seems to be a sort of panacea of youth.

It is an old joke about work worshipped circus rider in the pink tights who is really a grandmother, but it is based on truth, for even when one gets near these queens of the arena they retain their youthful appearance. The open air life, the constant exercise and the careful regime have their reward in maintained figures and flawless complexions.

There is obtainable in the life of the circus really more comfort than the life of the theatre affords. Every circus uses its own special train, and excellent conveniences are here provided for the women. The young women give little chafing dish parties during the long runs, and there is a lot of harmless sociability

Most performers of any merit are well paid, and the life on the road is sufficiently economical to enable them to save a considerable proportion of this salary. This money is largely put into handsome homes where, during the off season, the woman of the circus can be for the time actually the woman of the home, her dearest ambition.



Costume and Appearance of a Circus Woman of Olden Times.

Cost Britain Much Money

Britain once had to pay a large sum because of a mislaid bundle of documents. It was in 1862, during the American civil war, when the confederate cruiser Alabama was being fitted out at Liverpool. Evidence was in possession of the British government that almost justified the Alabama's detention, and the facts were thereupon submitted to the law officers of the crown, Sir Roundell Palmer and Sir William Atherton, who advised the immediate seizure of the vessel. But there was a regulation that all papers from the law officers were to be sent to the government through the queen's advocate. Unfortunately this official was ill, and the papers remained stuffed in his letter box for several days—long enough for the Alabama to steam away, ostensibly on a pleasure cruise, but really on the voyage of destruction which afterward cost Great Britain $15,000,000.

Knew Her "Missis."

"Hadn't you better wash the dishes before we go?" said a man, who was taking a hired girl out for a walk; "your missis will be sure to see them and scold you." "No, she'll not," replied the girl; "as soon as she learns I am going out for the evening, she'll spend all the time looking through my trunk."—Puck.

Aggressive Wealth

There is no particular harm in the restaurant habit. It is probably good for the restaurant keepers. But what does the starved loafer in the park think when he sees through the window of the Ritz the people who are lunching there? There is no harm either in making some provision for a pet animal. But a lady who died recently left an annuity to her dog to be paid to her maid on her dog's account, with directions that in case of illness it was to be taken up to London to see one particular veretinary surgeon and was to be washed only with the shampoo which this surgeon purveyed. These things were published in the papers. What must the man with the struggle to live think when he comes upon such items? There is no harm, of course, in driving a motor car, but every big car which is driven inconsiderately through a village leaves apart from its dust and fumes a good deal of very dangerous opinion behind it.—London Chronicle.

Significance of Shoe Throwing.

To this day eastern people take off their shoes as marks of reverence and as tokens that they dare not take occupancy where they stand. The thrower of the old shoe at a wedding ought to stand barefoot to keep the luck emblem intact, and the shoe should certainly be one of his own.

MOST FAMOUS NATIONAL SONG

The singing of "The Marseillaise" is necessarily a feature of the production of "The Goddess of Reason," the new blank verse drama in which Julia Marlowe will be seen this season, says the Baltimore American. The action of the drama all takes place during the earlier days of the French revolution, and no picture of the times would be complete without the rendering of the famous incendiary song. Lamartine, the famous French writer, describes the origin and significance of the song in memorable words. He says:

"The Marseillaise were approaching the capital. It was the fire of the south coming to rekindle the revolutionary hearth. This body of 1,200 or 1,500 men was composed of Genoese, Ligurians, Corsicans and Piedmontese, banished from their country and recruited suddenly on the shores of the Mediterranean, the majority sailors or soldiers accustomed to warfare, and some bandits hardened in crime. They were commanded by young men of Marseillaise. They came on amid the applause of central France, received, feted, overcome by enthusiasm and wine at the patriotic banquets which hailed them on their way. Their bronzed faces, their phrygian headdress, the guns dragged after them, the green branches which shaded their bonnets rouge, their strange language and savage gestures all struck the imagination of the multitude with great force. The revolutionary idea seemed to have assumed the guise of a mortal and to be marching under the aspect of this horde to the assault of the last remnant of royalty. They entered the cities and villages beneath triumphant arches. They sang as they marched couplets alternated by the regular noise of their feet on the road and by the sound of drums. Thine song, written by a young officer of engineers, Rouget de Lisle, is graven on the soul of France."

Unexpected Prize.

With a deftness acquired by long and patient practice the pickpocket extracted an old but well-filled wallet from the hip pocket of the unsuspecting old gentleman with the beaming countenance against whom he had carelessly brushed when leaving the street car, and on reaching a secluded place he opened it.

The contents had been wrapped with great care in numerous thicknesses of blank paper. Removing the wrappings one by one, he found in the center of the package a card with this inscription upon it: "Young Man, Give Up Your Career of Crime! Nothing In It!"

Lazy Men Power Generators.

Learned Justice Betts of Kingston, N. Y., says: "Lazy men have a right to live." Our lazy men are our most potent. History shows that as a rule, with a rule's exceptions, our greatest men had either indolent or shiftless fathers, as fathers of Shakespeare, Lincoln, Napoleon, Bismarck and other worthies indicate. On the other hand, great men's children are few and far between. Power in a lazy man is accumulating, as in a coiled spring, but the great man has little or nothing left for offspring.—New York Times.

Cheering Him Up.

"Bill," said the invalid's friend, "I've come to cheer you up a bit like. I've brought yer a few flahrs, Bill. I fought if I was too late they'd come in 'andy for a wreaf, yer know. Don't get down-'earted, Bill. Lummy, don't you look gashly! But there, keep up yer spirts, ole sport; I've come to see yer an' cheer yer up a bit. Nice little room you 'ave 'ere, but as I sez to meself when I was a-comin' up: 'Wot orkard staircase to get a coffin dahn!'"—London Globe.

An Irish Bull.

After Boyle Roche's famous bird comes the County Cork veterinary surgeon. At the last meeting of the Dunmanway rural council a member of that body complained of the inattention of the official veterinary surgeon. "There was," the rural councillor explained, "a case of swine fever in this place recently, and, though 'the doctor' got the order to go there, he never turned up until the following Tuesday, and even then it was another man who came to represent him."

AN OLD TIMER
Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum since it came upon the market knows from experience the wisdom of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a clear brain. She says:

"At the time Postum was first put on the market I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia, and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum. I got a package and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly, and I persuaded him to shift to Postum. It was easy to get him to make the change for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate nor depress and does not stimulate, but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach.

"To make a long story short, our entire family continued to use Postum with satisfying results, as shown in our fine condition of health and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power."

Increased brain and nerve power always follow the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner. "There's a Reason."

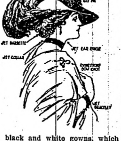
IN VOGUE

NOVELTIES IN JET

ARTICLES JUST NOW ARE IMMENSELY SOUGHT AFTER.

Revival of the Classic Fashions Responsible for Much of the Favor Just Now Shown to This Material.

The demand for jet is so great that the supply is entirely inadequate and all the jet in this country has been bought up for months to come. The best jet comes from France and most of the novelties are made over there. Just at present all these novelties, from shoe buckles to earrings and collar studs, are immensely sought after.



With black and white gowns, which are to be more popular than ever this year, all the jet ornaments are particularly attractive. Naturally, the blondes are especially taken with the large jet barrettes made in beautiful cut stones and even larger than the Mary Garden barrette.

The revival of the classic fashions brought the return of the earring, and the long jet pendant with a pearl or diamond at the top is always distinguished looking. There are long ropes of jet beads in the sparkling cut or the dull jet of mourning, and there are jet ornaments galore for the hat and bonnet, when this is not made of bands of jet and completed with a jet spangled aigrette.

The tremendous vogue for all the imitation jewelry shows that the fashions of Louis XV. are well on their way back. For that was the heyday of paste, and even the great king himself did not disdain substituting imitation diamonds for the real in his waistcoat buttons when the financial pressure was strong.

The Louis Quinze bowknots in rhinestones and paste diamonds are set in silver and made the exact shape of the antique bowknots which were worn on the bodices by the court ladies.

Handsome combinations of rhine stones and jet are seen in ornaments for hats, the brilliancy of the rhinestone being enhanced by its somber neighbor.

A jet set is not complete without the jet collar and bracelets which are the same wide bracelets which were popular about 30 years ago.

The cut jet brooch is no longer an emblem of mourning but may simply be worn to give the note of black necessary to one's frock, or the jetted fan is carried for the same purpose. Purses of jet and handsome jet umbrella handles, tiaras, La Vallieres, stick pins and hat pins of all kinds form some of the ways in which jet is employed, and which make it the most popular jewelry for summer wear.

A Sewing Tip.

Why not keep a pair of tweezers in the workbasket? You have no idea how useful they are to pull out stubborn ends of basting cotton, particularly when the machine stitching has run over the bastings. Such accidents are very frequent, no matter how careful the seamstress may be, and the tweezers will really prove of great assistance.

BEST WAY TO WASH PILLOWS

Process That Is Somewhat Tedious but Really the Only Means for Satisfaction.

You can also wash your feather pillows perfectly well if you select a bright day, empty the feathers into a cheesecloth bag and then wash them in strong soap suds and a little ammonia. To transfer the feathers, first rip open one end of the ticking, then baste the end of the cheesecloth bag over it, and not till this is carefully done, work the feathers into the bag. After the hot water and soap rinse the bag thoroughly in two or three waters, pulling the feathers apart through the bag with your hands. Then without squeezing, hang on the line in the sun to drip and dry.

While drying, pull the bag apart every now and then, after which beat the bag with a rattan whip for ten or fifteen minutes to make the feathers fluffy. Meantime the tick should have been laundered ready for the return of the feathers.

It is quite a tedious process, you see, but a most effective one. I wonder that more people do not think of laundering feathers they have had on hand for years, as a glimpse inside an old pillow sometimes discloses conditions that would rob you of all slumber if you knew of them.—Exchange.

Hints to Women About Blouses.

Too many girls are contented with ill-fitting shirtwaists or blouses, according to one modiste who is vastly interested in the home attempts of her friends.

An unlined shirtwaist has nothing to "hang" upon but its collar band and waist band; therefore, these two bands should be adjusted with care.

Never cut the neck and arm size close to the pattern.

Leave at least half an inch, which may be snipped with the scissors at the fitting, and, possibly, cut away.

Fullness at the waist line should not be gathered into the smallest possible space in front, but the gathers should be spread so that the fullness falls in a straight line.

Remember that the line should be long from the under part of the arm size to the waist line.

The straighter the collar the better. A collar the base of which curves below the throat line is bad.

Fans Come Back.

Fans, which were rather tabooed for awhile, have returned to fashion. They come in the color of the gown that is worn.

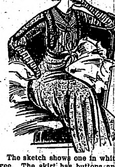
BATHING COSTUME FOR BOY.

Perhaps the Very Best Is the One Made on Lines of the Russian Blouse Suit.

A bathing suit for her dear, chubby boy is one of the questions that is agitating mother right now. Only by the merest chance may she hear, unless it is told her in black and white, that one of the easiest to make and most satisfactory for general daily wear is the Russian blouse bath suit. It is made over his very own blouse pattern, bloomers and all.

Every one of the suits for small children should be made of woolen material. Either cream or blue serge is perhaps most satisfactory in the long run because it does not thicken up the way flannel does. Yes, the blouse, with its belt, is only an overgarment, but the bloomers are made with an underwaist of their own; and to assure Tom's not taking cold there is not a better scheme than the fastening of the bloomers to a cut down and sleeveless woolen undervest.

GOWN FOR AFTERNOON.



The sketch shows one in white pongee. The skirt has buttons and buttonholes at each side of the waist line and is hooked down the back. The elaborate blouse above it is of white dotted net trimmed in Irish lace edged with bands of amethyst velvet ribbon. The lower sleeves and the yoke is of plain net.

To Make Ecru Curtains.

Dissolve tumeric powder, one tablespoonful to a gallon of water. After white curtains are thoroughly cleaned boil in this solution a few minutes.

WHEN YOU GO TO BUY LINEN

Some Little Things Worth Keeping in Mind—Get Toweling for Laundry Bag.

When buying material for a white linen suit it will be found more economical to get the two yard wide linen sheeting, as it costs less and cuts to splendid advantage.

Always buy linen handkerchiefs and towels and you can keep them a good color more easily than if cotton ones are bought.

For a laundry bag buy one and a half yards of wide bleached linen toweling, double it, overcast the edges, and put a stout tape drawstring at the top. This bag can be laundered often and so kept sweet and clean. The word "laundry" written on one side and outlined in white would add to the appearance.

If a piece of heavy linen cut large enough to cover the top of the dining table and extend two inches over at each edge, is neatly hemmed and placed over the large cloth a part of each week the table can be kept neater with less laundry work, and the large tablecloth will not wear out at the edges so quickly.

Half a yard of yard wide natural colored linen will make a cool and durable cushion cover for summer use. Cut the linen in two and embroider the top in a dull blue, using any pattern desired (large initials are pretty), and finish the edge with a blue and linen colored cord.

Gingham Is Gingham.

The cotton voiles and all of the pretty novelty materials in light weight hold a certain advantage over the prosaic gingham, which is at its best but gingham. While no one would attempt to deny the reliability and beauty of the gingham dress, we are all free to admit that it is essentially a frock for morning wear; its place is defined and it can never be utilized for other times and places.

The pretty voile, even at its simplest, is a material that passes muster as an afternoon or summer evening frock, and the same gown, just because it is inexpensive and unpretentious, may be utilized for the morning as well.

ARMED LIBERTY

STATUE THAT CROWNS DOME OF NATIONAL CAPITOL.

On Account of Its Height Above the Street the Average Washington Citizen Knows Very Little About It.

Armed Liberty, the magnificent statue that crowns the dome of the capitol, is by far the most symbolic of all the statues in Washington. Beautiful and reposeful, yet with an air of vigilance, it is perhaps the least appreciated of the city's statues, possibly because of its being placed at such an altitude that it cannot easily be studied. The original plans of the capitol called for a statue to surmount the dome, but no title was then given it, and although more than half a century has elapsed since its erection comparatively few people know the real name of the statue.

Seeking this information, a reporter interrogated a number of persons whose daily occupations keep them almost constantly beneath the shadow of the great statue. To the question, "What is the name of the statue above the dome of this building?" came these widely different opinions:

"The name of that statue? Why, it's the Goddess of Freedom."

"Yes, I can tell you the name. It is the Goddess of Liberty."

Several declared it to be the statue of Independence. Others said, "It is an Indian woman."

"It is the God of Justice and Freedom," declared a portly man in a tone that defied questioning.

"It represents an American woman, but I am not sure of her name."

One who always tries his best to help others, said: "Now all statues, as you know, bear the names of the people they represent, and if you will just step over to the library of congress I think you can easily find some book on statues that will tell you all you want to know. It is a woman, I am sure, so look for the female statues."

A younger member of the house replied to the question about the statue, most suavely and confidingly: "It is the god of progress, you know his name." Several of the colored men in the various part of the building were nearly all quite sure it was the goddess of freedom. One of them knew the year, 1863, when it was placed above the dome, and he affirmed: "It is the goddess of American liberty before the war."

"You want to know the name of that statue? Well, just wait a minute and I will get it for you first hand," and a most accommodating guide passed into the senate chamber. Directly he returned.

"That is a statue of Pocahontas." Every one had a different name for the statue, not one giving the real name, Armed Liberty.

The statue was modeled by Thomas Crawford, father of the novelist, the late F. Marion Crawford. It was cast at a Maryland foundry. Jefferson Davis was secretary of war when the model was first presented in the war department. The statue then wore a liberty cap and carried a bundle of rods. Davis objected to the liberty cap as being emblematic of emancipated slaves, while Americans were free born. He also thought the bundle of rods, suggesting the functions of the Roman lictor, had lost its symbolic character. Because of these criticisms of Secretary Davis the model was changed, and "Armed Liberty" was evolved.

The statue is nine feet six inches tall and weighs 14,985 pounds. It was put in place on December 2, 1863. The head is thrown back and adorned with eagle's beak and plumes. The right hand rests on a sword and the left holds an olive branch and a shield. The mantle is gracefully draped and is held by a brooch, bearing "U. S." on its face. The helmet is encircled with stars. The supporting globe bears the legend "E Pluribus Unum."

Frenchman Criticises Germans.

Jules Huret, in a recently published article in Figaro, continues his criticism of the German people because of their lack of humor. Nothing, he says, can better illustrate the low level of their sense of humor than the expression of a Frenchman who lived with a German family in a town where the largest confectionary establishment did business under the sign Zum Reichskanzler—the chancellor of the realm. Some tarts were served, which the Frenchman thought very good and he asked his hostess where they came from. "From the Reichskanzler," she said. "What!" said the guest in mock surprise, "I never knew that Prince Buelow could bake so well!" No one at the table smiled. Next day another Frenchman was told by the woman that his friend was a "very childish man—he thinks that our chancellor is a baker."

For Wireless Telephony.

In connection with his new system of wireless telephony Prof. Q. Majorana uses a liquid microphone. This consists of a small tube which is attached to the diaphragm of the microphone and through which a stream of water flows between a pair of platinum electrodes. When the microphone is vibrated by the voice the stream of liquid fluctuates, varying the electrical resistance in accordance with the sound of the voice.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

The Marital Grasshopper.

What is a grasshopper? The latest definition comes from western Australia. Domestic servants are almost unprocurable there, and wives have to do nearly all their own household work. The consequence is that they are compelled to recuperate at the seaside in summer. In their absence the husbands have to prepare their own meals and do domestic duty generally. Husbands so engaged have come to be locally known as "grasshoppers." No doubt the word is the husband of the more familiar "grass widow."—London Chronicle.

Good Excuse.

"I know, pa, but it's a whole lot harder since you sharpened the lawn mower."

On motion duly carried the minutes of the meeting of May 22nd 1909, was read and accepted as read.

Commissioner Demann offered the following preamble and resolution and moved their adoption:

Whereas, in pursuance of and full compliance with the General Laws of the State of Minnesota applicable thereto, such steps have been duly and legally taken that those certain Public County Drainage Ditches known as County Ditch No. 22, No. 23, No. 24, No. 25, No. 26, No. 28, and No. 30 have been duly located and established wholly within this County of Red Lake in the state of Minnesota, and it has been definitely ascertained and determined in accordance with the provisions of the law applicable thereto, that the expense incurred and to be incurred in locating and establishing and constructing said ditches respectively within said county of Red Lake, exceeds the following sums and amounts to-wit:—In the case of County Ditch No. 22, $5,100; of said Ditch No. 23, $4,000; said Ditch No. 24, $5,300; of said Ditch No. 25, $6,700; of said Ditch No. 26, $3,700; of said Ditch No. 28, $2,700; of said Ditch No. 30, $1,700, and this County Board has heretofore duly determined to issue the bonds of this County of Red Lake for the purpose of paying the expense aforesaid for each of said ditches in said amounts respectively;

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved, by the County Board of the County of Red Lake, that the sum of Twenty-nine Thousand Two Hundred ($29,200) Dollars is necessary to defray the expenses incurred and to be incurred in locating, constructing and establishing said County Ditches within and for said County.

Resolved Further, that the negotiable coupon bonds of this County of Red Lake be issued for said purposes in the aggregate amount of Twenty-nine Thousand Two Hundred ($29,200) Dollars, said bonds to be thirty-seven (37) in number, numbered from 1 to 37, both inclusive, bonds numbered 6 and 17 to be of the denomination of $100.00 each; bonds Nos. 16, 25, 30, 34, and 37 to be of the denomination of $200.00 each, bonds Nos. 24, 29, 33, and 36 of the denomination of $500.00 each and all the others of the denomination of $1,000 each, all of said bonds to bear date July 1st, 1909, and due and payable July 1st, 1919, with interest at the rate of five and one-half (5 1-2) per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of January and July in each year, both principal and interest payable at the office of The Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, in the City of Minneapolis, Minnesota, said bonds so to be issued to be for the said County Drainage Ditches as follows:—

For County Ditch No. 22 bonds Nos. 1 to 6 inclusive aggregating $5,100.

For County Ditch No. 23, bonds Nos. 7 to 10 inclusive, aggregating $4,000.

For County Ditch No. 24, bonds No. 11 to 17 inclusive, aggregating $5,300.

For County Ditch No. 28, bonds Nos. 18 to 25 inclusive, aggregating $6,700.

For County Ditch No. 26, bonds Nos. 26 to 30 inclusive, aggregating $3,700.

For County Ditch No. 28 bonds Nos. 31 to 34 inclusive, aggregating $2,700.

For County Ditch No. 30, bonds Nos. 35, 36, and 37, aggregating $1,700.

Resolved Further, that said bonds and coupons attached thereto shall be substantially in the following form, with the necessary variations as to number and amounts thereof.

SITE PURCHASED; PLANS ACCEPTED

New Court House Will be Located on the Hill Near Jail

A Beautiful Site—Will be Beautiful Building too.

Red Lake county is to have a fine new court house and work is to be commenced in a very short time. The commissioners, in session Tuesday evening, purchased a site for the building. They also accepted the plans of Architect Fremont D. Orff of Minneapolis.

A call for bids for construction work is published in this issue. The bids will be opened and contract awarded August 14, and shortly after that date work will be commenced on a magnificent new building.

This will be glad news to many people in RedLake county, not only in this city, but in all parts of the county. People have become disgusted with the senseless county seat squabble and urged the county commissioners to act.

Lots 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of Church Block were purchased. For these the county gave the site of the old court house and $4000. The county also owns lots 13 and 14 of the same block, on which the county jail is located. On the land purchased there are two houses. One of these will be made a sheriff's residence and the other will be sold. The lots were purchased of Theo. Garceau, Mrs. J. J. Doe, Duluth Brewing company and Mrs. Adeline Bray.

The new court house site is the high piece of ground east of the county jail. It is a beautiful site. Architect Orff when he looked over the ground said that with the one exception of Decora, Iowa, it was the most beautiful site for a cuort house that he had ever seen.

Even CommissionersAubol and Johnson, who voted against buying the land, said "fine, couldn't be better" when they saw the ground. The Gazette will in a later issue give more details of the plans and description and cut of the building.

Local News.

Miss Mary Hogan and Vivian Swanson and James Burrows of Fertile spent Sunday at the Sieff home.

Miss Elsie Bourdon, and her mama, Mrs. R. H. Bourdon, and Mrs. J. L. Tracy visited with friends at St. Hilaire Wednesday.

The band concert Tuesday evening delighted a large number of people who were on the street to enjoy the music. The boys gave a fine program and there is marked improvement in their work.

E. G. Buse and Clem Brunelle expect to leave Friday for Seattle. They will attend the fair and if successful in the drawings will file on homesteads on the government lands being opened up.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Perrault left Saturday night for a month's trip through eastern Canada. Miss Engenia Perrault accompanied them as far as Duluth, where she will visit during her parents' absence.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Koke of Eugene, Oregon, are guests at the Jos. Sally home. Mr. Koke, who is a brother of Mrs. Salley, formerly resided in Red Lake Falls and was at one time foreman of the Gazette print shop and has many friends here who are glad to meet him again.

Attorney Thos. Germo left yesterday afternoon on a trip to the Pacific coast. He will visit the exposition at Seattle. Later he will go to Portland and Koos Bay, Oregon, and other cities. If favorably impressed with what he sees and learns he may decide to locate in the west.

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Salley were at Twin Valley the first of the week, called there because of the death of their sister-in-law, Mrs. Bernard Koke. Mrs. Koke's death occurred in Montana, but the remains were shipped east and the funeral was held at Twin Valley Tuesday. Bernard Koke, husband of the deceased, formerly resided in Red Lake Falls and has many friends here who will be sorry to learn of his bereavement.

WILL JONHSON BE CANDIDATE AGAIN

Paul Pry Sees Reasons That May Induce Governor to Accept Nomination

Fonrth Election Would Add Strength to Presidential Campaign.

St. Paul, July 19th.

There are those who find it difficult to account for the rapid and phenomenal rise of Judge Elliot who has recently been appointed by President Taft to a Philippine judgeship. Judge Elliot is still a young man; yet, apparently without either strong political backing or an extended acquaintance throughout the state, and in the absence of any marked achievement at the bar he has been able to grasp every honor most sought by members of his profession. He had scarcely more than entered upon the practice of law when at 29, an age when most lawyers were still struggling to build up the beginning of a practice, and many had still their first brief to write he was elected judge of the municipal court of Minneapolis. From the municipal bench he went after four years' service to the district bench, on which he sat eleven years. On October 1, 1905, at the age of forty-four years, he was elected associate justice of the supreme court of Minnesota and now at the age of 48 he is made chief justice of the supreme court of the Philippines, a position which at an earlier date he had declined. In the meantime, and while still occupying his judicial position, he has been a professor of corporation and international law at the Universiy of Minnesota, and has found time to write a number of law books of which several editions have already been printed. Mr. Elliott is said to owe his preferment to the Philippine bench to the fact that he was a classmate of Presideent Taft, and it is popularly assumed that both studied at Yale. This is evidently an error, for Judge Elliot is not a Yale gradnate. He received his early education at Marietta college, Marietta, Ohio, and if he studied with Taft it must have been there. Elliot got his degree of L. L. B. and L. L. D. at Marietta, and his degree of Ph. D. from the University of Minnesota. He sems to owe his succes to the recognition of his merit at the bar, and by those accustomed to measure legal achievements along lines which do not ordinarily appeal to the public.

Suing a Judge.

Eminent, however as a jurist and anthor as Judge Elliot may be, a recent incident has cast a reflection on his capacity as a business man. On the eve of his departure for the Philippines he permitted himself to be sued, a judgment issued and an execution enforced against him for a claim of less than $200 for lumber furnished him. To make matters worse, and as indicating his lack of business sense, it is alleged that he had previously given a check for the amount which was returned to the company from the bank with the notation "no funds." Considering the salary he had been drawing all these years, it does not seem there can be any reasonable excuse for his permitting himself to be emarrassed in that way, and subjecting not only himself, but the bench and to some extent the state and the President who appointed him, to reproach.

Crimes' Real Victims.

No one can visit the governor's office on days when the pardoning board is in session without being impressed by the fact that the innocent and helpless are the principal sufferers when men transgress the law. It is not the punishment which those convicted of crime must submit to which most appeals to the men in authority. It is the sorrow, the anguish, the sufferings and the privations which those dependant upon prisoners, or those to whom they are dear, must endure, and the disgrace brought down upon the heads of women and children who have done no wrong. It is the appeals of weeping wives and sisters, and of gray-haired parents borne down by their weight of shame which wrings the heart of the pardoning board. It is the sight of the destitute and worse than fatherless children clinging to their mothers' skirts. It is the devotion of their victims to the men who have brought privation and disgrace upon once happy homes that touches them. The way of the transgressor may be hard, indeed must be made so; but those are far, far more entitled to sympathy who, being innocent, are made vicarious sufferers. These on pardon days crowd the governor's reception room and their appeals are none the less heartrending or none the less calculated to touch the stoniest hearts, because in the vast majority of cases, they are made on behalf of the undeserving.

Politicians Without Backers.

Nothing could be more significant than the attitude of Republican papers, both in city and country, toward the Republican party and Republican leaders. Open and unmeasured denunciation is visited upon national legislation similar in principals and character to that which ten years ago was hailed as the salvation of the nation, and the men responsible for it are held up to public obloquy. The same papers which then conceived it to be their duty to stand by the party right or wrong, appear now to only seek occasion to roast them. Similarily and only to a less extent, is criticism visited upon the Republican state officials and local Republican leaders. Republican members in the house chosen in caucus as leaders are openly lampooned, and the more important measures for which they were responsible, notably the "pork barrel" bill, denounced as a triumph of log-rolling and as inherently vicious by the daily press of St. Paul, Minneapolis and Duluth. For neither characteristic Republican policies nor present Republican effort are there any apologists in the daily press of the larger cities, and that paper in the country which has most fault to find with present Republican leadership appears to have the greatest success in appealing to public confidence.

Some Political Speculation.

Under such circumstances it is small wonder that Republicans hungry for office and its emoluments should regard the possibliity of Governor Johnson again becoming a candidate for governor with consternation. What Governor Johnson really will do no man can tell. He himself and the Kitchen Cabinet, doubtless at this instance, profess to regard such a contingency impossible, but both Governor Johnson and Kitchen Cabinet have before been compelled to bow to an insistent public demand and it may be that again, with all the will in the world, they may not be able to resist it. There are many things which might induce the governor to alter his professed determination. It is idle not to recognize that he has other ambitions, and how could they better be served than by conferring upon him the unique distinction of being successful candidate for governor for a fourth term? If he were again a candidate it would be to recognize at once that it would be to give vantage ground for a contest for the presidential nomination. To add to his other sources of strength state pride would be enlisted, and in view of the possibility of obtaining so high an honor for a native Minnesotan as the elevation to the presidency, even those who have criticised some of the governor's executive acts would be inclined to forego their opposition. In view of such possible elevation, the advantage to Minnesota of having in the chief executive officer of the nation a man who knows so well its needs and claims on the national treasury for the conservation of its resources and developments of its waterways, and who could be depended upon when a real revision of tariff is next undertaken, to see that Minnesota's interests would be amply proteted, would add greatly to his strength in the preliminary contest for the governorship.

The Governor's Strength.

Nor would the issue of such a contest be in any serious doubt. Assuming for the sake of argument which few Republicns would be bold enough under such circumstances to claim, that the First and Second cangressional districts could be carried by a Republican candidate against Governor Johnson, there can be no manner of doubt that he would sweep the Third, which has already given evidence of a desire to return to its old time allegiance. Governor Johnson would unquestionably carry the Fourth and Fifth districts by his old time majorities; he would carry the Sixth. In the Eighth he would have no serious opposition and would sweep it by a majority hitherto unpralleled in the state. He would carry the Ninth. The Seventh would probably give a small majority against him. A careful review of the field by any well informed observer will, I am convinced, confirm this forecast. Under the cicumstances there would be every incentive a man could have to again place himself in the hands of his friends.

A Disrupted Party.

The Republican disorganization must be taken into consideration. Any one will tell you that the Republican party is split up into factions. There is the Dunn faction and the Collins faction, the Jacobson faction and the Heatwole faction, a faction which looks

BARN BURNED; RAILROAD WRECKS

Big Barn on Miller Farm Struck by Ligtning Sunday Night.

Wrecks and Washouts on N. P., G. N. and the Soo Railroads.

During a heavy electrical storm Sunday night lightning struck the large barn on the Sam Miller farm, three miles east of town and the building was burned to the ground. The barn was a large one and nearly new. Thirty five tons of hay and some pigs and chickens were also burned. Mr. Miller estimates his loss at from $1000 to $1200 and the property was insured for $600.

During the same storm lightning struck the Robillard house in this city but did not do much damage.

There was a heavy storm in eastern Polk and Norman counties. Some track washed out east of Fosston caused the Great Northern passenger train No. 86, Crookston to Douluth, to go into the ditch. Every car left the track, but no one was killed and only a few passengers received slight injuries. The storm caused a collision of two freight trains at Melville. Two people were killed.

There was a washout of forty miles of track on the Soo and Soo trains have been using the Great Northern track from Detroit to Erskine.

Owing to the delay of trafic on the Great Northern, Duluth papers three days old arrived today.

Summer Training School.

The teachers' training school for Red Lake county began July 5th with an enrollment of sixty-four. This large attendance on the national holiday, surely shows an enthusiasic spirit on the part of the teachers and prospective teachers. The attendance has since increased to ninety-five and it is predicted that there will be over a hundred before the end of the term.

On account of the resignation of E. T. Carroll and Frank M. Burrall, Miss Eleanore Donaldson of Dundas has assumed the conductorship and the other instructors are Miss Hawk, Amer Matheson of Thief River Falls, and Nellie D. Erickson of Fergus Falls.

There is but one session during the day beginniug at 8:00 a. m., and closing at 12:30 p. m. The program has been so arranged that students are doing double work in some subjects and can also take such others as they most need. A "model" class is being conducted by Miss Erickson. In this connection students can actually observe the different methods of teaching beginners—reading, number work, etc.

To learn how these methods are developed and to discuss the principles underlying them is the paramount importance of the work.

During the first week Supt. R. E. Denfield of Duluth, state inspector of Teachers' Training Schools visited and expressed much satisfaction at the excellent work that the school is doing. He delivered an instructive and powerful address which bore directly on the life and calling of a teacher. After speaking about some of the best authors and books he discussed the meaning of a thoro education and considered the education for the farm and country life of the greatesti mportance.

Last Wednesday, Supt. Anderson gave a talk at intermission, on "The Requirements of a Teacher."

Saturday Miss Donaldson gave an interesting presentation of her experiences as teacher in the Philippine Islands. She spoke of the organization of American schools, the disadvantages, obstacles and difficulties which American teachers encounter but must overcome, the school houses, the children in school and their aptness and eagerness to learn English. Miss Donaldson's natural and vivid description of the life in these islands held the students absorbed with interest and all seemed loathe to let her discontinue her discussion and go to their classrooms.

Yesterday Miss Hawk gave an informal but impressive talk about Boston and its vicinity, especially the homes of our greatest American authors, such as Hawthorne, Emerson, Thoreau, L. M. Alcott and Longfellow. Miss Hawk has traveled in the east and spoke directly from her own experience in seeing the homes of these great persons.

During the remainder of the term Mr. Matheson will speak about the life and career of the great Norwegian author Ibsen and Supt. L. P. Harrington will be here to lecture upon argichlture and the importance of this instriction in our schools.

Two New Elevators.

The red Lake Falls Milling company is building two new elevators on this line of road one at Roseau and one at Badger. H.H. Hennemuth and Val Detling have contructs for building the houses and they and crews of men are already at work on the buildings.

Guy Aubol of Crookston, deputy revenue collector, was in town today.

CHARTER COMMISSION WILL MEET TUESDAY

To Frame Amendments to the City Charter to be Submitted to Voters.

Amendments Will Be Voted Upon at Next City Election.

A meeting of the charter commission recently appointed by Judge Watts will be held at the city hall at one o'clock, next Tuesday afternoon, July 27. The commission will draft proposed amendments to the city charter to be voted upon at the time of the regular city election next fall. The following citiens will serve on the commission: John A. Duffy, A. P. Toupin, Chas. E. Boughton, Theo. LaBissoniere, H. H. Zaiser, Frank E. Hunt, Chas. N. Bourdon, Joseph Helm, Fred Borchers, T. A. Crompe, Arthur Lizee, Henry Hennemuth, Simon Paul, Joseph Remick.

Red Lake County Fair.

The Red Lake county fair will be held at Thief River Falls, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Aug. 4, 5, and 6. Besides the usual exhibits of agricultural products and live stock, a fine race program and some show attractions are advertsed, and the managers promise the best fair in the history of the fair association. The county commissioners last weeek appropriated $250 to help make the fair a success.

After Bad Eggs.

Food Inspector Heiberg was here Tuesday and after visiting all of the stores he visited farmers' wagons. The principal object of his visit seemed to be to find eggs—bad eggs. Forunately for the vendors of the product of the poultry yard the inspector found only nice fresh eggs. The purpose of the pure food department is to see that only pure foods are put on the market and the officials are just as determined that products of the farms shall be fresh and clean as that other food stuffs shall be pure. Three Stearns county farmers were heavily fined the other day by Mr. Heiberg for bringing bad eggs to market. It will pay farmers to inspect their products before state officials do the inspecting.

New Citizens.

Judge Watts held a special term of court in Red Lake Falls last week at which time thirteen residents of the county became citizens of the Untied States.

Following are the names, native countries and present places of residence of those to whom papers were granted: Adolf T. Barstadd, Norway, Smiley; John O. Larson, Norway, Hickory; Peter Refsnes, Norway, Goodridge; Oskar Ostrem, Norway, Silverton; Josef K. Eneba, Norway, Star; Ole A. Dahl, Norway, Kratka; Tobias Erdum, Norway, Kratka; Torkel L. Chalard, Norway, Silverton; Aslay Thoreson, Norway, Goodrdge; Xavier Clement, Canada, Louisville; Herman Moline, Sweden, Goodridge; Hjalmar H. Fredrikson, Sweden, Gevais; Joseph Novak, Bohemia, Star.

TO MAKE WOMEN GARDENERS.

Also to Teach Nature Studies—Mission of an English College.

Swanley Horticultural college's work is to make women into gardeners, whether as growers for market or in private grounds, or as teachers of others. The course is specially designed to be of use to those who have land of their own and those who look forward to a colonial life.

The college was founded nearly twenty years ago and now possesses forty-three acres of land, two of which are devoted to flowers, twelve to kitchen and market gardening and seventeen to fruit. There is a long range of glass houses, an apiary, a dairy and poultry run. The report for the last year refers to the growing demand for teachers of nature study, in view of which the college has established a course in natural history. There were over sixty students at the college during 1907.

As a testimony to the practical nature of the instruction at Swanley it may be pointed out that during 1907 twelve students received appointments as teachers, three as head gardeners, four as gardeners and undergardeners, two as market gardeners, while five obtained positions in jobbing or temporary work. One student went out to teach nature study in British Columbia.

IMITATING RUSSIAN SABLE.

Less Expensive Furs Are Pointed to Produce Substitutes.

Russian sable and silver fox being beyond the acquisition of any but the richest women, furriers have gone to extraordinary pains to produce substitutes in what are known to the trade as pointed sable and royal Sitka fox.

The pointing is a delicate and tedious piece of work. According to Fur News, only the softest and whitest of badger hair can be used, and the hairs are taken either singly or doubly, the ends touched with the requisite amount of the specially prepared blue and carefully inserted in the skin.

Properly to point a royal Sitka fox two days labor of an expert is required. The white hairs must not only be carefully inserted in the skin, but must give the character and show the design noticeable in the natural skins.

Why His Love Turned.

Rev. Dr. R. S. McArthur of Calvary Baptist church said at a dinner in New York, apropos of international marriages:

"Some of these marriages are from every point of view desirable. Some again are—but a dialogue will illustrate my meaning.

"'Oh, Helen,' cried a girl worth $18,000,000, 'do you think the duke is sincere?'

"'Sincere?' was the reply. 'Why, of course, he's sincere. He hasn't a dollar to his name.'"

Dr. McArthur paused.

"Or this," he added.

"A young marquis rushed upon his American financee and shouted bitterly:

"'Cruel, heartless girl! You swore you loved me, and now I discover that your father is a bankrupt!'"

Curtain of Wine Corks.

One of the most fashionable clubs in Berlin has in its supper room a curtain made of champagne corks. Four thousand corks with their silver or gilt covering have been threaded on thin rods decorated with colored ribbons and embellished with small copper balls. It gives a very decorative effect at a distance and has the appearance of a Japanese panel.

Each cork is from a bottle of champagne costing about a sovereign, so that the curtain represents an expenditure of something like £4,000.

A Consistent Cutter.

"Who on earth cut your hair?" gasped Mrs. Gunson as her husband arrived home.

"A locksmith, my dear," replied Mr. Gunson. "Did you think a barber had anything to do with it?"

"Indeed I did not," retorted Mrs. Gunson. "Judging from the shaggy way it has been trimmed I thought perhaps it was done by a hackman."

Cedar Are Dying.

Among other trees that are said to be coming to an end are the cedars on Rhode Island. These picturesque trees are dying fast, and no one seems to know the reason. Nor does any one know how the cedar of Lebanon first found itself implanted in the soil of that little state.

"Manana" Land.

Valparaiso is only 5,000 miles from New York, but it requires from seventy to eighty days to get a reply to a business letter.

Grand Forks—Governor Burke announced, while in this city, that as soon as the report of expert accountants has been made known relative to affairs at the state penitentiary, those guilty of any defalcations would be prosecuted without delay.

PORK BARREL DECIDED ILLEGAL

SUPREME COURT NOW SUSTAINS JUDGE BRILL IN BRIDGE FUND SUIT.

MANY COUNTIES CONTRACTING

For Bridges and Roads Expecting to Receive Share of State Money in August and Will Now Have to Find Funds Elsewhere.

St. Paul.—The "pork barrel" appropriation of $600,000 for roads and bridges was knocked out by the state supreme court in an unanimous decision written by Chief Justice Chas. M. Start. The decision of Judge H. R. Brill, of Ramsey county, is affirmed and the law is held to be unconstitutional.

Many counties in Minnesota have already begun bridge work in anticipation of getting the state money Aug. 1. Some provision will have to be made for payment on these contracts by local authorities.

Chief Justice Start's opinion finds that the mandamus action brought by Senator L. O. Cooke can be maintained against State Auditor Iverson, in spite of the rule that the state cannot be sued, because courts have always held that mandamus can be brought against an official to restrain him from a ministerial act.

Attorney General Not Sustained.

He also holds that the appropriation is illegal, when taken from the state revenue fund, because of the constitutional provision holding that the state cannot engage in works of internal improvement. The claim of the attorney general that "internal improvement" does not apply to roads is rejected.

Under this decision the only aid the state can give to road making is through the state road and bridge fund, which is expressly provided for by the constitution.

Old Fund Also Affected.

The decision not only holds up $600,000 appropriated for the next two years, but there is a balance of $99,622.30 from the $400,000 appropriated in 1907, which has not been expended and has been in the treasury to the credit of the counties. That also will be wiped out. Since the Cooke suit was brought the state auditor has declined to pay any warrants under the 1907 appropriation, and several small ones presented recently have been held up. It is thought that most of the work covered by the $99,622.30 balance has not been performed, but considerable has already been started, counting on the new appropriation.

Fear was expressed at the capitol today that suits might be brought by some of the state senators against the appropriation for the state fair grandstand, claiming it is a work of internal improvement, and that some question might be raised against the state prison twine plant and harvester plant, which are operated for profit, and might be claimed to be "internal improvement."

COUNTIES TO GET FREE ROCK.

State Ready to Furnish Crushed Granite Where Needed.

The first of the crushed granite which the state is grinding at the St. Cloud reformatory to be furnished free to counties that want to use it on the roads is about ready for shipment and from now on about eight or ten cars a week will go out from the crushing plant. The Great Northern and Northern Pacific, who offered to do the hauling free, will begin carrying the rock in a day or two.

Some of the first rock goes to Princeton, a large quantity will be hauled by team from the crusher to adjoining roads, and Sherburne and Anoka counties wil come next on the list.

The North-Western line has promised to haul the rock free 75 miles on any of its lines from the Twin Cities. George W. Cooley, engineer of the state highway commission, wrote to some of the other roads, asking them to do the same. The Minneapolis and St. Louis road answered that the anti-pass law of 1907 prevented them from carrying anything free either for individuals or for the state, and though they were much interested in the cause of good roads, they were sorry that the law did not permit them to grant the request.

Mr. Cooley referred this matter to some of the other roads that had promised to haul rock free, and they answered that in their interpretation of the ant-pass law it would not interfere with their hauling the rock free. The report that the attorney general gave Mr. Cooley an opinion stating that the anti-pass law prevented the hauling of rock free is denied by both Mr. Simpson and Mr. Cooley. Mr. Simpson says that no opinion has been asked from him on the subject.

Butter Board Sales Popular.

Albert Lea.—The work of the Albert Lea butter board is attracting attention in all the butter markets of the country. The sales are held every Tuesday afternoon, and this week nearly 1,500 tubs were sold at 25½, 26 and 26¼ cents a pound f. o. b. creamery shipping station, the freight and commission eliminated. Nearly forty creameries from Minnesota and one in Iowa had butter listed. The indications are that the next sale will see more butter than ever listed.

MINNEAPOLIS LAW VALID.

Dairymen Required to Give Tuberculin Test to Cattle.

Minneapolis.—The tuberculin germ test for cattle and the Minneapolis milk ordinance prohibiting the sale of all milk not taken from officially inspected cattle is held valid by Judge Frank C. Brooks of the district court, who denied the application of several milk dealers for an injunction restraining the city and Dr. P. M. Hall, health commissioner, from destroying their milk.

This is the first decision upholding an ordinance requiring milk to come from herds subjected to the tuberculin test ever rendered either in Minneapolis or elsewhere, and is a decisive victory for the health department.

The case has been in court since Jan. 26. The Seven Corners Milk company, the Bloomington Milk company, the Flour City Creamery company and the Star creamery filed a joint application for an injunction. The health department had confiscated quantities of milk belonging to these concerns because the milk came from uninspected herds.

The plaintiffs argued that the pasteurization killed the milk germs of tuberculosis and that inspection was not necessary. The court held, however, that as no method was universally used or approved for killing the bacilli, the health department had a right to demand inspection of all herds.

Judge Brooks' conclusion of law is as follows: "The court finds that the plaintiffs or any of them are not entitled to an injunction or any relief whatever in this action, and that the defendants are entitled to have judgment for the dismissal of said action and for their costs and disbursements." A stay of forty days is granted for appeal.

The Minneapolis ordinance was passed two years ago and is the most rigid in the country. It requires the tuberculin test for every herd every year.

OOMMISSION INVESTIGATES.

County Officers at Bemidji Are Under Fire of Probe Commission.

Bemidji.—The hearing on charges against Auditor Wilmann and County Commissioners Wes Wright, F. O. Sibley and A. W. Danaher has begun. The state is represented by Lyndon A. Smith, assisinat attorney general, and M. F. Kane, deputy public examiner, with M. E. Ryan as referee and special commissioner, and J. J. Cameron, stenographer. E. E. McDonald appeared as attorney for Wilmann and Danaher, and P. J. Russell represented Wes Wright. F. O. Sibley did not appear.

The charge against Wilmann is for non-feasance, and that against the county commissioners for non-feasance and malfeasance.

The state moved that the case of the county auditor be taken up first. Mr. McDonald asked for more time and presented an affidavit from Wilmann to the effect that his wife was seriously ill with tuberculosis and expected to die at any moment; that he was not served with a copy of the charges until yesterday and that more time was absolutely necessary.

Mr. Smith said the proceedings differed from the usual method in that the charges were preferred according to statute and accused the county auditor of non-feasance, or of things left undone. Mr. Smith said he represented Governor Johnson to see that nothing but legal evidence was accepted, and that the law was followed. Dr. E. H. Smith testified that Mrs. Wilmann was very ill and might die at any time.

Mr. Ryan adjourned until July 20, because of the serious illness of Mrs. Wilmann.

A. W. Danaher submitted an affidavit to the effect that he expected to prove that the excess expense of the county, which is over the 5 mill levy, was necessary to maintain the county government.

STATE BANK RESOURCES GROW.

Thirteen Months Show Increase of $5,000,000.

Bank resources of the state banks of Minnesota have increased from $89,027,899 on May 6, 1908, to $94,300,853 on June 23, 1909, according to the summary of the statements submitted to Public Examiner Anton Schaefer by the banks for those dates. There were 627 banks reporting as against 600 a year ago. On June 30, 1899, there were only 170 state banks with resources of $36,615,570.

In the tabular statement given out by the public examiner, the items of capital stock, surplus and undivided profits show a decrease during the 13 months. The deposits subject to check were also slightly less but the time certificates increased from $41,352,151 to $47,504,087, which accounts for practically the whole increase in the liabilities.

Under the heading of resources the loans and discounts have increased from $66,078,033 to $71,421,935, the securities from $1,313,171 to $1,683,425, the value of banking houses and fixtures from $3,032,639 to $3,215,268, while the item of cash on hand has decreased from $4,375,088 to $3,691,572.

Rescues and Drowns.

Spooner, Minn.—Alex. Collier, employed at the Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Company, was accidentally drowned while while trying to jump on beard the steamer Itasca, which was at the mouth of Rapid River.

Collier had previously left the boat to assist a man who had stepped off the dock. Collier was twenty-five years old and a native of England. A cablegram was sent to his mother in England.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Park Rapids.—The dates for the Hubbard county fair have been fixed for Sept. 15, 16 and 17.

Barnesville.—The officials of the Northern Pacific railway have sent out 300 detectives along the main line and many men are being suspended and discharged for drinking.

Pipestone.—The pipestone summer training school for teachers has opened and will continue four weeks in charge of Professor Torrens, of Luverne. Over a hundred teachers are enrolled.

Stillwater.—Employment has been found for Walter Bourne, former deputy auditor of Ramsey county, who was paroled from state's prison this week. He will be kept at work on the books in the warden's office. He is an expert accountant and is familiar with the prison's manufacturing business.

Stillwater.—The petition for the formation of the village of St. Paul Park will be rejected by the county board for the reason that the remaining population left for the town of Newport will not reach the limit fixed by law. It is said the limits of the proposed village will be changed and a new petition presented.

Brainerd.—Coroner T. W. Gibson was summoned to Deerwood to view the remains of the late Herman Hagstrom, who was drowned in Serpent lake. Hagstrom was out fishing about twenty rods off Patterson's point when the boat overturned. The remains were found by Oscar Carlson and William Elmore with grappling irons.

Montgomery.—John Kukacka, aged 16, son of a wealthy farmer living one-half mile east of this city, became suddenly deranged, due to the excessive heat the past few days, and killed himself with a shot gun. The gun with which the deed was committed was hanging to the window curtain in his room, fastened by the trigger.

Worthington.—Nobles county teachers' training school opened here with a large enrollment. The course will last six weeks, and is under the direction of County Superintendent L. W. Abbott, with the following faculty: J. C. Marshall of Princeton, conductor; Julia Hyland of Worthington, Charlotte Raymond of Canby and Carrier Sevatson of Minneapolis.

Pipestone.—Rev. Rett E. Olmstead, a bird student of Brookings, S. D., has just returned from a two weeks' trip to Bear Lake, Minn., across the line in Murray county. On a former visit to the place Mr. Olmstead found sixty-three distinct species of birds and on his present two weeks' visit in addition to identifying again the sixty-three species, he added twenty-five to the list.

St. Paul.—Andrew Carnegie has announced to the trustees of Macalester college a gift of $20,000 more in addition to the $80,000 he has already pledged for the construction of the new science hall. This last gift makes the total in excess of $450,000, of which $250,000 has been raised in the last 14 months. Of this $450,000, $300,000 has come from Minnesota, mostly from the Twin Cities. The trustees themselves pledged $100,000.

Austin.—The enrollment for the Mower county teachers' training school has reached the 176 mark, which was the total enrollment last year. Many more students are expected to enter and there is but little doubt that 200 hundred teachers will have been in attendance before the close of the month. Over 80 per cent of those attending are from Mower and Freeborn counties, which shows the keen interest the teachers in this section are taking in the work.

Stillwater.—The output of the state prison harvester factory at Stillwater is small this year, but there is a big demand for the machines, and twenty-five mowers made at the prison have already been shipped direct to buyers. The prison workmen are packing twenty-five binders to be shipped in time for the harvest season. The machines are being sold at the regular market price, and, counting the initial outlay for machinery, they have cost the state a good deal more, but the intention is to run the plant during the next year and turn out a large supply for the 1910 season.

Brainerd.—Two iron prospecting drills are being set up today inside the city limits of Brainerd. They are located on the Rosko property, about half a mile south of the business section, and if the results justify the predictions of the knowing ones, iron will be mined in this city in the next year or so. It is rumored that a syndicate of Brainerd men refused $250,000 for a single quarter section of land a few miles out, and that they have leased it on advantageous terms. The drills on the Rosko property are being put in by Cole & McDonald, presumably for the Republic Iron Company.

Swede Prairie.—Eli H. Olson, of Swede Prairie, was killed by a cow, which became unruly and turned around in the stall in such a way as to crush Mr. Olson, causing internal injuries from which he died. He was an early settler here.

Park Rapids.—The contract for putting in the extensions to the waterworks system and laying the mains across the river has been secured by W. I. Gray & Co., of Minneapolis. The extensions must be completed and a new and larger pump put in before freezing weather.

DENMARK.

Copenhagen, June 21.—The government expedition under Captain Eimar Mikkelsen, the Arctic explorer, sailed yesterday aboard the Danish steamer Alabama for Greenland to search for the bodies of the Ericson party.

By special permission a thirty-foot American flag is floating from the exposition flagstaff, there being only one Danish flag on the grounds. Firecrackers were sporadically discharged in the streets today, anticipating an extensive pyrotechnic display in Aarhus Bay tomorrow night. A resolution signed by 10,000 Americans of Danish descent, expressing their love for the mother country and their pride in American citizenship, which will be read at the official ceremony, is considered next in importance to President Taft's message, which also will be read.

The following dispatch from Copenhagen gives an account of the Fourth of July celebration at the Aarhus exposition, about which so much was written: Aarhus was a mass of Danish and American colors in honor of the celebration of Independence day tomorrow under the auspices of Danish Americans. Even the poorest of the houses are covered with bunting. The Danish-American headquarters, which are elaborately decorated with American flags, were opened this morning and thronged with visitors. Already 3,000 persons have registered from all parts of the United States. The leading Danish weeklies issued special American editions today and the daily newspapers will print American extras tomorrow.

SWEDEN.

At a meeting held in Stockholm recently, it was decided to erect a new people's high school, to care for the middle and southern section of the city.

Owing to the high prices of meats in Stockholm, there is at present a considerable import from New Zealand of fresh meats. It is brought in each Wednesday by refrigerator steamers, arriving via London and Goteborg, the imports being six weeks in transit.

The social-democratic party has shrunk the past year by 16,191 members, according to the yearly report just issued. The falling off is most marked in the larger industrial districts such as Stockholm, Goteborg and Malmo. The trouble is due to internal dissensions caused by a difference of opinions as to tactics.

A bust of the noted churchman and poet, J. O. Wallin, is to be erected in Falun. A total of 6,000 crowns has already been raised and another 4,000 is desired to provide the necessary funds. The bust will be erected on the square in front of the school house. A meeting of the teachers of the country is to be held in Falun later in the summer, and it is expected that the balance of the money needed will be raised at that time.

At the luncheon given for the notables, after the unveiling of the Engelbrekt memorial stone, Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf refused the wines offered, asking instead plain fresh water as his drink. His consort, Crown Princess Margareta, also holds the same position in the matter of personal abstinence, and the attitude of the couple will be a powerful influence for good along the line of temperance.

At last the long contemplated visit of the Czar to Sweden is an accomplished fact. The following dispatch was sent out from St. Petersburg the first of the week: "Emperor Nicholas left Russian waters today on the imperial yacht Standart for Stockholm on the first of the three foreign visits he will pay this summer. The yacht, escorted by a squadron of torpedo boats, sailed early this morning from Pitkipas bay and is due to arrive at Stockholm at midday of June 26th. Foreign Minister Iswolsky and the members of his majesty's suite are going along on board the yacht Polar Star. This trip to Sweden is a return of the visit of King Gustave to St. Petersburg at the time of the marriage of Prince Wilhelm of Sweden. No high politics will be discussed at Stockholm, and the fact that Emperor Nicholas is going almost directly from Sweden to Poltva, to be present at the dedication of a monument to the Russo-Swedish dead who fell in the battle of Poltva 200 years ago, is taken as evidence that the ancient Russo-Swedish enmities have been completely blotted out."

The village of Kopparberg has decided to establish an electrical light and power plant, and has applied for the right to issue 40-year bonds to the value of 110,000 crowns to provide funds. It is thought that the department of the interior will grant the request as the outlook indicates a good investment. The electrical resources of the country are being rapidly developed and gives promise of adding much to the manufacturing facilities.

P. G. Braathen has made the handsome donation of 10,000 crowns to the Sundvall school to be used in the encouragement of athletics.

Sweden has now established its first military balloon park, at an expense of upwards of 90,000 crowns. Hitherto what balloons the army has experimented with have been cared for at one or another of the army barracks. Now a complete outfit of gas wagons, material wagons, cable and pack wagons have been ordered from Augsburg, and the park will be fitted out especially for the use of the aeronautical department of the army.

The Art and Industrial Exposition at Stockholm is now open, but as with all other expositions, was far from ready when the opening day arrived. The location of the White City, as the group of buildings are called, is ideal, on one side being a waterway up to Stockholm, and on the other the zoological gardens, which at this time of the year are looking their best. The buildings are of a pleasing style of architecture, and the exhibits are varied and interesting. The attendance has been excellent since the opening, all things considered, but the greatest crowds will come later in the summer when the fair will be finished and offer the greatest attractions.

The Stockholm people have learned with regret that the invitation to Ex-Pres. Roosevelt to speak in Stockholm under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., has been regretfully declined. Pres. Roosevelt's letter to Envoy Lagercrantz, through whom the invitation was given, is as follows: "I am deeply touched by your letter. If I could accept another invitation to lecture during my visit to Europe, I would most gladly accept yours, but I have already had to decline invitations from Norway, Austria, Holland and Switzerland, as well as several invitations for places in Germany, France and England, where I can only give one address in each country. Allow me, dear Mr. Lagercrantz, to assure you that I have highly appreciated the opportunity to work together with you. Be so kind as to express my regrets to those through whom this invitation comes and assure them of my interest in their society, in whose aims I so warmly and fully sympathize. With highest respect, Theodore Roosevelt."

NORWAY.

Emil Stang, the statesman, celebrated his 75th birthday anniversary last month. He is one of Norway's most popular men and was the recipient of hearty congratulations from all parts of the country.

Prince Olaf, the son of King Haakon and Queen Maud, is now old enough to begin learning his A B Cs, and his mother will be his teacher, as she desires to direct his development herself, rather than leave it to others. Olaf is exceedingly popular in Norway, being a genuine boy in every respect.

Roald Amundsen, the explorer, has been spending some time at Bergen, studying oceanography at the biological stations in the fjords near that city. This illustrates Captain Amundsen's thoroughness and complete devotion to the purpose before him. If he reaches the north pole, his success will be due to careful planning and preparation, and not luck alone.

There was a lively athletic contest at Gjovik between societies from the cities of Hamar, Elverum, Lillehammer, Gjovik and Moelven. Hamar won first place, with Gjovik second. In the individual contests, Eunar Grinnerud, of Gjovik, was the victor. Over 800 people witnessed the contests, which showed great prowess, and in the evening a banquet was tendered the athletes at the Victoria hotel.

President Liestol celebrated his 70th birthday the middle of last month. He is the oldest of the members of the Storting, being a member already in 1874, and has consequently a long experience in politics. He has sat in the King's Cabinet, and been president of the Odelsting. He is not one of the politicians that have grown sour and fanatical under the strain of political conflicts. He is as genial and agreeable as ever. Besides being a good statesman, Liestol is well versed in literature both of his own and other countries, being inclined to poetry and art, and even "caricature art" himself. It is reported that he will not accept re-election in the fall. If so, with him will depart from the Storting one of its most sympathetic and interesting figures.

Last year Kaiser Wilhelm, of Germany, announced his intention of presenting a glass painting to the church of Aalesund, and they have now reached the city and will soon be put in place. There are three paintings in all, one large one, representing Jesus on the cross, and the smaller ones representing St. Olaf and the coats of arms of Aalesund and of the Kaiser. They are exceedingly beautiful and will surely be one of the interesting things pointed out to travelers that visit the city in the future.

The Divine Sara.

Many years have passed and many stories have been told since a critic of Le Figaro wrote: "Last evening an empty carriage drew up at the entrance of the Française. The door opened and Mme. Bernhardt got out." But the latest anecdote concerning her hails back before even that time.

One day, when Montigny, at the Gymnase, gave her a part which she did not like, she was away indignant and made up her mind to [illegible] this idea so seriously that she actually selected a shop which was to let on the Boulevard des Italiens, and which seemed admirably placed. She inspected the front of the shop and was quite pleased.

If she had not gone further the business might have been concluded. But before leaving she wished to see the room at the back of the shop and the basement. This was enough for [illegible] fully at first, to the stage and its brilliant footlights.

To Mark a Key.

When there are two or more keys on the key ring of approximate size and appearance draw a file over the stem of the one most in use. This makes a nick which easily distinguishes it from the others. The little [illegible] is better than a string or other [illegible]

Looking After Business.

"I like this flat very well," she said. "I will be very glad to rent it to you," replied the landlord.

"But we have two children!"

"They need not interfere with you and your husband having the flat. I have a house two blocks down the street which you can rent for the children and the nurse."

News for Dad.

Tommie—I see wood yields about one-fifth as much heat as coal.

Bobbie—I guess my dad don't know that.

"Why?"

"Because, when he 'warms' me he always uses a shingle."

Had a Good Start.

She—What an air of well-bred repose Cholly has!

He—Yes, but Cholly was naturally lazy to begin with.

BIG TRIP OF FAMOUS COOK

Late George W. Harvey Made 6,000 Mile Journey to Supervise Preparation of Single Course of Dinner.

George W. Harvey, the inventor of steamed oysters, and a famous restaurant keeper, who died in Washington the other day, was once the hero of a stunt that in some respects made the exploits of Lucullus and other noted gourmets of ancient Rome look cheap and commonplace. He made a 6,000 mile journey to cook or supervise the cooking of a single course of a dinner.

A wealthy Englishman, noted for his love of good living, while on a visit to Washington, was given a dinner at Harvey's, at which terrapin formed the piece de resistance. It was the first time the Englishman had encountered the famous Maryland delicacy, and it made an instantaneous and profound hit with him. He decided he would have to introduce the dish to his London friends, and at once entered into negotiation with Harvey to come to London and do the cooking.

Harvey named his price, and it was accepted without murmur, although it was a stiff one, as he was a portly man and did not like to travel. At the appointed time he engaged his passage for England, took a sufficient number of live terrapin along with him and sailed for the British metropolis. He supervised the preparation of the turtles in the kitchen of the Cecil hotel, saw that they were cooked and served properly, collected his $1,000 honorarium and his expenses and took the next steamer back to New York.

HARPOONING TICKLES STONE

Unrecognized, Missouri Senator Hears Self Called Old Fool by Mississippi Statesman.

Washington.—They are telling with great gusto this one on Senator Stone about the senate cloakrooms and corridors. In fact, the Missouri senator, who knows a good thing when he hears it, is telling it himself.

Senator Hernando de Soto Money of Mississippi was weary with the prolonged tariff rebate the other day and betook himself into the cloakroom to rest. He lay down on a couch and was in that position when some one came into the cloakroom and sat down near him. Senator Money, unfortunately, has trouble with his eyes and did not discern who his neighbor was.

"Who's talking?" asked the Mississippi senator. "Isn't that old fool, Bill Stone, through yet? What's the sense in his talking, anyhow? Nobody wants to listen to him. Somebody ought to go and tell him to quit."

To all this the listener assented. Presently Senator Money asked: "Who's this sitting here?"

"It's that old fool, Bill Stone," was the reply.

President Taft Dons Fancy Vest.

Washington.—For the first recorded time in his life the President has donned a fancy vest, as he calls it, or waistcoat, as it is sometimes called. It is as resplendent as one of Tim Woodruff's, and the president insists that it is much more entitled to attention.

Mr. Taft opened his coat out with much pride the other afternoon, displaying the waistcoat and asking if it didn't make any of Tim Woodruff's look like plain goods on the marked-down counter.

He pointed out that even if the spectacular features of the vest were not apparent he still had it on Mr. Woodruff, as Tim could display only a yard and a half, while the president could put three yards in view by placing his hands in his trousers' pockets.

The president's new waistcoat is a delicate gray background, on which are arranged patterns of black fleur de lys.

Many New Suits in House.

Washington.—Fifty-five new suits made their appearance in the house of representatives the other day. Most of them were light gray or cream colored, and they were worn with an air of intense complacency by the more fortunate representatives, and eyed with some degree of envy by those who were sweltering in winter raiment.

"The youth from Danville," Speaker Cannon, was the gayest of the party, with fawn-colored raiment of the most approved cut, in harmony with his new pearl gray hat and light necktie.

"How do these store clothes strike you?" he asked a group after the house had adjourned.

"They are all right," Mr. Vreeland answered, "but why did you pick out a suit exactly similar to Representative Malcon's?"

The speaker looked to where Mr. Macon was sitting and then rushed off to congratulate one of the first Democrats he ever saw with such excellent taste and discrimination.

The Greedy Postoffice.

Some idea of the quantity of material used by the postal service may be gained when it is stated that during last year the division furnished 925,000,000 yards of twine, 3,260,000 pens, 283,000 penholders, 650,000 pencils and 2,600,00 blank cards. To wrap the bundles 5,400,000 sheets of wrapping paper were used. Blank forms are furnished by the millions. Of the form, "Application for Domestic Money Order," which is seen in the lobby of every postoffice, there were 161,770,000 used last year, and during the same period 69,034 rubber stamps were manufactured and supplied to postoffices.

Teeth Were Against Him.

Senator Curtis of Kansas, has a dentist constituent who wished to enter the dental corps of the navy. The senator went to the navy department and secured a permit for the man to take the examination, which he did and came through with flying colors. Then he was called up for physical examination and was rejected because of the poor condition of his teeth.

Mrs. Alma V. Lafferty, the only woman member of the legislature in Colorado, has introduced 15 bills, all of which have passed the house.

FOR WARM WEATHER

NUMEROUS PRETTY THINGS IN TUB TEXTURES.

White Gowns, Both Plain Tailored and Elaborate, Are Much Worn—Smart Muslin Hats Also in Great Favor.

Midsummer materials show a decided preference for tub textures, and surely nothing is more comforting to the body in warm weather than a covering which can wash, and which soothes the eyes and nerves besides with immaculate whiteness or delicate flower tints.

White has its usual tremendous vogue and plain tailored gowns in this are countless in number and varied in style, but there is a special weakness for the fussier thing. Such materials as admit of pretty handwork—tucks, embroidery and dainty lace edgings—are much to the fore for out-of-town wear.

Everything now shown, in fact, suggests coolness, guimpes and sleeves being only an excuse for concealment with their unlined nets, tucked gauzes and open eyelet needlework; while coats have dropped sleeves entirely and headgear assumed something like a touch of reason.

Altogether, there is a rural flavor upon the town; flowered calico holds a choicer place than silk, as far as the counter goes, and in the milliner's window field posies and pale grasses vie with the farmer's fruits for notice, their simple prettiness quite putting the more gorgeous flowers to the blush.

The lingerie headgear is most charming, and though the prettiest of this is, of course, for misses and children, there are very smart muslin hats for women, which with their frills and ribbons, go delightfully with certain quaint frocks in the same materials.

A misses' gown of almost classic simplicity is pictured here, but if the material is carefully chosen a gown in this model could be worn on the most festive day occasion and even on a smart evening one. The dress is suited, however, to any service, for all that is needed is to suit the material to the use required. For a really fine frock, white or pale cream shantung, both of which wash beautifully often, and always clean superbly, will be a rewarding material, as no matter how plain a gown is, this rich silky texture creates a look of great elegance.

The scallops in this case could be done of hand embroidery, and the buttons be of silk embroidery, while a somewhat handsomer textile than net should be employed for the long sleeved guimpe. A parasol in the same material as the dress makes the get-up very fetching, and the deep basket hat would be lovely if of panama or leghorn, with a white, deep blue, rose-colored or black ribbon.

For this little dress eight yards of shantung, pongee or linen 27 inches wide, and two yards of tucked net 18 inches wide, will be required by medium figures.

A Tablier for New Gown.

Swinging stoles, or tabliers, richly embroidered or incrusted with beads and weighted with fringe, are a feature of new Paris frocks for ceremonious wear. One handsome costume shows five of these tabliers hanging over a satin gown and laced together to give the effect of a tunic. Over a black lace or net evening frock a gold-embroidered tablier is very stunning, and any woman could make this dress accessory at home. The tablier should hang straight from the bust or high girdle, and should be at least four inches wide at its narrowest part. The lower edge, near the foot, is rounded off in broad tab fashion, and is weighted by fringe. The tablier is embroidered with soutache braid or coarse silks and the Pharaoh, or Egyptian, patterns are most popular.

NEW GOWNS SHOW A CHANGE

Louis XV. Style Is Becoming Apparent and Is a Hint for the Coming Fall Costumes.

The Louis XV. style is more than apparent in many of the new gowns. An excellent example is shown in a point d'esprit gown made with a skirt that is definitely flaring in the light of what our eyes have become accustomed to.

The skirt is festooned with filmy flounces over the lining of coral-colored silk. The polonaise, which dips back rapidly from the waist line in the skirt, is of a quaint coral-colored brocade, the ends of the skirt part knotted back in a wholly original way and the middle of the back falling in with the train.

There is no girdle at the front, but there is at the sides and back. The low neck has a sort of bertha of the silk edged with a lace frill and the short sleeves have deep lace frills.

The polonaise is a growing fashion and it is more than likely that a good deal of it will be seen next fall. If Louis XV. styles are again materialized, it will be sure to crop out.

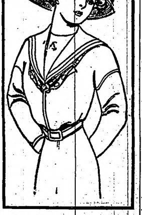
Trimming for Buttons.

Large fabric buttons are trimmed with embroidery, passementerie beads; sometimes a quilling of satin or narrow ribbon is put about them to enhance their value as an ornament.

French Cynicism.

In their first passion women love their lovers; in all others they love love.—La Rochefoucauld.

CHIC OUTING HAT.



The popular mushroom shape in burnt straw, simply but appropriately trimmed for outing purposes. The large bow and crown drapery are made from white dotted dark blue silk, which may be had in all colors.

TWO WAISTS TO ONE SKIRT.

Good Idea for Summer Frock That Will Greatly Prolong the Life of the Garment.

In making up a shirtwaist frock of summer material, that is to see hard service, it is a god idea to make two waists to one skirt. The skirt wears twice as long as the blouse and in this way the life of the frock is prolonged.

They will fade unequally? Not a bit of it if the waists are worn alternately, not keeping one until the other is worn out.

Another useful tip for the morning frock is to have stocks made of the material with white piquetles for a four-in-hand. There should be at least two to each waist, as a frock that is worked in gets soiled more quickly in the collar than elsewhere. If the stock is not detachable the blouse must often go to the tub before its time.

Have the skirts cut to clear the ground by two inches and do not select a model with many plaits, if laundering is an item. With such a costume, covered by an apron, a woman is presentable at any minute in summer, though she does her own housework.

A Willow Basket.

There is a great fascination in the coloring of willow baskets, or even of chairs and porch furniture generally, with wood dyes. We used to call them stains, but they are of slightly different ingredients, and are now regarded as more of a dye. The new porch basket is made of willow in the natural state and will take the dye perfectly. It is intended for sewing or for a fruit or flower basket. In shape it is low and flat, with a tall handle.

The basket itself is about 18 inches by 12 inches, an oblong. The bottom is slightly curved and its sides are only 2½ inches deep.

No more beautiful basket than one of these flat willow ones dyed green could be imagined for the woman who has made a hobby of her flower garden and goes laden with cut blossoms for her neighbors.

HAVE SILLY NOTION

YOUNG PEOPLE GET FALSE IDEAS ON ENTERTAINING.

Too Many Seem to Think They Must Give Handsome Dinners and Luncheons or Else Extend No Hospitality.

"These people who entertain all the time in a cheap way makes me sick," said a young housekeeper discussing an inexpensive puzzle party a friend had given. "How much smarter Margery's affairs would be if she gave one stunning lunch or dinner a season It would save her lots of trouble, too."

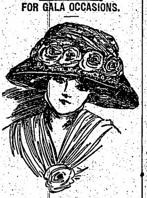
Ideas like these are the deathblow to hospitality and sociability, declares a writer in the Chicago Inter Ocean. Women who cannot give handsome dinners and luncheons give nothing. They limit their entertaining and are burdened by a weight of unpaid social obligations because they cannot have as fine linen or china as wealthier friends.

The power to entertain handsomely is enviable; even more to be envied is the gift of entertaining charmingly but simply. Girls at home and young married women who possess this knack are never lacking in popularity. It is a pleasant thing to welcome one's friends, but when their coming means a splurge that can be ill-afforded entertaining misses its purpose.

We need to get back to the simpler ways when having a few guests to dinner did not mean a caterer, several extra waiters and swelled bills. There are brides who pine to show off their dainty gifts of silver and china, who yet keep their pretty things packed away waiting for the time when they can give a costly enough meal to be in keeping. How more than foolish! Just because one has lovely table appointments can she afford to entertain simply. The pretty setting gives the simplest food an air.

There are many ways in which young people can entertain at little cost. Eliminate expensive refreshments and costly prizes. These are the things that run into money. What is needed is courage not to do as the rest of your set does.

FOR GALA OCCASIONS.



Picture hat of chip covered with fine lace, soft wreath of muslin roses.

CHARMING FOR STREET WEAR.

Walking Dress Which Embodies All the Latest Ideas Both as to Makeup and Material.

The skirt of this dress is in white cloth; it is a corselet shape, cut in points in the front and has the right sides wrapped over to the left; it is completely edged with braid; down the front the braid is arranged in semi-circles at intervals, in which buttons are sewn. White chiffon taffeta is used for the blouse, which has a long, tight tucked sleeve, slightly pulled into the arm-hole; the front and back are also tucked, the tucks being stitched down a few inches; a box-plait is formed down center of front; a piece of cream lace adds a finish at the neck.

Materials required: 4½ yards cloth 48 inches wide, six yards braid, seven buttons, 2½ yards chiffon taffetas 42 inches wide.

BUTTONS ON ALL COSTUMES.

One of the Chief Characteristics of the Season's Gowns of Every Description.

A whole chapter might be devoted to the buttons of the season, so important is the part they play in the trimming of costumes, suits, gowns for all occasions. Those on street dresses and suits are silk or self-covered—that is, covered with a material like the suit; they run from forms no larger than a lentil to two-inch disks. They are set on points of band and tab trimming, lengthwise down the sleeve, in long single or double rows down the back of princess dresses, or they define and trim the slashed or panelled coats and jackets. Those for evening or dinner gowns have become perfect little works of art, especially the two-inch disks. They are covered with cretonne flowered silks or are embroidered with the vigitale stitch in delicate or bright colors; they are then set into a bed of chiffon or liberty flower petals, and in this form are used to secure sash or girdle or bretelle trimmings.—Harper's Bazar.

Plumes Continue Popular.

Contrary to the usual custom plumes maintain their popularity during the summer as a trimming for straw hats.

A wired plume does not sound in the least appropriate. One always thinks of the long ostrich feather always as the most perfect expression of grace in hat garniture. It is, however, only the rib or backbone of the feather that is wired to give the added height to some of the new turbans and bowler shapes. The plume is stiffened to an almost unbelievable height and then doubled, so that it remains quite tall enough for all practical purposes.

The all black hat with its long ostrich feathers is no more the Parisian favorite, and the large white hat, too, will give way before the softer silk and satin straws in pastel colors. Plumes to match will be worn on these large yet delicate creations intended for afternoon wear with costumes of peach color, apricot, zenith blue and iris.

Plaids Win Few Women.

The news that large plaids will be used during the coming autumn in Paris to an extent which will almost form a record is hardly likely to give unmixed pleasure. As a rule, American women are far from imitating their French sisters in their fondness for plaid gowns for town wear, and even in the realm of the nursery people the wardrobe of an average child is usually innocent of the host of small garments in plaids and checks which, in the opinion of the authorities, are indispensable to the outfit of the small Parisienne.

AN EASILY CHANGED SACHET.

Difficulty with Which All Women Are Familiar Overcome in a Simple Manner.

The great trouble of the handsome silk sachets is that when the scent fails they must either be discarded or re-made. A clever young girl who is fond of orris root among her belongings has overcome this difficulty in a simple manner.

She makes her sachet cases of strips of ribbon, weaving two or more colors together, just as kindergarten children weave paper. The ribbon is cut in equal lengths, and as many pieces are necessary as the size of the case requires. The best way to gauge this is to decide on the size then divide the length by the width of the ribbon to show the number of pieces and cut each piece a little longer than the width of the case.

Sometimes the ribbons are woven into a square, again they are made oblong. The squares are effective when folded over into a triangle when [illegible]

The sachet powder is sprinkled thickly on sheets of cotton batting, a little smaller than the woven case, and slipped inside. Instead of sewing it in, the ends of the cover are tied with narrow ribbon bows. These are put on according to the shape of the sachet, sometimes at the corners or if it is quite large they must go on the sides as well.

The raw ends of ribbon left after weaving are tucked under and fastened with a small stitch. Charming color combinations can be made. Serviceable as well as decorative cases can be woven in tones of brown and ecru or in two shades of old blue. More delicate ones are of rose pink and silver, lavender and pale corncolor, baby blue and white.

Gold and Silver Buckles.

Nothing is more exquisite than the beaten gold and silver buckles and pins of the olden days. [illegible]

When the Idol Spoke

By E. M. BIRELY

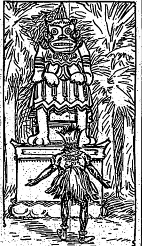
(Copyright, 1909, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Somewhere in far-away South Seas lies the tropic island of Dong. On the map it is merely a nameless speck, so unimportant that no nation has ever taken the trouble to plant her flag upon its palm fringed shores. Yet, in spite of its diminutive size and lack of importance, it is famous in the outlandish sort of South-Sea fame.

No missionary has ever gained foothold on its barbarous shores and few traders have ever tarried in its little coral locked bays. For its people are not a commercial people. They prefer the quiet calm of rest beneath the sheltering palms to the hum and buzz of industry. Neither do they tolerate heresy nor listen to the words of the pious missionary. Indeed why should they? Have they not an idol whose name and fame is known throughout all the barbaric South Seas? Even at Hongkong one finds half-castes who tell strange tales of the wonderful idol on the island of Dong; how in times long since passed the idol has spoken wise words unto his people; how he has stood haughty in his grandeur through hurricane and typhoon since beyond the memory of man; how through love for them, they have lived unbothered by the ever-moving, tiresome white man and his big ships.

This much one might hear at Hongkong. If he took passage in some dirty trader that makes its uncertain course far from the traveled ways of commerce he might hear more of the vague traditions and tales of this most remarkable idol.

It was midsummer and the island of Dong lay sweltering in the vertical rays of a tropical sun. For weeks the heathen folk of this out-of-the-way place had dozed in torpor in the shade of the trees by day, and strolled in luxuriant ease by night. Only those moved who had to. Matsu Sam had to. He was a soldier; nay, even more, one of the faithful, a body-guard to his highness, the king, Kong Hi Nasu Gumbo. It was his honorable duty to guard his majesty and carry quieting drinks to quench the royal thirst, and even more important it was his sacred duty to see that Bong, the idol, was cared for; to see that the young pythons did not coil around his revered feet and desecrate his splendid idol beauty.



In a Deep Bass Voice He Said:

This particular morning Matsu Sam was in a hurry. Having performed his sacred rites and regal duties, he would be off duty and might rest and drink the quieting wine and dream the pleasant dreams of a South Sea Islander. He must hurry or the scorching sun would catch him at his work. Woe to any pythons who made a resting place of the feet of Bong, the mighty, this day.

As he approached the idol, Matsu Sam bowed low in humble reverence. Then he stood as though turned to stone by what he heard. The idol cleared his throat and began to speak slowly and distinctly in the strange heathen jargon of that land. He said: "It is I, Bong, the descendant of the sun, the cousin of the moon, the fallen star, who speaks. Hear me, Matsu Sam, and remember what I say and forget nothing under penalty of the awful death."

Matsu Sam's knees were striking together so violently by this time that he sunk down on all fours and assumed a pose of abject devotion.

"Tell your king," the voice continued, "to come before me at this time two days hence. Let him not fail for I shall speak to him words of wisdom."

Then there was silence. Matsu Sam finally pulled himself together and ran to the palace of the king. A few minutes later he was meekly enduring the words of wrath of a very sleepy ruler, but the regal tongue was stilled when the breathless messenger told the wondrous story. The king retired to his favorite palm tree to rack his heathen brain over this portentous happening. After many hours of unaccustomed thought Gumbo decided that Matsu Sam had been drinking too much, or had gazed too long into the evil eye of the sacred shark which was kept in the basin near where the idol stood. Having arrived at this conclusion King Gumbo swore by the beardless chin of the revered idol that if this was the case the shark should feast upon the lying tongue of Matsu Sam, and then sunk into his royal slumber.

The rumor of the prophetic words of the idol spread rapidly and all through the day the people gave up their usual sleep to bow low and kiss the feet of this unusually ugly idol. Even the soldiers who guarded the royal jewels in the strong house were relieved so they could salaam at the sacred feet of Bong. This was very unusual for in the strong house were piles upon piles of precious stones, rubies, emeralds, sapphires and pearls of great price; some found farther back than the oldest hag could remember, others discovered during their own time. No trader had ever been able to buy a single gem from the islanders. All were carefully saved and guarded to be kept until, so tradition said, Bong should open his long-closed lips and tell them what he wished done with them, the offerings of his faithful children.

So in the throes of unheard of excitement the scantily-clad people of Dong awaited the words of the idol. When the appointed time arrived the entire nation had turned out to hear with the king the mystic words which Bong would speak for their guidance during the many, many seasons to come. Each considered himself a favored one to be allowed to hear the prophetic words from beyond the veil. That morning the shark fared richly; many were the tender, young male children who went to make his breakfast; for was it not well to placate the spirit of the mighty when it was in such a favorable mood?

The sun was just beginning to show far out in the east and Gumbo was casting glances of regal displeasure upon Matsu Sam when curious vibrating sounds began to come from the misshapen cranium of Bong. He was, indeed, clearing his throat, and four hundred dusky foreheads sought the warm sand. Then came a pause and the idol began to speak. In a deep bass voice he said:

"King Gumbo, for many years I have kept my eye upon you. You have been a good king and have served me well in all but one thing. Your people have not been gathering precious stones. You must collect more. One month from now I will speak again and by that time if you have no more jewels for me I will let the sun shine no more upon you."

A month of wildest activity passed. Many wicker baskets were filled with precious stones, for which any trader would have come through a sea of fire. The appointed morning came and once more were the islanders thrilled by the dulcet tones of their most ugly old idol. This time his speech was long. After commending them for their diligence and devotion he directed that on the night they saw fire at his lips and eyes they should take all the jewels in the storehouse and place them on the beach beside the tall palm; that only the most devoted of the faithfud should do this, and do it they must without fail. It would serve as an offering to the restless spirit of the sea which they must placate.

Two nights later in the early darkness of a threatening storm a slight glow played about the mouth and eyes of Bong. It grew brighter and then gradually died away, but not before the watchers had seen it. That night all the treasure, the wealth of a kingdom, was carried down to the shore as an offering to the sea. The next morning when light broke not a cask nor a basket remained. The sea had accepted the costly offering of the people of King Gumbo's island.

Two weeks later McCall, representative in the far east for an American talking machine company, was smoking in the club at Hongkong. He had just returned from a long trip among the islands far, far to the south. Acquaintances and friends exchanged greetings with him and inquired as to the business in phonographs among the islands. He answered that it was never better and incidentally showed them some remarkably fine sapphires and pearls. Meanwhile down on the water front in a low grog-shop a chattering half-caste was trading very rich rubies and emeralds for very poor whisky, and showing the wondering crowd of coolies the strange properties of phosphorus.

Which all may or may not have had something to do with the same thing; who can say?

Seeing Mars.

To see Mars and other heavenly bodies better is an attempt of greater promise than efforts to telegraph to worlds of which we know so little. The earth's amosphere varies greatly in clearness, and, while American astronomers have established several observatories in very favorable localities, it appears that just the best spot for a great international observatory—where the world's supreme effort at looking outward can be made—has not yet been determined. A study is now being begun of the conditions in the Karroos, or elevated plains of South Africa, near the scenes of the Boer war. At a number of stations estimates of cloudiness will be made on a uniform scale, steadiness of the air will be adjudged by such observations as those of double stars, and photographic tests will be made by star trails. These sensitive methods are expected to show whether the air is better for seeing than that of other places known.

Great Author Sensible.

In an age of so much curiosity concerning the intimate affairs in the life of a writer it has been considered remarkable that Blackmore has not been more the subject of biography, particularly in view of the fact that "Lorna Doone, familiar in so many forms and only recently exhausting its latest edition, has been a classic from the first. The following extract from one of Blackmore's letters written to a friend and attached to his will may explain the attitude of the author and of his associates in this matter.: "It is so much the fashion now to write the lives of people of very small importance or interest that some one may even want to do that of me. Forbid it and refuse to have anything to do with such a trumpery attempt to make money."

Idiot's Remarkable Memory.

An extraordinary case of memory in a ten-year-old idiot boy was presented at the last meeting of the Vienna Psychological and Neurological society. Without a moment's hesitation he could tell the day of the week of any date mentioned, also the name, day and the date of the removable feasts in any year. He answered immediately and accurately such questions as "What day was June 14, 1808?" "When is Ash Wednesday, 1917?" "How long is the carnival in 1934?" "When is Easter, 1929?" His answers were given without hesitation and were invariably correct.

Sanatorium Not a Nuisance.

The courts of Massachusetts, North Carolina and Virginia have decided that a tuberculosis sanatorium is not a menace to the health of a community, and that it does not decrease the value of land in its immediate neighborhood.

TIRED ALL THE TIME.

Languor, listlessness, dullness of spirits are often due to kidney disorders. Pain and weakness in the back, sides and hips, headaches, dizziness, urinary disorders are sure signs that the kidneys need immediate attention. Delay is dangerous.

Alonzo Adams, Osceola, Iowa, says: "My kidneys failed me. I suffered awful pain and was so weak I could not work, and often had to take to bed. I was dull and exhausted nearly all the time. I consulted doctors and used medicines, but only Doan's Kidney Pills helped me. Soon I was permanently cured."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Happiest.

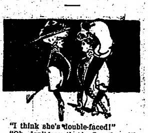
"And thank goodness it wasn't an international marriage, though the bride did have 18 millions.

"Not," appended Mr. Carnegie, "that I object to international marriages wherein the two parties are good and honorable and well matched. But so many of these marriages are like one that a Boston cynic described to me.

"'Was it a happy marriage?' I asked this Bostonian.

"'Oh quite,' said he. 'The bride was happy, her mother was overjoyed. Lord Lacland was in ecstacies, and his creditors, I understand, were in a state of absolutely endless and uncontrollable bliss.'"

PLAIN TALK.



"I think she's double-faced!"

"Oh, don't say that! One face like hers is bad enough!"

ORIGIN

Of a Famous Human Food.

The story of the great discoveries or inventions is always of interest.

An active brain worker who found himself hampered by lack of bodily strength and vigor and could not carry out the plans and enterprises he knew how to conduct, was led to study various foods and their effects upon the human system. In other words, before he could carry out his plans he had to find a food that would carry him along and renew his physical and mental strength.

He knew that a food which was a brain and nerve builder (rather than a mere fat maker) was universally needed. He knew that meat with the average man does not accomplish the desired results. He knew that the soft gray substance in brain and nerve centers is made from Albumen and Phosphate of Potash obtained from food. Then he started to solve the problem.

Careful and extensive experiments evolved Grape-Nuts, the now famous food. It contains the brain and nerve building food elements in condition for easy digestion.

The result of eating Grape-Nuts daily is easily seen in a marked sturdiness and marked activity of the brain and nervous system, making it a pleasure for one to carry on the daily duties without fatigue or exhaustion.

Grape-Nuts food is in no sense a stimulant but is simply food which renews and replaces the daily waste of brain and nerves.

Its flavour is charming and being fully and thoroughly cooked at the factory it is served instantly with cream.

The signature of the brain worker spoken of, C. W. Post, is to be seen on each genuine package of Grape-Nuts.

President Taft is to visit St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Winona in September.

Somehow, the fact that large cargoes of coal are arriving at Duluth doesn't interest us these days.

The Brown's Valley Tribune philosopher observes that "voting long time bonds is making a loan from posterity without the posterity's consent."

President Taft is at last showing an active interest in the tariff bill and threatens to use his big stick if the promised "downward revision" is not made. May his courage hold out.

The Brown's Valley Tribune wants Jacobson and Heatwole in the state senate. Why not bring along Bob Dunn, Eustis, Collins and McCleary We might as well make it a get-together affair.

As a proof of the wisdom of the preservation of forests, the Youth's Companion says that German forests, according to the latest reports, gives an annual net income of an average of five dollars an acre, and that authorities say that this income can be counted on year in and year out, with more certainty than the returns form any other sort of investment.

It is rumored that John S. McLain, formerly of the Minneapolis Journal, is to become editor of the St. Paul Dispatch. If it is true, this means the Dispatch will have a great editorial page.

They are getting a bit particular down at Washington. A hundred employees of the department of commerce and labor have been reduced and ten dismissed for "loafing on the job." The question naturally arises, what's a government job for, anyway?

The fates are unkind to McCleary. Just as he had the job of superintendent of mint picked out and his desire fully exploited in the newspapers along comes a New York gentleman and claims the place. And what's more he will get it. It looks as though Mac would be obliged to go to work.

It is said by clothing manufacturers that next winter's suits will cost from $5 to $10 more because of the increased tariff on woolens. Everybody but the heathens wear clothing and we are all interested in getting it as cheaply as possible. It would seem as though the clothing wearers, being a somewhat numerous contingent, are entitled to a square deal, rather than put all the money in the pockets of the sheep raiser and the woolen manufacturer.

Lord Rosebury at a press conference in Great Britain is reported to have said: "When I see this bursting out of navies everywhere, when I see one country alone askng for 25,000,000 pounds sterling of extra taxation for warlike preparation, when I see absolutely unprecedented sacrifices which are asked from us on the same ground I do begin to feel uneasy as to the outcome of it all, to wonder where it is going to stop—if it is going to bring back Europe into a state of barbarism or whether it will cause a catastrophe in which the working men of the world will say, 'We will have no more of this madness and foolery which is grinding us to powder.'"

One of the new laws passed by the recent legislature provides that after Jan. 1, 1910, ten percent of all the liquor license moneys collected by municipalities (except the cities of the first, second and third class) shall go to the general fund of the county treasury, says the Chaska Herald. Such cities as Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth are exempt. LeSueur county intends to contest the law, holding that it is unconstitutional owing to this exception. If our supreme court holds that the law is constitutional the city of Chaska will be required to pay $500 each year into the county treasury at the present rate in addition to the tax being paid out of license money for the state inebriate farm.

While giving the insurgent republican senators credit for voting against the Aldrich bill, the St Peter Herald doubts the sincerity of some of them, saying:

"Be it said to the credit of Senators Nelson and Clapp that they voted against the Aldirch bill. Other members of their party who voted with them were Dolliver, and Cummins of Iowa, Burkett and Brown from Nebraska, LaFollette of Wisconsin, Beveridge of Indiana, Bristow of Kansas and Crawford of South Dakota. Most of these men voted as their conscience dictated, but we suspect that some of them played a deep game of politics. All of the senators are from western states having heavy republican majorities, and those majorities will be badly needed when public indignation over upward revision will demand the retirement of the party in power. Crawford, for example, voted with the high tariff crowd on all the important schedules, but opposed the bill at the very last. He hopes, doubtless, to point to his vote in the next campaign. Inasmuch as the passage of the bill was never in doubt, some of the insurgents may be suspected of insincerity."

THEY ALWAYS GET EVEN.

The Minnesota Lake Tribune tells of a man who made his friends "put up" his personal expenses, and draws a simile with the methods of the trusts and corporations:

"A good many years ago we knew a man who had a very peculiar way of always 'playing even.' He seemed to the world to be a good spender, but he had a system whereby he always managed to make somebody else pay back the money he would spend having a good time. Whenever he went on a 'bender' or got squeezed a little hard in a poker game or lost a wad of money on a horse race, he would gouge enough money out of his customers to make up his losses. He would add a little to this article and a little to that and take off a little on the price of what he bought and his customers never knew the difference. Some times it took him a long time to play even, but he always managed to do so. His actions were exactly in accord wih the methods of the great corporations of today. Every time they get squeezed for a piece of money they manage to gouge it out of their product. Every time congress imposes any tax which will cost the great corporations any extra money, you may be sure that the consumer is the boy who will pay the extra expensee.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Eveleth News: The corporation tax proposed by President Taft and backed by Senator Old Rich does not take well with the public. The people are convinced there is a very black fellow hiding in the fence.

Albert Lea Standard: The road and bridge pork barrel is a political graft, and because the tri-city politicians and the state institution towns continually set the example—only more so—doesn't in the least disinfect it of its odor.

Hibbing Mesaba Ore: Just why the Republicans turned the tariff matter over to Aldrich, an avowed tool of the trusts, will be among the several things that the Republican party will have to explain in the not far distant future.

Stillwater Gazette: If there is really anything in the suggestion of diiding Minnesota into two states, let us give one to Governor Johnson and his K. C. That will leave the other so there will be somethng like a chance to elect a Republican governor.

Austin Transcript: The Ohio supreme court has decided that voting machines cannot be used in Ohio. The court holds that they do not meet the requirements of the provision of the Constituion which says that all eletions should be by ballot. We appeal from this decision.

Litchfield Independent: The attorney general has decided that the recent offer of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railways to haul free of charge crushed stone from St. Cloud to build roads is unlawful and is prohibited by the laws of the state. We evidently need a new guardian to protect us from our legislature.

Paynesville Press: According to Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture, there is little excuse for a man being out of work this time of the year. Secretary Wilson has just returned to Washington from a trip through the West where he has found a great shortage of hands on the farms of this country. This too comes at a time when the cities are reported to be overrun with men who are out of work. Truly the fascination of the sidewalks is great.

Aitkin Age: Out in Nebraska something over fifty bankers have organized for the purpose of fighting the deposit guaranty law that recently went into force there. That's the stuff, boys. If you want to foster class hatred just defy the laws and go ahead on the policy of "the people be damned" and you will land in the scrap heap so much the quicker. The old time idea that a banker owns a man, his business and his ballot because he happens to borrow money of him—for which he had to give first class security and a good rate of interest—has played out in the more enlightened communities and likewise the depositrs are getting a little more particular tran they used to be.

SCISSORETTES

Item from the Yaptown Yapper: Cindy Simper, who lives at Josh Jungleberry's, was nearly badly hurt last week, when she was about her kitchen work. A shelf fell and all the tinware, crocks and table dishes come down on her head. Josh called at this office today and said Cindy was still able to eat three meals a day and to entertain B. H. which stands for Bill Higgins, but don't tell that we told you."

Written up by a city newspaper reporter, the foregoing would appear something like this: Miss Cinderella Simper was the recipient of a china and tinware shower, last evening at the pleasant villa of Mr. Joshua Jungleberry. The occasion was made the time for announcing the coming marriage of Miss Simper to Mr. William Higgins, one of Yaptown's most popular and industrious young men. Miss Simper is a most estimable, beautiful and accomplished young lady."

This gives two versions of one occurrence, as the result of being sized up from two very different view points and also illustrates the power of the press to turn a misfortune into a happy event, tears to loaughter and to boost along a case fo courtship, slow in culmination.—Tiffin (O.) Tribune and Herald.

Two farmers were discussing the Record on Main street the other day. One thought the paper had too many adverisements in it. The other replied: "In my opinion the advertisements are far from being the least valuable part of it. I look them over carefully and save at least five times the cost of the paper each week through the business advantages I get from them." "I don't know but what you are right," said the second farmer. "I know they pay me well and rather think it is not good taste to find fault with the advertisements after all." Those men have the right idea of the matter. It pays any man with a family to take a good local paper for the sake of the adverisements if nothing more. If business men fail to give farmers a chance to read advertisements in the local papers, they are blind of their own interests. "You never trade with me," said a business man to a prosperous farmer. "You never have invited me to your place of business, and I never go where I am not invited because I might not be welcome," was his reply. —Geauga Record, Chardon, O.

Courteous Treatment to All

PAIN

Pain in the head—pain anywhere, has its cause. Pain is congestion, pain is blood pressure—nothing else usually. At least, so says Dr. Shoop, and to prove it he has created a little pink tablet. That tablet—called Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablet—coaxes blood pressure away from pain centers. Its effect is charming, pleasingly delightful. Gently, though safely, it surely equalizes the blood circulation.

If you have a headache, it's blood pressure.
If it's painful periods with women, same cause.
If you are sleepless, restless, nervous, it's blood congestion—blood pressure. That surely is a certainty, for Dr. Shoop's Headache Tablets stop it in 20 minutes, and the tablets simply distribute the unnatural blood pressure.

Bruise your finger, and doesn't it get red, and swell, and pain you? Of course it does. It's congestion, blood pressure. You'll find it where pain is—always. It's simply Common Sense.

We sell at 25 cents, and cheerfully recommend

S.S.S. CURES RHEUMATISM

Every case of Rheumatism has its origin and its development in the blood. It is not a disease which is contracted like a cold, but it is in the blood and system before a pain is felt, and the changes in the weather or any physical irregularities, such as a spell of indigestion, bowel disturbance, etc., are merely the exciting causes producing the pains and aches, which are the natural symptoms of the disease. Rheumatism is caused by an excess of uric acid and other corrosive, irritating poisons in the blood, which are carried through the circulation to every part of the system. Every muscle, nerve, membrane, tissue and joint becomes saturated with these acrid, irritating impurities, or coated with fine, insoluble caustic matter, and the sharp, piercing pains or the dull, constant aches are felt with every physical movement. When the blood is filled with uric acid poison, permanent relief cannot be expected from liniments, plasters, or other external treatment. Such measures give temporary relief, but in order to conquer Rheumatism and bring about a complete cure, the uric acid and other inflammatory matter must be expelled, and this cannot be done with external treatment. S. S. S. cures Rheumatism because it is a perfect and entirely vegetable blood purifier. It goes down into the circulation, neutralizes the acids, and dissolves the irritating deposits which are pressing on the sensitive nerves and tissues and producing pain, enriches the weak, sour blood, and removes every atom of impurity from the circulation. So instead of being a weak, sour stream, distributing uric acid to the different parts of the system, the blood is strong and healthy and therefore able to supply every muscle, nerve, bone and tissue with nourishment and strength. Then the inflammation and swelling subside, the pains and aches cease, and not only is Rheumatism permanently cured, but under the fine tonic effects of S. S. S. the entire general health is benefitted and built up. In all forms of Rheumatism, whether acute or chronic, S. S. S. will be found a safe and reliable treatment. Special book on Rheumatism and any medical advice you desire will be furnished free. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

Sometime ago, I had Rheumatism and had to quit work. The pain in my back and between my shoulders was so intense I could not rest or sleep. I tried everything, but nothing did me any good till I heard of and took S. S. S. This medicine cured me sound and well. It purified my blood and made me feel like a new man.

CONRAD LOHR,
Anderson, Ind. 122 E. 19th St.

I was severely troubled with Rheumatism. I had it in my knees, legs and ankles, and any one who has ever had Rheumatism knows how excruciating the pain is and how it interferes with one at work. I was truly in bad shape—having been bothered with it for ten years, off and on. A local physician advised me to use S. S. S. I did so. After taking two bottles I noticed the soreness and pain were greatly reduced. I continued the medicine and was thoroughly cured; all pain, soreness and inflammation gone. I recommend S. S. S. to all Rheumatic sufferers.

Sale of Ditching Jobs.

Notice is hereby Given, That on the 30th day of July 1909, at Two o'clock P. M., at the auditor's office in the City of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, I will sell the jobs of digging and constructing the Ditch No. 35 of Red Lake County, established by the Board of County Commissioners of Red Lake County, State of Minnesota, by their order bearing date the Nineteenth day of June, 1909, viz: For the work as one job, and also for one or more sections of 100 feet each, and also for one or more of the construction jobs, each of said sections to be known and numbered by stakes as shown by the report of the Engineer in said matter, commencing at the one including the outlet and from thence, successively, up stream to the one including the source said sections being numbered from Station Number "0" to Station Number "346" inclusive, being the whole of said main ditch No. 35 and contemplating the excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth, the same to be placed along the side of the ditch in such a manner as to form a turnpike or grade and in the time and manner described in the plans, profile, maps and specifications of the Civil Engineer in charge, all on file in my office, to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders, and that bids are invited for said work; said work to completed within the time required and in the manner specified, in said Engineer's report. And no bid will be entertained which exceeds more than thirty (30) per cent. over and above the estimate cost of the construction, in any case, as stated in the said order; and the successful bidder will be required to give a satisfactory bond, to be approved by the Auditor of said County, with two freehold sureties for the faithful performance and fulfillment of his contract, and to pay all damages that may accrue by reason of his failure to complete the job within the time required in the contract. The said order and estimates and profile are on file, and may be seen at my office.

The approximate amount of work to be done in the construction of such ditch is as follows: The excavation and removal of 73,735 cubic yards of earth being estimated at Seven thousand three hundred and seventy three and 50-100 ($7,373.50) Dollars.

The estimated total cost of the work is $9,678.85-100 Dollars.

All bids must be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Auditor of said County, for not less than ten per cent. of the amount of each bid.

The right to reject any and all bids is hereby reserved.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of one hundred eighteen & 85-100 dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John P. Gonigam and Lizzie V. Gonigam, his wife, Mortgagors, to Matilda Meckenstock, Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th day of January, 1905, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February, 1905, at 4 o'clock P. M., in Book 20 of Mortgages on page 634.

And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage,

And Whereas, the said Matilda Meckenstock, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred, Seventy Four and 75-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of Six per cent per annum, from the 23rd day of June, 1909 including delinquent taxes paid by said mortgagee, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section nine (9), in Township One Hundred and Fifty (150), North Range Forty-four (44) west of the Fifth principal Meridian, and in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake county at the front door of the Post Office, in the City of Red Lake Falls in said County and State, on the 7th day of August, 1909, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $2374.75 and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 23, A. D. 1909.

Commissioner Demann offered the following preamble and resolutions and moved their adoption:

Whereas, in pursuance of and in full compliance with the General Laws of the State of Minnesota applicable thereto, such steps have been duly and legally taken that those certain Public County Drainage Ditches known as County Ditch No. 22, No. 23, No. 24, No. 25, No. 26, No. 28, and No. 30 have been duly located and established wholly within this County of Red Lake in the state of Minnesota, and it has been definitely ascertained and determined in accordance with the provisions of the law applicable thereto, that the expense incurred and to be incurred in locating and establishing and constructing said ditches respectively within said county of Red Lake, exceeds the following sums and amounts to-wit:—In the case of County Ditch No. 22, $5,100; of said Ditch No. 23, $4,000; said Ditch No. 24, $5,300; of said Ditch No. 25, $6,700; of said Ditch No. 26, $3,700; of said Ditch No. 28, $2,700; of said Ditch No. 30, $1,700, and this County Board has heretofore duly determined to issue the bonds of this County of Red Lake for the purpose of paying the expense aforesaid for each of said ditches in said amounts respectively;

Now, Therefore, Be It Resolved, by the County Board of the County of Red Lake, that the sum of Twenty-nine Thousand Two Hundred ($29,200) Dollars is necessary to defray the expenses incurred and to be incurred in locating, constructing and establishing said County Ditches within and for said County.

Resolved Further, that the negotiable coupon bonds of this County of Red Lake be issued for said purposes in the aggregate amount of Twenty-nine Thousand Two Hundred ($29,200) Dollars, said bonds to be thirty-seven (37) in number, numbered from 1 to 37, both inclusive, bonds numbered 6 and 17 to be of the denomination of $100.00 each; bonds Nos. 16, 25, 30, 34, and 37 to be of the denomination of $200.00 each, bonds Nos. 24, 29, 33, and 36 of the denomination of $500.00 each and all the others of the denomination of $1,000 each, all of said bonds to bear date July 1st, 1909, and due and payable July 1st, 1919, with interest at the rate of five and one-half (5 1-2) per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually on the first day of January and July in each year, both principal and interest payable at the office of The Minnesota Loan and Trust Company, in the City of Minneapolis, Minnesota, said bonds so to be issued to be for the said County Drainage Ditches as follows:—

For County Ditch No. 22 bonds Nos. 1 to 6 inclusive aggregating $5,100.

For County Ditch No. 23, bonds Nos. 7 to 10 inclusive, aggregating $4,000.

For County Ditch No. 24, bonds No. 11 to 17 inclusive, aggregating $5,300.

For County Ditch No. 25, bonds Nos. 18 to 25 inclusive, aggregating $6,700.

For County Ditch No. 26, bonds Nos. 26 to 30 inclusive, aggregating $3,700.

For County Ditch No. 28 bonds Nos. 31 to 34 inclusive, aggregating $2,700.

For County Ditch No. 30, bonds Nos. 35, 36, and 37, aggregating $1,700.

Resolved Further, that said bonds and coupons attached thereto shall be substantially in the following form, with the necessary variations as to number and amounts thereof.

GOLDEN CHANCE FOR NEW RACE OF CARTOONISTS

Death Has Removed Many of the Giants Who Molded Public Opinion in the Past.

Golden is the opportunity that looms for some new cartoonists to take the place of the masters of satire now rapidly passing.

A host of brilliant lights have gone out in the last few years. They have left behind them many masters of the pencil, for the rewards of humorous work in the public prints were never so great as now, but the demand for cartoonists in the true sense, men who can mold opinion, stir the public and effect great political reforms was never so great as it is now.

Only a few weeks ago, the death of C. G. Bush removed one of the most noted of American cartoonists, and he had been preceded into the great beyond by only a matter of a few months by Caran D'Ache, the most noted of all French cartoonists.

Not so long before death's havoc had removed Charles Nelan, Thomas

O. Floyd Campbell.

Nast, V. Floyd Campbell and several other members of a brilliant company who had been keeping alive the glories of the past.

The distinction must sharply be made between cartoonists and comic artists.

Men like Swinnerton, Opper, Powers, for example, are essentially comic artists. Their mission is to bring a laugh. Their entry into the field of politics is occasional and incidental, they make little effort to shape public opinion and lead policies.

On the contrary a man like Homer Davenport, who by his cartoons almost succeeded in sending William Jennings Bryan to the White House, is entirely a cartoonist, a man who fights with the drawn picture far harder than can the most pungent writer of editorials.

Great Frenchman's Position.

Americans can hardly understand the position which was held by the late Caran D'Ache, of France.

The French public waited breathless in time of political excitement to see in what form his penciled comment would come, and his bitter satire has caused ministries to totter to their downfall. His grandfather was an officer under the first Napoleon, and took part in the Russian campaign. He was wounded, taken a prisoner before the retreat, and after the war became a soldier and subject of the Czar, and settled in Moscow.

Here his grandson, Emmanuel Poire was born, and as soon as he came of a knowing age he determined to take his French blood back to the soil from whence it sprang.

He devoted himself to caricature, and made his first success with a series of satires on Napoleon III. He had done his first under the nom de plume of Caran D'Ache, a French arrangement of the Russian words for "lead pencil," and he clung to this throughout his entire career, many persons thereby getting the mistaken idea that it was his correct name.

Soon the young cartoonist forced himself into a leading position. His style was grotesque, but free and sweeping, and he depicted vital truth with such humor and exaggeration that soon he ranked with the greatest editors and statesmen as a moulder of public opinion.

Nothing was sacred to him that ought to be exposed through the drawn line, and abuses, scandal, incompetency and wrong drew from him the most scathing pieces of work of his career.

His work especially appeared in Figaro and Le Rire, and was copied all over the world.

It is said that many a French statesman breathed easier after Caran had passed from the field of active work at the comparatively youthful age of fifty-one.

What Nast Did to Tweed.

Thomas Nast enjoyed a position much like that of Caran, his most notable exploit in the United States, the destruction of Boss Tweed, being a classic in the possibilities of the cartoonist's power.

He was one of the most picturesque figures who ever entered the field of political warfare.

His fame rests on the remarkable series of cartoons he drew for Harper's Weekly at a time when the metropolis was in the grasp of Tweed and his Tammany gang, and there seemed no way to get free.

Nast's pitiless cartoons not only aroused public opinion against the boss, but served to identify him, when he became a fugitive from justice.

Tweed himself paid this compliment to the power of his greatest foe:

"It ain't the readin' stuff that bothers me; it's the pictures."

The pictures did not take up half the room that newspapers and periodicals now give to the work of noted cartoonists, but they had a most extraordinary vogue, the device of making a money bag represent Tweed's body being a tremendous hit.

Nast was a Bavarian by birth. He came to this country at the age of six, and early in life decided to devote himself to drawing, his first position of importance being on the staff of Frank Leslie's.

Thomas Nast.

He devoted himself to the Union cause with such skill for Harper's that Abraham Lincoln said he was the best recruiting agent for the Federal cause.

While with Harper's Nast invented the Tammany Tiger, the elephant of the G. O. P. and the donkey, which came to be the symbol of democracy. Nast died at Guayaquil, Equador, to which post he had been named Consul General by President Roosevelt.

Passing of Bush.

The passing of C. G. Bush removed a great cartoonist a few weeks ago. He was a weary-eyed man with the sorrowful expression of the professional humorist. Especially was he famous for the excellence of his drawing. This is a point where he differed from many cartoonists, who succeeded only because of the power of their ideas, and in spite of clearly marked technical deficiencies.

Bush was not nearly as vicious as some of the noted contemporaries. He would aim a shaft of laughter at his victims, and bring them down to the music of a merry laugh.

He chose rather to get his result by the use of ridicule instead of blighting criticism.

It has been said of him that he made more public characters squirm than any other cartoonist of his day.

Eugene Zimmerman.

Charles Nelan was a similar worker to Bush. Bush was the older of the two, and for a time they were both bitter rivals on New York newspapers, then Nelan went to a Philadelphia newspaper, where the issues with which he dealt were more local in character, and hence his fame suffered somewhat, for he did not command the national attention that had been his while he was in New York dealing with questions in which the whole country was interested.

But Nelan did remarkable work, and at the time of his death, was one of the best five cartoonists in the country, easily that.

Nelan began his career as a cartoonist by drawing crude caricatures of his customers on rough paper, in his grocery store at Akron, Ohio.

His early life had given on indication of the career that was to be his.

His gift for drawing was native, and his ambition lay in that line, but the necessities of his family forced him to take up the uncongenial place in a grocer's store.

To while away his time he drew pictures of characters well known to the town. These attracted attention to him, and in a short time he had gained local celebrity.

Made a National Hit.

A representative of a Cleveland newspaper saw some of his work, and offered Nelan a job. Then the cartoonist studied drawing in earnest. He became so good that he was hired to work for a syndicate that boasts a whole chain of newspapers. The attention of New York was attracted to him, and he went there at the time of the war with Spain. This gave him a wonderful opportunity, and his series of war cartoons made a national hit, and when published in book form enjoyed a big sale.

Then he went to Philadelphia, and after six years returned to New York, where he was engaged at the time of his death.

Charles Nelan.

V. Floyd Campbell, who died three years ago, was an unusual type of cartoonist. He was really not a cartoonist at all, but a wonderful portrait artist, who would have achieved national fame had he lived. He was only thirty years old at the time of his death.

Campbell could draw pictures that looked marvelously like their subjects. None could match him in this skill. Then by just a little distortion or exaggeration he produced effects that were the ultimate in humor.

Some of the cartoonists mentioned here made as much money as fifteen thousand dollars a year.

The rewards are big and will increase with time, for the value of the picture as an argument is everywhere recognized. The artist with a sense of wit and an understanding of the great economic questions of the day, can make his fame and fortune by developing himself into a great cartoonist.

LIFE ROMANCE OF GERALDINE FARRAR

Grand Opera's Daintiest Queen to Marry Grand Opera's Handsomest Baritone.

Grand opera's daintiest queen is to become the wife of grand opera's handsomest baritone king, thus completing the most charming of romances, one that for many months has kept public attention centered on Geraldine Farrar and Antonio Scotti.

Neither would admit the facts for the longest while, the little American girl and the towering Italian, both declining affirmation or denial, but now the time for equivocation has passed, and Miss Farrar authorizes an announcement.

When this marriage is consummated it will complete the life romance of one of the most noted of American prima donnas.

The first audiences she ever won for her singing was made of up baseball players, members of the National League Club of the early and middle eighties.

Geraldine's father was a professional ball player. Like his daughter, who has succeeded him, he has known what it was to wear the spangles, to be the hero of the crowd, to hear the glorious music of applause, only in his case it was a home run drive, a pretty stop, or difficult catch that won his acclaim, instead of a high note or an artistic trill.

Sid Farrar was his name. He came from Melrose, Mass. He was educated and able, as well as being a very handsome man, swarthy to the point of looking almost like a representative of that Tuscan nation, one of whose sons his daughter is to wed.

Father a Ball Player.

Sid played first base on the Philadelphia National League Club in the days when the incomparable Charley Ferguson, the great King Kelly, the mighty Anson, the graceful Dunlap, the hard hitting Ewing, Clarkson, Keefe, Connor, Brouthers and all those famed stars of another period, were in the zenith of their fame.

Sid was a home loving sort of body. After the game he found little pleasure in the wild kind of fun that used to be the ball player's ideal in those days. He asked nothing better after the game had been won or lost than to go to his home, and listen to his little daughter, "Dina," they called her then, sing some of her songs.

Gradually some of the ball players and a few newspaper men, sporting writers, got the habit of joining the party, to hear the little slip of a girl sing her melodies. None of them were judges of music, none of them knew much about the human voice, and though what they heard pleased them, they little dreamed that they were listening to a voice that was to be the marvel of Europe, and finally rate its possessor among the most notable prima donnas of the world.

Only little Diana had an idea of this kind. She wanted to be a singer. She felt she had the material. If work would give her the place, she would succeed, and so she studied night and day, until her fame had become local, and she was often invited to oblige at little concerts held in her home town.

Sid Farrar's day on the ball field ended. His name dropped from the score cards. He was a back number. He had had his day, and younger men had come to take his position at first base.

But then began to be heard the name of Farrar in another connection.

Stuck to Father's Name.

People didn't pronounce it the same, for the designation of a grand opera prima donna is a very different thing from that of a ball player, so they put the accent on the last syllable, and gave the whole performance a most imposing sound.

This wasn't what Geraldine wanted. She had chosen to stick to her father's name. She had not followed the custom so common among American singers who make good, of selecting some high sounding name by which to conceal their origin in Uncle Sam's country. She remained a thorough American, true to her Massachusetts extraction, and she stuck to her name with pride, determined to add new glory to it, if that lay in her power.

Melba had heard her while still a girl, and declared her to have possibilities of a wonderful future. This sent Geraldine abroad.

She got her first real chance in Germany, and became the sensation of Berlin.

Her career no sooner begun might have ended had she chosen to lend an ear to the pleading of no less a person than the Crown Prince of Germany heir to the throne and belongings of the Kaiser.

It is an open secret that he wanted to wed the beautiful American singer, and in order to consummate the marriage, was willing to go away and renounce his claim to the empire.

The stern old Kaiser interposed, but his will would not have availed, had Miss Farrar listened to the Prince's pleading. But she taught him sense, made him see the impossibility of their union, and thus made possible his present happy union.

Geraldine Farrar as Elsa in "Lohengrin."

Farrar came to the United States. She had a riotous welcome in her own country. She is today one of the most admired prima donnas in the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Tenors Pay Suit.

It is known that several tenor members of the company have paid her suit, but it was not to the cloying tenor accents that the beautiful soprano listened with most attention.

In this case the baritone voice had charms far greater. The artistic and finished Signor Scotti quickly made a place in her interest.

Not often did he have a chance to make love to her on the stage.

In "Madame Butterfly" she was the crushed and heart-broken heroine, but Scotti was only the good friend, in "Rigoletto" the baritone had the part of her father, a stage relationship that should have interdicted thoughts of love; in "Faust" it fell to his lot to upbraid and curse her for her frailty with regard to the tenor hero of the opera; in "Don Giovanni" she, as Zerlina, was merely one of a host of women who briefly chained the attention of the amatory Don.

And so it went. The course of true love on the operatic stage did not run smoothly. It was virtually out of question for the baritone and the soprano to be cast for the roles of lovers, the canons of stage art putting this out of question.

Latest Picture of the Crown Prince of Germany.

Therefore the romance had to progress away from the footlights. It did so with splendid energy. The superb Italian is one of the handsomest men on the operatic stage, and he is one of the greatest actors. He is tall and straight as a splint, with magnetic eyes, and a bearing of easy grace that has ever been the admiration of women. A magnificent master of every resource of the art of costuming, he makes a most regal appearance on the boards.

His skillful dramatic art has made him equally as notable in tragedy as in comedy; in fact, there is nothing that he cannot do.

Scotti Holds Undisputed Place.

Just as Sembrich ranked for so many years as the leading soprano of the company, and Caruso as its principal tenor, so Scotti has for a decade held his place undisputed as the most noted baritone of the company, and many persons have conceded him the place of the world's first baritone.

Members of the company, while fully sympathetic with the romance, have been wondering what will be its effect on the art future of the two great singers.

Will it make them greater artists, or will married happiness perhaps bring about indifference as to their future careers before the public?

Both of them are now rich, particularly Mr. Scotti. They could retire in comfort for the remainder of their lives. Will they want to do so? Is it conceivable that Madame Scotti will become domestic and want a quiet home with her husband far from the distractions of public life.

Will one tend this way, the other to the contrary? It is an interesting problem, but one of the future. Meantime the little prima donna, the true American prima, has the felicitations of all her people on the happy termination of her romance.

HAD DWELLING IN ODD NEST

Deadly "Carolina Tarantula" Caught by Boys on Plantation in That State.

Mr. A. W. Pickens of Garvin township brought to this office Saturday an enormous spider which he called a Carolina tarantula. It was captured by some boys on his plantation.

The spider was an inch and a half long and half an inch broad before having been killed and drawn to its smallest compass. Before being killed it was much larger. The animal was equipped with ten legs, four at the prow and six at the stern, and a particularly wicked looking mouth. The bite of this spider, Mr. Pickens says, is as deadly as that of a rattlesnake.

Some boys on Mr. Pickens' plantation found a peculiar looking hole in the ground and decided to investigate. After digging for a while they came upon an odd looking nest. Prying it open they found the spider inside. The nest was provided with a trap door, which the spider could close after himself as he went into the nest, and would be safe from intruders. Mr. Pickens brought the nest to the city with him. It was a very ingeniously contrived affair and was of almost as much interest as the spider itself.—Anderson Mail.

MUCH RICH LAND IN MINDANAO

Big Island Has Millions of Acres Now Lying Idle.

Americans have taken the acquisition of the Philippines as a matter of fact. The islands are so far away, and there is so much of pressing interest right at hand, that the manner of arranging our new responsibilities and discharging our new obligations, is left absolutely to the government at Washington, says Army and Navy Life. How many American people know, for example, that Mindanao is a little virgin empire, with millions of acres of the richest land in the world, now idle and fallow, but capable of enormous production? An American officer who has just returned from there calls it "the pearl in the golden setting of the archipelago, the promised land for the toilers in the east."

A while ago there was circulated through the islands a petition praying the American people to grant the same trade privileges to the Philippines that have been accorded to Porto Rico, which island, after getting what she wanted and what she needed, jumped her export trade with the United States from $8,500,000 to $28,000,000, and her imports from $9,600,000 to $29,000,000 annually! Porto Rico is only a dot on the map in comparison with the Philippine archipelago, and the benefits accruing to America consumers of her products are slight in contrast with those which would come with the extension of our customs to include the Philippines.

AN UNPOPULAR OFFICIAL

There is one public official that goes begging in many small suburban towns. Nobody wants the position of dog catcher.

"It isn't that we're afraid to handle the beasts," said one man who had declined the honor. "It is the fact that the business of running in dogs gets everybody down on us. I know a man—a first-rate fellow he is, too—who was made dog catcher in a Staten Island village. He had enjoyed the best kind of reputation up to the time he took that position, but before he had held the job three months, hardly a person in the town would speak to him. In the opinion of the general public, to scoop up poor, little, defenseless doggies and cart them away to the pound is the furthest cry of human ignominy. The man who will do such a thing sinks below the level of the official hangman and no longer holds a place in the esteem of his neighbors."

"The trouble with the American people is that they are too restless. They are never satisfied unless they are getting on the cars to go somewhere."

"I know it. My wife has become so used to traveling about that when she goes to bed at night she always calls in the chambermaid and assures her that she will not be able to sleep a wink unless she can have a lower berth."—Chicago Record-Herald.

MORE PINKHAM CURES

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored me to health and made me feel like a new person, and it shall always have my praise."—Mrs. W. P. VALENTINE, 902 Lincoln Avenue, Camden, N. J.

Gardiner, Me.—"I was a great sufferer from a female disease. The doctor said I would have to go to the hospital for an operation, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound completely cured me in three months."—Mrs. S. A. WILLIAMS, R. F. D. No. 14, Box 39, Gardiner Me.

Because your case is a difficult one, doctors having done you no good, do not continue to suffer without giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. It surely has cured many cases of female ills, such as inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, indigestion, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result is worth millions to many suffering women.

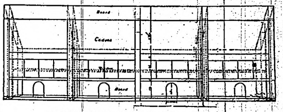
REQUISITES OF PRACTICAL KANSAS CHICKEN HOUSE

Detailed Plans for the Construction of Poultry Shed; Hens' Comfort Must Be Considered as the Most Vital Point.

Many different styles of chicken houses prove equally successful in the hands of poultrymen, so that it is unwise to recommend the universal adoption of any one form. If the following points are given careful study any farmer should be able to build a successful chicken house, suitable to his wants and purse.

The house must be planned for the hens' comfort first and then the owner may add such embellishments as may please his fancy. The hen needs, first of all, floor space, a place to eat and scratch. The more floor space the hen has the better, but the space above should not be too great, so as to maintain the proper temperature from the animal heat of the hens. All things considered, a house just high enough for a man to walk erectly and a floor space of about five square feet per hen would be advisable.



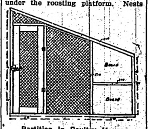
Front Elevation of a Practical Poultry House.

Floors are commonly constructed of earth, boards or cement. Cement floors are perfectly sanitary and easy to keep clean. The objections to their common use is the first cost of good cement floors. Cheaply constructed floors will not last. Board floors are very common and are preferred by many poultrymen, but if close to the ground they harbor rats, while if open underneath they make the house cold. Covering wet ground by a board floor does not remedy the fault of dampness nearly so effectually as would a similar expenditure spent in raising the floor and surrounding ground by grading. All things considered, the dirt floor is the most suitable.

The object of ventilating a chicken house is to supply a reasonable amount of fresh air, and, equally important, to keep the house dry. Ventilation should not be by cracks or open cupolas. Direct drafts of air are injurious, and ventilation by such means is always the greatest when the least needed. A thorough scheme of ventilation is by a system of pipes that removes the foul air from near the floor, while the corresponding fresh air is forced to enter at the top of the room.

Make all roosts on the same level. The ladder arrangement is a nuisance and offers no advantage. Arrange the roosts so that they may be readily removed for cleaning. Do not fill the chicken house full of roosts. Put in only enough to accommodate the hens and let these be on one side of the house. The floor under the roosts should be separated from the feeding floor by a board set on edge, or, better still, a tight roost platform may be built under the perches. By this latter scheme the entire floor of the house is available as a scratching floor.

For laying flocks the nests must be clean, secluded and plentiful. Boxes under the roost platform will answer, but a better plan is to have the nest upon a shelf above the ground floor under the roosting platform. Nests should be constructed so that all parts are accessible to a whitewash brush, that the lice may be eradicated. The less contrivances in a chicken house the better.



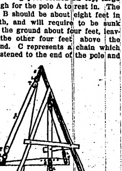
Partition in Poultry House.

A man who is engaged in careful poultry breeding will need one or more yards, the extent and style of which will depend upon the number of pens mated during the breeding season.

DRAWING PIPE FROM GROUND

Device for Pulling Water Conveyor from Earth.

The editor of the Queenslander gives a device for drawing a pipe driven 30 feet into the ground which is commanded to the readers of that paper. According to this plan A represents a pole about 14 feet long and B a strong post forked on top, large enough for the pole A to rest in. The post B should be about eight feet in length, and will require to be sunk into the ground about four feet, leaving the other four feet above the ground. C represents a chain which is fastened to the end of the pole and to the pipe shown at D. E shows a small clamp or dog attached to the end of the pipe to prevent the chain slipping. In order to work the device the pole should fit into the fork so as to leave about four feet on the end to which the pipe is fastened, and 14 feet for a leverage. When the pole is fastened to the pipe two or three men pull the other end down to the ground, and the pipe will then come out a few feet. The clamp can then be moved further down the pipe and the chain fastened near the ground, and the operation repeated till the whole 30 feet of pipe has been extracted. The small figure F shows how the chain can be hooked round the pipe under the clamp when it has been drawn out several feet.



Device for Pulling Pipe.

Value of Shade.

Shade in summer is equal to shelter in the winter for the comfort of live stock. If there are no shade trees in the pasture, put up a temporary shade of boards on poles. This shade may be moved from time to time and placed on poor spots to distribute the manure.

SEVERAL PLANTINGS OF SWEET CORN

Few Better Vegetables Grown for Home Use.

There are few better vegetables grown for home use or for market than sugar corn. A succession of plantings of it should be in every farm garden. Our personal preference is for medium sized to large varieties.

For rapid growth and early maturity the soil for sweet corn should be mellow and very rich. It is impossible to get the soil too rich, and the greater variety of fertilizers that can be used the better. To an abundance of stable manure should be added a liberal amount of poultry droppings, wood ashes and bone meal. Harrow, disk and cultivate all of the fertilizers well into the soil so that the soil and fertilizers will be an even and fine mixture. After the sweet corn is up, stable manure may be sprinkled on the surface between the rows and lightly cultivated for a surface mulch. In dry weather this surface manure will act as a mulch to hold moisture, and in rainy times its richness will be dissolved out and carried to the roots of the growing corn as a liquid fertilizer.

Make the first planting of sweet corn in the very warmest of the garden soil, as the seeds will quickly rot in cold soil. However, if the first planting rots, replanting can easily be done. Begin cultivation just as soon as the corn appears above the ground or give it a harrowing before it is up. Let the shovels of the cultivator run deep for the first time until the plants are about a foot high, after which cultivate only two or three inches deep. Do not be afraid of cultivating too often, for stirring and mixing the soil and keeping down weeds are the making of a good crop.

Mending Tubs.

A tub or a barrel often drops down for want of a hoop. If everybody knew how easy it is to make a hoop from a wire—perhaps a piece of waste telegraph wire often seen by the roadside—the work would not wait. Simply bend the wire around the tub to measure it, remove it and twist it fast. It will not break, and being galvanized it will last indefinitely.

Red Raspberry.

Cuthbert red raspberry is the leading variety of the American class, and is grown from Canada to Florida. It is a hard grower in the far north and is vigorous wherever proper soil conditions are provided.

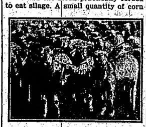
PEA SILAGE FEEDING OF LAMBS IN WISCONSIN

Green Feed Will Eventually Cut a Wide Swath in Beef and Mutton Making As Result of Experiment at Waukesha.

Into the cavernous maw of a silo 70 feet in diameter and 43 feet in height a vast quantity of green feed can be tucked away. From such a silo a Waukesha county (Wis.) firm marketed during the past winter 9,000 fat western-bred lambs. As results in this case showed a profit of around $11,000 better testimony as to the value of silage for lamb finishing purposes could not be desired. For the purpose of making comparisons the firm fed during the winter a smaller band of the same kind of lambs on hay and corn, and that operation barely paid expenses. The Waukesha feeding was largely of an experimental nature and was revolutionary in that the grain ration was reduced to a minimum and silage forced on the stock. Results were so convincing that the ration of last winter, practically one pound of grain per lamb per diem with an unlimited quantity of silage, will be adopted by the firm as its standard. The feature of this feeding was the limited quantity of corn used.

Wisconsin Pea Silage-Fed Lambs Ready for Market.

In the previous year's work self-feeders were used and the lambs given all the screenings they could consume. This resulted in only limited consumption of silage, the lambs filling up on grain. Gains by this method were satisfactory, but cost was excessive and the feeders determined on a radical change. Hand-feeders were substituted and the stock practically forced to eat silage. A small quantity of corn was fed twice daily, the grain ration from beginning to the end of a feeding period of 60 to 70 days never exceeding 1½ pounds per day and not averaging a pound. It was a mixture of corn and oilmeal, the proportion of the latter being limited to one-quarter pound per day. At the outset one-quarter of a pound of corn per head was used, this being gradually increased to the maximum. The previous season, when allowed all the screenings they could eat, the average consumption of grain was three pounds per head. While heavier gains have been made in the feed-lot, from the standpoint of economical production this experiment was satisfactory in every respect. The season's work may be summarized by the statement that lambs fed on hay and a heavy corn ration lost money; fed on silage and a limited grain ration profits were handsome. Corn used in this feeding cost 50 to 63 cents; screenings were worth $16@17 per ton. Had last winter's ration of screenings, three pounds per day, been used the cost per head for grain would have been 2¼ cents. Corn cost but little over one cent per day. The feeders demonstrated, to their own satisfaction at least, that pea silage and corn constitutes a well-balanced ration.



Sheared and Ready to Kill.

Montana mountain-bred lambs were used, as the feeders consider them far superior to plains-bred stock. Every lamb was bought on the Chicago market and in dividing the two bands care was exercised to give each feedlot an equal chance. The first feed began October 19 and ended December 14. The average weight going into the feed-lot was 71 pounds; at the stock yards on selling day 85 pounds. The 3,000 lambs, costing $5@5.25 when put in, sold in one lot at $7 after a 40-day feed on the silage and corn ration. The second feeding period was strung out during the winter, drafts being purchased at the Chicago market as opportunity offered. Investment prices ranged from $5.25 to $7.20 and sale prices of the finished stock from $7 to $8. They went in weighing 75 to 80 pounds. None weighed less than 90 pounds coming out and some reached 104 pounds. All of the second feeding were shorn and while the fat lambs were mainly disposed of before the spring rise in prices (otherwise financial results would have been greater) a booming wool market added materially to the profits. These lambs enjoyed popularity in killing circles. They dressed well and were regarded by buyers as fully up to the standard of lambs fed on hay and grain. The grain delegation brought no better prices than the silage-fed contingent. The grain-fed band consumed more than twice as much grain as the others.

All this relates to pea, not corn silage, and the feed used in this instance was cannery waste. The experiment has determined the feeding value of pea silage in combination with a small corn ration. It indicates possibilities for a vast extension of cattle and sheep feeding in an area not regarded as within the corn belt proper, embracing Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota, where the pea crop thrives.

VALUE OF SHEEP AND GOATS

Their Use in Clearing Brush Land for Cultivation.

Much has been said, written and done of late years regarding the great value of goats clearing brush land for cultivation or for the growth of permanent grass. It is true that goats are great browsers on brushy land and that they will soon clear such land of undesirable growth. However, they are to be recommended for this use only when all the brush and trees on the land are to be removed. If some of the trees are to remain for shade or timber purposes, the goats will bark many of them, causing the meither to die or to become deformed and almost unfit for use.

The writer has just visited a large estate in the hill land of Missouri, where the estate is being partially cleared for permanent blue grass pasture. Undesirable trees are cut out and the best trees of best timber value are left standing. Among the good trees on this land which are preserved for growth and future utility are the black locusts, which are widely known as an excellent timber for fence posts, telephone poles and railroad ties. The goats are not content to browse on the tender sprouts alone, but they persist in chewing the bark from the black locust trees and a number of other valuable trees so as to permanently injure them.

Sheep will keep down sprouts and weeds on cleared land almost as effectively as will goats, and they do not have the pernicious habit of trying to eat the large trees which may be left in the field. If the trees and other undesirable growth are cut out, the sheep will eat off the young sprouts and the foliage, causing the sprouts and the roots of the original stumps to die, allowing intervening spaces among trees to catch in blue grass or other pasture grass. They will not eat the bark from standing trees of any considerable size.

NUBBING OF FARM NEWS.

J. C. Evans of Harlem, Kan., has a fine orchard of 200 persimmon trees. The fruit is about as large as a California plum and he finds a ready market for his product at Kansas City. The 200 trees yield an average income of about one dollar each year.

The largest pumpkin grown in the state of California was raised in Santa Clara county a number of years ago. It weighed 264 pounds.

It is better to raise onions which yield on an average 100 to 125 bushels per acre, even if the price is 50 cents a bushel, than to raise ten-cent cotton.

Nearly one-third of the coal mined in the United States, speaking in round numbers, is burned, not in homes or factories, but by the locomotives.

It is estimated that through lax and improper methods in the handling of milk and cream a loss of over $5,000,000 results annually.

This country consumed 115,000,000 pounds of tea last year and Japan imported 14 per cent. less than ten years ago.

Mending Roofs.

A roof covered with paper or felting can be quickly mended with coal tar. Paint over thickly with warm tar, then lay on a piece of fresh roofing paper, which should be fastened at the edges with roofing brads; then paint some more tar over the patch and over the edges, making a neat waterproof patch which will last as long as the rest of the roof.

"Now," said Horatius, "you might as well come along peaceably and put up your collateral. We propose to stop this speeding in Rome."

in the laundry. All three things are important, but the last is absolutely necessary. No matter how fine the material or how daintily made, bad starch and poor laundry work will spoil the effect and ruin the clothes. DEFIANCE STARCH is pure, will not rot the clothes nor cause them to crack. It sells at 10c a sixteen ounce package everywhere. Other starches, much inferior, sell at 10c for twelve ounce package. Insist on getting DEFIANCE STARCH and be sure of results.

Will Johnson Be Candidate?

upon Ripley Brower as the party's Messiah, and a faction which pins its faith to Eberhart. Frank Eddy said the other day that no Republican could be elected under any circumstances unless Bob Dunn "hollered" for him, and no man has had a better chance of intelligently forming an opinion. Doubtless the other leaders and near-leaders I, have mentioned think that they too cut some ice. Under such circumstances what probability is there that they will agree on a candidate, and what probability is there they can win against as popular a man as Johnson. I was talking the other day, however, to a prominent Republican who has given much thought to the situation, and he has a theory which is not altogether unplausible. 'It's ridiculous'' said he to me, "to assume that under conditions which might easily be worked out, that Bob Dunn or any other single man could influence any appreciable number of voters in the state to vote against what they regard as the public interest. So far as Bob is concerned'' said he, "my observation leads me to conclude that if he has some followers, there are far more, and these are not confined to any section but are scattered all over the state, who would regard any nomination he would under present circumstances favor, with suspicion. Bob may have a personal following in some sections and with some classes of people, but my word for it, he is widely unpopular, and could neither be elected by any possibility himself or give valuable aid to any candidate the party might name. On the whole, if I were the candidate I would rather have his opposition than that he should take a pronounced stand for me, and make a characteristic Dunesque fight.

Not A Political Party.

"The fact of the matter is,'' continued this gentleman, "properly speaking there is no Republican party, and hence the apearance of faction among those who were, and now profess still to be, Republicans. The Century Dicionery defines a party as 'those who favor, or are united to promote certain views or opinions.' Those who now call themselves Republicans cannot, by any stretch of imagination, be said to be united. They are not seeking to promote any views or opinions if they had them, that anybody knows of; hence they do not in any true sense form a political party or a party with a policy. I grant you that there is an alleged organization which calls itself Republican, and uses in connection with its operations the name of party, but in its present chaotic condition it is incapable of either formulating a policy amalgamating its forces or winning public confidence.

No Common Principles.

"While the body of these men calling themselves Republicans put on the seeming of a party torn by faction, there is really no party organization to tear, for the men who in the past have been Republicans have today no common aims and are devoted to no common principles. Hence the tendency among them of congenial persons to separate into groups and to permit themselves to be dominated by men who either think they are now prominent, have been pominent in the past, or have assumed a fictitious prominence which no one has taken the trouble to dispute. Among the man composing these groups there are, however, evidences of a natural tendency to form a party characteristic of every community in which fair government obtains. There are also among them those whose interests or whose inclination is to maintain the recent status; so, for purposes of distinction, I will divide them into two elements the first of which I shall call the 'Progressives,' the second the 'Opporunists.'

Progressives and Opportunists.

"Now the Progressives really wish to form a party. They are looking forward to a process of elimination by which they hope to winnow out the undesirables and get back to first principles. They frankly recognize that the present Republican Organization has no principles. Its adherents have no common purposes. What they say is,—Give us an organization that tands for somthing. Let us outline a real, live, practical policy and bring together those who favor it. That may mean immediate victory, but we've been out in the cold so long we don't mind that. But if our principles are right and we are consistent in supporting them we will win public confidence and nothing can be surer than ultimate success and our party's coming into its own again as the recognized embodiment of a great moral movement.

The Get-Together Crowd.

"The Oportunists, on the other hand, preach everlastingly the doctrine of getting together. Let us sink our differences, they say. What we want is to capture the Government of the state and its patronage. What greater inducement can there be to ask as a unit? If you take up this reform you are certain to offend the Germans, the Swedes or the Norwegians, or if you adopt that one where can you look for campiagn funds? If that 'other's' your policy how can you expect to carry St. Paul and Minneapolis? To Geherna with your principles. What's the constitution between friends? Now let us all take hold and pull together and after next January you'll not be able to find a Democrat in office with a fine toothed comb.

The Gloomy Outlook.

"The only trouble with this program,'' the solon continued, "is that they won't come together; they won't sink their differences. To my mind the Progressives are on the right track. but to me it don't spell an early victory. We may have to wait a good while to see the Democrats ousted. To me the indications are rather toward a greater strength, and it would not greatly surprise me if next year they put up the right sort of campaign to see considerable accession to their representation in both houses and in senate, and in case of a disagreement among Republicans, which now seems more than probable, to find them in a position, if not to elect a United States Senator, at least to say who he shall be.''

BIJOU
Electric Theatre

Saturday Night is Prize Night. A real live baby will positively be given to the holder of the lucky coupon.

Sunday Night "Holy City and a Tour thru Holy Land". No style of picture production appeals to the multitude as does regilious subjects. Such an inauguration must be based on positive sources and convey in the staging, scenery, costumes, etc., the most accurate resemblance to Biblical facts.

¶ In the "Holy City," the first scene is King Herod's Palace where a feast is given in honor of Mary Magdalene, the favorite of the dissolute king. She is rebuked by the Apostle John. ¶ Next follows the roof garden scene on Mary Magdalene's house. Here she is interrupted by Judas Iscariot who imparts information regarding the Nazarine. The tomb and the resurrection of Jesus and his return home is also shown. ¶ Then follows Pilate at the exterior of the Hall of Judgment trying to quell the multitude. ¶ Scenes following show the crucifiction with the tomb and finally the vision of the Angel revealing that Christ has risen.

¶ "Tour of Holy Land," showing the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, tower of David, Temple and Mosque Omar Bethlehem, Garden of Gethsemane, Mt. of Olives, Samantan Inn, Damascus, etc. This film of 1,000 feet depicts life in the Holy Land which has not changed in the last 2,000 years as but very few improvements are allowed by the government and everything is done in the primitive way.

¶ A new feature of the evening will be the lecture given in connection with both subjects, giving a better understanding of subjects.

8:00, 9:00 and 10:00 o'clock.

Monday Night Teachers' Evening. A program especially arranged for the institute teachers.

¶ "A day in the Life of an English Suffragist." This we think will interest teachers as they rapidly becoming suffragists.

¶ "Picturesque Java," scenic.

¶ "Tit for Tat," comedy.

Song, "'Scuse Me, Teacher."

¶ "Dumb Animal Sagacity," educational and scenic.

¶ "School Days," comic.

July Clearance Sale . . . . of High Grade Clothing

Our line of clothing will soon be here and we must make room for it. We seldom have a sale on Kuppenheimer clothing as our line is too good to sacrifice but we have such a heavy line coming for fall that we have decided to make room at all costs. ROBBING THE POOR THIEF RIVER FARMERS

A Doleful Wail Comes From the Metropolis Up Stream.

Beaten at Little Game They Throw Fit and Yell "Stop Thief."

The Thief River Press says that the county commissioners have robbed the poor farmers' ditch fund to get money to pay for building a court house.

That statement is repeated so many times in an attempt to catch the said poor farmers' attention that nearly two columns of space is filled.

A rose by any other name is just as becoming to the bride. Court house bonds by any other name—ditch bonds, for example—are just as effective as instruments to raise funds for county purposes. What's in a name anyhow? If the bonds had another name would it make any difference to the tax payers of the county? Has the credit of the county been impaired any more than if court house bonds had been sold? The commissioners had no objections to selling court house bonds by their right name, but Thief River Falls did object and carried injunction proceedings to the supreme court, boasting that it was only a delay game. Red Lake Falls hadn't played every hand in that game and—well, "there's more than one way of skinning a pig."

The county commissioners did transfer $35,000 from the ditch fund to the general revenure fund and they MAY spend some of that money on the court house. Who knows? What's the difference? The court house will be built anyhow. Of course the Thief River people don't know just how it is going to be done. And that doesn't make any difference.

They object to a four mill court house tax, those horny handed Thief River farmers. Isn't it just as fair to require present tax payers to pay something for county buildings as it is to ask posterity to pay the whole bill?

The commissioners gave four lots and $4,000 for eight lots, and on the land acquired by the county there are two houses. Only a prejudiced mind can figure out that the county has paid an unreasonable price for a court house site.

There isn't much to the big noise. The Thief Riverites are beaten at their little game of delay about which they were boasting and now they are whining.

For the edification of Brother John it will be stated that "John Duffy smiled a sickly smile."

LITTLE GIRL DROWNED

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Roy Fell into Cistern.

The three-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Roy, who reside on the Nicholson farm just west of town, was drowned Monday. Some men employed at the farm were using water from a cistern, the cover of the cistern being left off while the men were at work. The little girl fell into the open cistern and though the men attempted to get her out she was drowned before she could be rescued.

Funeral services were held from St. Joseph's church at 10:30 o'clock, Wednesday morning, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Roy have the sympathy of the community in the sad bereavement that has come to them.

LONGTIN-PIERSON.

Miss Lorraine Longtin and Mr. Victor Pierson Married.

Miss Loraine Longtin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Longtin, and Mr. Victor Pierson of Oberon, North Dakota, were married Tuesday, July 27.

The ceremony was performed at the St. Joseph's church parsonage at 10 o'clock in the morning, Rev. Fr. Fayolle officiating. The bridal couple were attended by the bride's sister and brother, Miss Viola Longtin and Mr. Clifford Longtin, as bridesmaid and groomsman A few relatives of the young people were in attendance at the wedding.

Following the ceremony the wedding party went to the Longtin country home, four miles east of town, where an elaborate wedding dinner was served. Relatives of the bride and groom and a few friends were in attendance at the reception. Mr. and Mrs. Pierson left on the afternoon train for Oberon, North Dakota, where Mr. Pierson is engaged in business and where they will reside. Next month they will go on a trip to Seattle. Mrs. Pierson has many friends here who will wish her much joy in her new home and who extend hearty congratulations to the groom.

School Meeting.

At the annual meeting of Independent District No. 15 held this month it was voted to borrow $10000 from the state on school district bonds and with the proceeds of the sale of the bonds clean up the last of the bonded indebtedness of the district. The rate of interest on the state loan will be four per cent. The district was paying a higher rate, as high as six per cent on some bonds. A bonded indebtedness of $10000 is comparatively small and the financial condition of the district is very satisfactory.

T. A. Crompe and H. H. Hennemuth whose terms of office as members of the board of education expired were re-elected without opposition.

Same Old Story.

"The directors of the farmer' elevator at the station, just south of Thief River Falls, have chosen Hans Hanson to care for their elevator this fall as grain buyer" says the Thief River correspondent to the Duluth Herald. How that town does grow. The station just south is St. Hilaire but it is so insignificant in comparison with its mighty neighbor that it is not worthy a name. The way those natives make the big noise causes one to wonder if they hove ever been far enough away from the tall grass to see Minneapolis or St. Paul or even Bemidji or Crookston.

The town is getting too blamed big. The county commissioners were afraid the county would get tippy from the strain of the great weight at the north end if some precautionary measures were not taken. so theco mmissioners decided to build a magnificent court house in Red Lake Falls—just to serve as an anchor.

Boy Drowned at Fisher.

Nels Peterson, superintendent of elevators for the Red Lake Falls and Crookston milling companies, while in town last Friday received the sad news by wire that his son, fourteen years old, had been drowned. The boy was swimming with some companions at Fisher. He was caught in an undercurrent and was taken with cramps and despite the efforts of his companions, he went down and could not be rescued.

A Tribute to King.

It isn't customary for the Gazette to "puff" anybody on the official staff of the paper, but the senior editor isn't here and this looks like a splendid opportunity to " put one across." The Albert Lea Standard, one of the foremost journals of the state, edited by the veteran H. G. Day, says of him:

Hon. John E. King, state librarian, one of the most able, upright and esteemed officials that has ever served the commonwealth, and for many years recognized for his talents as an editor, was deservedly honored at the recent national convention of librarians by being elected its president. It is likewise an honor to Minnesota and Gov. Johnson's administrations is justly distinguished, not only through Mr. King but through other officials who have elevated and given high character to the public service surpassing, it is but true and fair to say, that of any previous executive of the state.

Managers Anderson & Wander of the local Opera House have secured Carl Deane in an Exposure of the Present day Methods of Faking Mediums. Owing to the rank frauds perpetarted by mediums traveling throughout the country, several state legislatures have taken action in the matter, and people generally are interested in the subject. Dr. Deane actually demonstrates the various methods used by these fakers, and in such a clear manner that no one need be duped after seeing one of his Exposures. Every citizen will be glad to know just how these things are done. Mr. Deane appears at the Opera House, Monday, August 2. General admission 25c; children 10c. Reserved seats 35c. CO. FAIR NEXT WEEK.

Big Pumpkin Show at Thief River Falls Next Week, Aug. 4, 5, 6.

Though pumpkins aren't ripe, the time for the Red Lake county fair is, and the exhibit will be held at Thief River Falls next week—Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, Aug. 4, 5 and 6. No doubt it will be a good fair. There will be exhibits of agricultural products, products of the dairy, and a good show of live stock.

As show features there will be a race program, a "pike" and other attractions.

THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF BANKING

Interesting Story of Politics In the Creation of the Department.

Gossipy Comments on Politics and Things by Paul Pry.

St. Paul, July 26.

The new banking department which has just been organzed and will open August 1 will add something to the expense of the state government, though not as much as the salary list would indicate. The major portion of the expense connected with it will be borne by the banks which, by the terms of the law are required to pay an annual fee ranging from $25.00 for banks having a capital of less than $15000 to $125.00 for banks having a capital of $1,000,000 or more.

Bank Supervision.

The increased efficiency for state supervision of banks made possible by the new law will be cheaply purchased at what it will cost. As the stability of banks is a matter which concerns everybody, and as when a bank fails and confidence is undermined and business goes smash, the workingman who depends on his day's labor for his day's bread shares with the depositor and the stock-holder the effects of the financial catastrophe it is manifestly in the public interest that state supervision of those quasi-public institutions should be thorough and effective. And it is more likely to be thorough and effective when it is the whole business of a department than where the duty of supervising state banks is imposed on an official who has already as much as a man should be asked to do in examining the books of state, county and city officials.

Provision of the New Law.

In addition to the banks, under the terms of the new law the banking department is given supervision over trust companies, building and loan associations and institutions of similar character. In order that the work may be systematically done the law provides that the state shall be divided into eight banking districts, each having an approximately equal number of banks. To each of these districts an examiner is assigned. The examiner is required to examine each bank in his district at least twice a year and, if the task proves too great, authority is given the superintendent to employ such additional assistance as may be necessary to the end that a thorough examination be made as often as the law require or as in the judgment of the Superintendent of banks such examination may be advisable.

The Salary List.

The official force of the department consists of a superintendent of banks at a salary of $5,000 a year; a deputy superintendent who is to be paid $2,500; eight examiners at $2,500 a year each; an office clerk at $1,800 and two stenographers at $900, and such other employes as may be necessary. For the payment of salaries $36,000 is appropriated and a further sum of $15,000 as a contingent fund from which will be paid traveling expenses of the examiners and such other expenditures as may be made from time to time.

Superintendent Galarneault.

In making appointments to the offices created by the new law Governor Johnson has exercised his usual good judgment and appears to have had rather in mind the importance and responsibility of the service to be rendered than to be influenced by motives of mere political expediency. It was to be expected, that other things being equal, the governor would prefer to have one of his own political faith and a man with whom he had been intimately associated at the head of a department of such importance, but it does not appear that in selecting his subordinates' political consideration have been allowed to enter into the matter. And it is doubtful if the whole state had been searched with a view only to his efficiency a better man could have been found for superintendent of banks than John B. Galarneault of Aitkin. He impresses one at once as a man of affairs. Of fine presence, dignified though affable, courteous to visitors and associates, candid and outspoken, he at once inspires confidene. His capacity has been tested in various positions of large responsibility. On every ground the selection has been well made.

The Official Staff.

In selecting his subordinates but little consideration appears to have been given to their political affiliations: much to their qualifications. The men who in the public examiner's office have proved most efficient in the kind of work the bank examiners will have to do have been transferred to the new department. The first of these to be mentioned is Harry B. Hill of Faribault. He is a nephew of the late Bishop Whipple, a very capable accountant, and, as it happens, a Democrat. W. R. O'Hearn of Minneapolis, although one wouldn't think from his name, is a Republican. So is E. F. Kendrick of St. Paul. A. M. Becker of Adrian is a Democrat. These have been transferred from the public examiner's to the banking department. The other four examiners, who are new appointees, are W. W. Churchill of Rochester, F. E. McGregor of Crookston, O. I. Brandvold of Dalton, and A. L. Roth of St. Paul. D. D. Devine of Waseca, who had charge of the banking bureau of the public examiner's office, is made deputy superintendent of the new department. George L. Rosenberger of St. Cloud is the office clerk, and Miss Hartman of Mankato one of the stenographers.

Some Inside History.

There is some interesting history in connection with the passage of this law which in part accounts for some of the whispered conferences which are being held in some inner offices at the state capital, and the glum look of some of the state officials when the banking department is mentioned. Indeed I do not believe the banking department bill would, have been introduced if some active politician had not taken umbrage at Public Examiner Schaefer's official activity and had made up their minds to discipline him by splitting up his department and taking away from him the supervision of the state banks, a work in which he took great interest. It will be remembered that Mr, Schaefer criticised the state treasury and suggested reform in the auditor's office.

Putting Up a Job on the Governor.

When the legislature convened, therefore a group of politcal busy bodies, among whom the Secretary of State, was specially active, took advantage of the natural wish of the bankers of the state to have the banking bureau divorced from the Public Examiner's department, to frame up a job looking towards the creation of this new department and the vesting of the patronage of it in themselves. With this in view a group of banker politicians was organized with Wm. E. Lee as its principal executive agent. These men undertook the self imposed task of drafting the bill. According to their plan, which was embodied in the original bill, they proposed to create a commission which was to usurp the governor's appointment powers. The governor, it is true, was to be a member of the commission, but so also were the state treasurer, and the state auditor, and the job was all framed up when the

CALLS IT "WONDERLAND".

First Man to Register Name of Farm.

Martin M. Bothun, residing north of Thief River Falls, is the first man in the county to have the name of farm propety registered under the law passed by the last legislature. Nine acres of his land, a beauty spot on the Thief River just north of the townsite, he has named "Wonderland" and the name was filed at the office of the register of deeds July 15. The name is now a part of the legal description of the land. The naming of farms should become more common. It is common practice in the eastern states and farms are much better known by their names than by thelegal descriptions and there is much less confusion and trouble in looking up records. It would be interesting to know just how many farmers in the county cannot give the desciptions of their lands without going to a map to figure them out.

When a name is filed at the register's office the owner has acquired a property right to the name and no other farm in the county can be given the same name. It costs only fifty cents and a very little touble to get the name registered. It is worth much more and no doubt many more farms will be named when the value of the name is understood.

Important Matter.

There is much official printing of importance in this issue of the Gazette—the proceedings of the county board of equalization and the proceedings of the July meeting of the county commissioners.

SUMMER SCHOOL CLOSES FRIDAY

Very Successful School—Nearly One Hundred Teachers Enrolled.

Principal L. P. Harrington Here For Last Three Days.

The summer training school for Red Lake county will close Friday afternoon after a very succesful four weeks term. Nearly one hundred teachers and prospective teachers have been enrolled in the school and excellent work has been done.

Supt. L. P. Harrington of the Crookston agricultural school is here for the last three days of the summer school and is addressing the teacher on the subject of agriculture and interesting them in the industrial contest for boys and girls of the rural schools. It is probable that something will be done with the industrial contest this year and in years to come the work of the industrial contest and agricultural instruction will be taken up systematically.

Many of the teachers will remain for the examinations next week. Others, living at and near Thief River Falls, will take the examinations in that city. Examinations will be conducted in both cities next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

MRS. JULIA GJERBERG.

Passed Away at Home in This City Sunday.

Mrs. Julia Gjerberg, one of the pioneers of Red Lake Falls, passed away at the home in this city Sunday morning, July 25, at the age of seventy-six years. Funeral services were held Monday morning, conducted by Field Missionary D. K. Laurie, and interment was at the Red Lake Falls cemetery.

Deceased was born in Christiania, Norway, Aug. 5, 1833. She had been a resident of Red Lake Falls for twenty-six years, coming here with her husband in 1883. She is survived by three chidren, Mrs. M. Kress and John Gjerberg of this city, and Mrs. J. Johnson who resides in Norway. Mr. Gjerberg died about three years ago. Deceased had many friends in Red Lake Falls who sympathize with the relatives in their bereavement.

Police Battle With Strikers

Serious Rioting May Call Out Wisconsin State Troops to Prevent Violence

STRIKER IS FATALLY INJURED

Strikers Shot By Police Who Declare That They Fired Shots In the Air.

Kenosha, Wis., July 22.—Anticipating a further outbreak following the rioting early today at the plant of the N. R. Allen Sons company, tanners, when three strikers were shot, state troops are being held in readiness in Milwaukee tonight to proceed on a moments notice to take charge of the situation here. A large force of deputy sheriffs, armed with riot guns is guarding the tannery tonight. Hundreds of the striking employes, nearly all of whom are either Lithuanian, Polish or Hungarians, stood in sullen groups about the plant throughout the day and until late in the night. Others attended a meeting called by the mayor, looking toward a settlement of the strike.

Since the rioting this morning no serious disturbance has occurred. In the opinion if the local authorities however, little would be required to start violence afresh. General Otto H. Falk, in charge of the Wisconsin state troops, was on the ground and declared that at the first sign of further rioting, that he would order a troop of cavalry and two regiments of infantry to the scene. The men were said to be under orders and a special train being held in readiness for their transportation.

The rioting began today when the guards attempted to disperse strikers who gathered in numbers about the entrance of the plant to jeer at two hundred or more men who remained at work. As the last of the men entered a rush was made by these outside to get into the building. Simultaneously a deputy and a policeman were cut off by the strikers and attacked with bricks and clubs. The guards drew their revolvers and charged the mob, firing in the air. When the strikers retreated, one of their number was found to have been shot in the groin. He is believed to be fatally injured. Deputy Sheriff Lewis Moorehouse and Policeman Nels Nelson, on whom the attack was made, were both painfully injured about the head.

The shooting caused a cessation of hostilities at that point, but a few minutes later another riot occurred a block further along the street from the plant when the police attempted to arrest the leaders of the strikers. The police had made an arrest and were about to put their man in a patrol wagon when the strikers again attacked them. In the fight which followed two other strikers were shot through the legs. The police assert that the injuries to the strikers were occasioned either by the strikers themselves in the excitement, or through glancing bullets. They declared that they fired in the air in every instance. A dozen or more arrests followed throughout the day and tonight the police declare they have the worst agitators behind the bars. They are taking no chances, however, and a large number of additional deputies were sworn in during the day for duty at the plant.

Immediately following the rioting today, Sheriff Gunner telegraphed Governor Davidson asking for troops. General Falk was communicated with and arrived in Kenosha at noon. Tonight he declared that the situation was critical and that a renewal of the disturbances would be a signal for the bringing in of the troops.

WANTS RING MONEY.

Dekalb Doctor Attaches Former Sweetheart's Property.

Chicago, July 22.—Dr. J. A. Freudenberg of Dekalb, brought an attachment suit for 500 in Dekalb county against his former sweetheart, now Mrs. Hazel Soderstrom of Beresford, S. D. The affidavit for the attachment of a lot owned by Mrs. Soderstrom recites that the amount sought is for money, merchandise, etc., advanced to the defendant by the physician. Attorney for the plaintiff explains that the "merchandise" includes a valuable diamond engagement ring and other costly presents.

Dr. Freudenberg formerly was a member of the staff of the Cook county hospital, and he met Hazel Delbridge three years ago when she was a student at the Dekalb state normal school. They became engaged a year later, and their marriage was set for this week.

Two weeks ago the physician received a note from his fiancee's mother, saying that Hazel had married Axel Soderstrom a druggist of Beresford, who first met her only two weeks prior to the marriage on June 30.

Fargo.—Reports from different parts of the state indicate that Commissioner Ladd is warm on the trail of violators of the pure food law.

ROB STATE BANK AT TULARE

Thieves Secure $1,900 and Escape—Explosion Arouses Citizens.

Aberdeen, S. D., July 22.—The report reached here late yesterday of the robbery of the state bank at Tulare, S. D., Tuesday night. The robbers secured $1,900 and got away They cut the telephone and telegraph wires to shut off communication with outside towns. The citizens were aroused by the explosion, but the robbers were too quick for them.

Cloudburst Hits North Wisconsin

Heavy Loss in Terrible Storm Which Sweeps Over North of Badger State

BRIDGES AND DAMS ARE DESTROYED

Summer Resort Country Hard Hit—Homes Destroyed—Loss $750,000.

Milwaukee, Wis., July 21.—Reports from northern Wisconsin, particularly in the neighborhood of Ashland, tell of serious losses as a result of a cloudburst, the estimates of the loss varying from $400,000 to $750,000.

Bridges and dams are reported as being carried out, and the situation on the Odanah Indian reservation is now the most serious, as the high stage of the water is just beginning to affect the redmen's section. No trains are running to Ashland on any road, only one Northwestern train having been able to get through since morning. The river power plant is wrecked at a heavy loss, the entire dam at the White river rapids being carried out. This property alone cost $100,000 and is practically a complete ruin.

In the summer resort country enormous damage has been done to small summer homes. Mills on the Odanah reservation are wrecked and in the neighborhood of Mellen every house in the valley of one of the small streams is reported to have been carried away. The state fish hatchery at Bayfield was seriously damaged.

TEN DROWNED IN HURRICANE

Storm Sweeps Over Galveston—Men Blown Into Sea.

Galveston, Texas, July 21.—Ten dead is the total number of lives lost so far as is known in the hurrican which swept over the Gulf of Mexico and struck Galveston this morning and continued until after midday.

While the city of Galveston was held safe against the fury of the storm, by the governments two million dollar sea wall, far out in the gulf on Tarpon island, seven miles from the city, where the storm whipped over the jetty into the bay, ten persons were washed from the rocky promontories into the gulf.

Boats tonight are searching the bay for the bodies, but so far have been unsuccessful. Those drowned were members of a fishing party and employes of the Tarpon pier, marooned in the jetty. Boats were sent to their assistance late today and it was learned that the house in which they sought refuge had been washed away.

MANY INDICTMENTS FOUND.

Resort Keepers are Indicted by Chicago Grand Jury.

Chicago, Ill., July 21.—State's Attorney Wayman's spectacular crusade against "protected-vice" in this city resulted in 105 indictments against resort-keepers and gamblers being returned by the grand jury today.

The men hit were proprietors of Chinese gambling houses, resort-keepers in the west side Levee district, and "blind pig" men from the suburbs. According to Mr. Wayman the crusade has only begun.

A determined effort is being made to get at the bottom of the protected system that is said to exist. Several policemen have been summoned to appear before the grand jury and explain the conditions that were found to exist.

DEMAND BANKER'S CASH.

At Point of Revolver St. Louis Man Requests Loan.

St. Louis, Mo., July 21.—Being refused a loan, M. L. Dawson, a realty dealer, demanded at the point of a revolver this afternoon that S. Zeelig, president of the Savings Trust Company give Dawson all the money that Zeelig had in his pockets.

Zeelig gave Dawson $390 and as soon as Dawson left the bank building, Zeelig opened fire with his revolver. Dawson fired in return but all the bullets went wild. Dawson surrendered to the police and Zeelig went to the police station to appear against him.

STRIKE IS NOT SETTLED.

Standard Steel Car Company Employes Refuse to Work.

Butler, Pa., July 21.—Despite the assurances of the officials of the Standard Steel Car company through Father Baczewski that as soon as conditions warranted an increase in wages it would be granted its employes, the striking workmen at the plants of the car company, the Butler Wheel company and the Standard Forged Steel Wheel company, late today voted to remain idle until their employers signed a written agreement granting them immediate increases of wages and refunds on back rentals of company's houses.

EARNED MONEY, SAYS HENEY

Interviewed in Alaska, He Denies House Charges.

Cordova, Alaska, July 21.—Francis J. Heney, the San Francisco prosecutor, who is at Abercrombie Canyon, fifty-five miles up the Copper river, was notified over the telephone today of the statement made in the house or representatives by Representative Tawney regarding payments to him from the federal government.

Mr. Heney said:

"I have not received a dollar in fees except for services rendered prior to the commencemnt of the San Francisco graft cases," said Mr. Heney.

DRAINAGE IS NOT AFFECTED

PORK BARREL DECISION WILL NOT PREVENT IMPROVEMENT.

SURVEYING THE ONLY QUESTION

State Engineer Ralph Confident That Court Rulings Settles the Matter—Good News for Many Counties in State.

St. Paul.—There is absolutely no danger that the decision in the pork barrel case will tie up any of the state drainage work, according to George Ralph, engineer of the state drainage commission. In proof he points to several decisions of the supreme court covering the point. The only thing which has not yet been tested is the topographical survey, which the state and the federal government are co-operating in making, but Mr. Ralph cannot see how a survey can be called a work of internal improvement. "If that is prohibited by the constitution, I do not see how the state can do any work of any kind," said Mr. Ralph yesterday.

Decisions Are Cited.

The drainage laws of the state, codified and annotated by W. J. Brown of Warren, have been published just a few days. The book cites a number of decisions of the court on the constitutionality of the drainage laws, and in the case of Rippe vs. Becker, 56 Minn., 100, the court says that "works of internal improvement as used in the constitution means any kind of public works except those used by the state in the performance of its governmental functions, the preservation of the public health," etc.

Drainage ditches are nearly always held to be necessary for the preservation of public health, and that is the saving clause which prevents them from coming under the class of internal improvements which the state is forbidden by the constitution to take part in.

In the case of Lien vs. Board of County Commissioners, 80 Minn., 56, the court said that "the authority of the legislature to enact drainage laws is derived from the police power, the right of eminent domain or the taxing power, and is undoubted."

Holds Appropriation Legal.

In the same case the court held that the purpose of a ditch must be public, but it is not necessary in order to constitute a public use that the whole community or any large portion thereof should participate in the use, or that all should be equally benefited. The benefits may be limited to the inhabitants of a small locality.

In the case of Utick vs. County Board of Polk county the court said the benefit to highways is sufficient public use to sustain the taking of private land for public use.

In most cases the money expended by the state for drainage is only to pay for the benefits to state's land, but in an opinion last October Attorney General Young upheld the spending of money by the state in drainage in cases when no state land is involved on the theory that the police power of the state is involved.

Still Considering McCleary.

Washington, July 14.—The president is still inquiring as to the qualifications of J. T. McCleary, of Minnesota, for the office of director of the mint, and probably will announce his conclusion soon. It is an interesting feature of this situation that the McCleary appointment, if made, will be the president's personal appointment. It is the understanding that the appointment will be made in time for confirmation by the senate before adjournment.

WOMEN CAUGHT SELLING LIQUOR

Grand Rapids.—Warrants for alleged blind piggers in the vicinity of Nashwauk and Marble were sworn out and Sheriff Riley rounded up eight, six of whom were women, and brought them to town. All pleaded guilty and were fined the minimum provided by law.

It is said the illegal traffic is quite extensive among foreign miners on the range. It is difficult, however, to get evidence, and the conviction of the offenders is generally a slow and tedious process.

JAILED FOR CONTEMPT.

Sequel to Alleged Theft of $20,000 in Seattle Develops.

Duluth.—An interesting sequel to the theft of $20,000 from Mrs. A. J. Shea, of Eveleth, in Seattle six weeks ago and the subsequent recovery of the money came to light today when Mr. Shea was arrested for contempt of court in his refusal to pay $6,000 on a $20,000 judgment secured against him by his former attorney, J. L. Washburn.

Mr. Shea sold the timber on his claim for $20,000, gave the money to his wife, who went to the west with it. The story of the theft was doubted by the Seattle police, and their suspicions were more or less confirmed when $15,000 of the sum was reported to have been returned.

Shea was examined on supplemental proceedings and ordered to pay Mr. Washburn $6,300 of the judgment secured on a note, and for attorney's fees and incidental expenses. He failed to do this and was today jailed for contempt of court. His hearing will come up tomorrow; bail was refused him.

TELLS HER GUN ISN'T LOADED.

Mrs. Griffis Thinks Revolver Spoils Coat's Shape and Takes It From Quigley's Pocket.

Duluth.—Byron Quigley, aged twenty-one years, son of James R. Quigley, of Duluth, was accidentally killed at Pokegama Lake, Minnesota, by Mrs. John Griffis, of Bovey, Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffis, Quigley and one other person formed an auto party from Bovey to the lake. Quigley had a revolver in his coat pocket, and Mrs. Griffis took it, with the remark that it was heavy and would get the coat out of shape.

She expressed some fear of the weapon, but Quigley assured her it was unloaded.

She then handled it more carelessly, with the result that the revolver was discharged and Quigley shot and almost instantly killed.

Quigley was a junior in the Duluth Central high school.

BEMIDJI MAN GETS OFFICE.

Is Elected Grand Tyler by Elks in Los Angeles.

Bemidji.—Bemidji lodge, No. 1052, B. P. O. Elks, was highly honored in Los Angeles, Cal., on Tuesday when Charles L. Decker, a member of Bemidji lodge, was elected grand tyler of the grand lodge of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks of the United States.

The bestowing of the office upon Mr. Decker was a re-election, he having filled the position of tyler very acceptably last year.

Mr. Decker was the first exalted ruler of Bemidji lodge and was one of the prime movers in securing the lodge for this city. He is a very enthusiastic and staunch Elk and his many friends in Bemidji are extending him congratulations on the honor bestowed upon him and this city by the supreme lodge of Elks.

LAUNCH SERVICE 'TWEEN LAKES.

Thirty-Mile Voyage Possible on Detroit and Pelican and Their Channels.

Barnesville.—It is now possible for visitors at Detroit lake and Pelican lake to enjoy a thirty-mile trip by boat. The gasoline launch Dakota is making the trip twice daily between Detroit lake and Pelican lake. Owing to the fact that the different channels have not yet been made of the required depth, it takes three hours to make the trip each way, instead of two hours, as originally planned. The two-hour schedule will easily be maintained as soon as the channels are in proper condition.

Likely to Lose Out.

Washington, D. C.—James T. McCleary, of Mankato, former congressman and recently second assistant postmaster general, has landed on the rock of "political influence" in Washington.

The position of director of the mint, the $5,000 treasury post, which it was understood had been picked for him, has become the center of turbulent sea of political clamoring and in the contest for the position, it is more than likely the Minnesota man will be left out of the calculations.

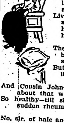
The KITCHEN CABINET

"SQUEAKING DOORS."



THEY say I'm rather delicate and puny-like and pale,
I'm always rather poorly; my constitution's frail.
But I have noticed all my life that folks with aches and twinges,
Live ages! It's the squeaking door that hangs long on its hinges!

There was my Uncle Reuben; always seemed so strong and well,
But people say he can't live long, since that pneumonia spell,
And Cousin John—he's always bragged about that wife o' his,
So healthy—till she up and died with sudden rheumatiz.

No, sir, of hale and hearty folks we cannot be too sure;
"The good die young," and nobody, by rights, can feel secure.
Of folks that seem so gay and peart, we can't be certain, ever.
But sickly ones, like squeaking doors, will creak and squeak forever.

The Banting System.

This scheme of diet was first popularized by William Banting of London, England, who addressed to the public a letter on Corpulence, in 1863.

Banting suffered from surplus flesh so extreme as to force him to "go downstairs backward." He tried various medicines and forms of exercise without success, until finally advised to abstain from "bread, milk, butter, sugar and potatoes."

In lieu of these he adopted a diet of lean meat, fish, any vegetable (except potatoes, and a limit of one ounce of bread at a meal.

On this regimen Banting reduced his weight marvelously. He found sugar to be the most fattening—five ounces in one week adding one pound to his weight. "Milk, sugar, and butter are the human beans," he said, because he found them to have the same effect that a diet of beans have upon a horse, very fattening.

The characteristic of the Banting diet is the great predomination of proteids. Carbohydrates, of which sugar and potatoes are so largely composed, are strictly forbidden.

Every scheme of diet for the reduction of flesh includes advice against variety in food, as that tends to increase appetite.

BACK HOME.

LAST summer I made up my mind,
I'd take a holiday,
And go back to the home I had
Not seen for many a day.
But people said: "You're foolish, Jane,
It's such a wild-goose chase.
Your family and friends are dead—
Why, you won't know the place!"

But all the same, I went, and my!
I had a splendid time!
I started when the bloom and blush
Of summer was in prime.
'Tis true, my girlhood friends were gone,
But every stick and stone
Was full of them—with memory
You know, we're not alone.

The children all were gone, but there
The old brick school-house stood;
The little bridge; the crooked path;
Forget them? Ah, who could!
The trees, the everlasting hills,
The brook, the sky for frame,
All these were there, and to my eyes
The old home was the same.

Appropriate Salads.

To serve after a fish course or heavy meats the salad should be a crisp vegetable, preferably cucumbers or tomatoes, with French dressing

With game, serve chicory, watercress or any kind of lettuce.

With roasts, the best salad is of lettuce with apple or any light fruit.

Garlic in potato salad is liked by epicures and a clove of garlic rubbed around the salad bowl is enough to give it flavor.

Heavy meat salads are sometimes served at dinner, but they do not interfere with the delicate salad which accompanies the meat or fish. They must, however, be served first; no salad after the meat.

Bridget's Beatitudes.

Blessed are the pantry shelves which are painted white and then finished with a thin coat of white enamel. They are easily kept clean, and dirt cannot hide from sight.

Blessed is the kerosene for the removal of tar from the hands or china.

Blessed is the pan of water placed in the oven with the potatoes to hasten their baking.

Blessed is the little boiling water added to the omelet while it is cooking to prevent its getting tough.

Blessed is the white of egg applied to the inside of jelly molds or glasses. The jelly will then turn out easily.

"Empyreuma."

This is the word with which cooks denominate the slight burnt taste of meat, fish or any animal dish. It is not always unpleasant, and, indeed, in some places on the continent of Europe, it is thought to add an attraction.

To Wash Lettuce.

Add salt to the water; it helps to loosen the dirt, sand and the tiny bugs harbored by the leaves.

Scum on Jelly.

This should all be removed before pouring into glasses, jars, etc. Otherwise, air is allowed to enter as the scum evaporates.

Olive Barton [illegible]

His Four Seasons.

An amusing story is told by Sir W. H. Holland of the answer given by a London waif to a Salvation Army captain. The zealous officer had asked the boy what work he did to provide him with food, etc., and the reply was: "I pick strawberries in the summer, I pick hops in the autumn, I pick pockets in the winter, and oakum for the rest of the year."

THE PROVING OF THE PAWN

A CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE STORY

AUTHOR'S NOTE.

The material facts in this story of circumstantial evidence are drawn from an actual recorded case, only such change of names and local color being made as to remove them from the classification of legal reports to that of fiction. All the essential points of evidence, however, are retained.

THE Calf Skin club expected a good story from Judge Adams, and when his turn came upon the list, every member was in his seat around the long table. It was with further satisfaction that they watched him take from his pocket a manuscript. That meant careful preparation and that full justice would be done to the story. When the pipes were all going well Judge Adams arose in his place and took up the sheets before him; and here is what they contained:

The tale that I shall tell you this evening is one that occurred in my own experience. For reasons that will appear, it never became a cause celebre, yet I think it offers sufficient of the unusual to be entitled to a place among these records of the club.

As did many of our members I made my first acquaintance with the law in a small town. Almost every member of the company of young men with which I was raised was either a lawyer, the son of a lawyer or a student of the law. Our loafing place in the day time and our meeting place in the evening was always some one or the other of the many law offices. We grew up in fact amid an atmosphere of law calf and briefs.

It was a fantastic crowd, full of quaint conceits and odd fancies. One of these resulted in the formation of an organization the like of which I have not known before or since. They called it "The Gentleman's Club," but had it been named the "Practical Joker's Club" the title would have been more fitting. Its members—well, to enumerate them by their bizarre titles will give you the best idea of the vagaries of our idle brains. There was the Governor of the Cigar Islands in the person of Davies, a brilliant student who had already made his mark as a stump speaker. There was Garrity, otherwise the Duke of Vermillion, who could cite by section and chapter a parallel to any case you might mention in the Illinois reports up to the one hundred and thirty-fourth volume; he quit at Vol. 134 and went back to Blackstone. There was little Tom Childress, dignified by the title of Lord Mayor of Conlogue, who used to amuse himself by turning Cooley's Constitutional Law into Latin blank verse. And there was Diaz, a ranting Irishman with a Spanish name, who claimed to be the sole surviving member of the Patriotic Order of Sons of Shay's Rebellion, who loved a joke as he did the smoky distillations of his ancestors' native isle and who gloried in the title of Lord High Admiral of the Boyne, which, all history to the contrary, he declared to be the scene of a great Irish victory.

There were lesser lights with lesser titles and lastly there was "The Pawn." "The Pawn" was too handsome to be popular. He was also too quiet. He certainly thought a great deal, but he seldom said anything. He was admitted to the club only on suffrance and only in the capacity of a pawn. His two consuming ambitions were to try a case before a jury and to be a full fledged member of the "Gentleman's Club," with a title. If England's queen had offered him the ribbon of the bath he would have declined it for these. His name, which is unimportant, as he was never known otherwise than as "The Pawn," was Chester Easter.

The club was in session in the office of Diaz. "The Pawn" was not present.

"I think," said Diaz, solemnly, "it is about time 'The Pawn' was initiated. We haven't done anything to him lately. If we don't stir him up he will forget he's living."

Then the club went into executive session and plotted the undoing of "The Pawn."

"The Pawn" at this time was giving little thought to anything save the whims and caprices of black-eyed Mary Ashton. Mary was the soul of fickleness, and having broken every youthful heart in the town except that of "The Pawn," she bethought herself of him and she found in him a willing, yet a determined subject. "The Pawn" loved deeply as he could hate deeply. He was not one who would give up easily an object he had set out to win, especially if that object had flashing black eyes, shining jet hair and cheeks and lips that would set the blood coursing through colder veins than his.

To accomplish the plan which the "Gentleman's Club" had fixed upon it was necessary that "The Pawn" should be enticed to one of the nightly meetings. This at last was brought about by Diaz, arch diplomat of the crowd. The club was gathered in the paternal Diaz' law office when "The Pawn" slipped in, took his seat and sat in discreet silence.

"I see," said Davies, addressing Tom Childress, "that you and Mary Ashton have made it up.

"The Pawn" shifted uneasily in his chair and his cheeks flamed. His persecutors had no idea of the consuming jealousy of Childress that had long obsessed him.

Before he could decide which course to pursue a diversion occurred. Garrity jumped to his feet, strode over to Childress, and shaking his fist in his face shouted:

"Tom Childress, you're an infernal liar. I'm going to that dance with Mary Ashton. She promised me this afternoon."

"I'm a liar, am I," said Childress, slowly rising to the full limit of his five feet five and squaring off for battle. "You've got to prove those words, Garrity."

"I'll prove them on you, you lying pup," shouted Garrity. "You can't come up here and talk lightly of the girl I love. There, take that—!"

The blow fell and instantly was returned. Then somebody put out the light. In the fitful light from the windows the room seethed with the confusion of crashing chairs, the thud-thud of rapidly exchanged blows and the labored breathing of the combatants. Then the door opened letting in a flood of cool air. There was a rush of struggling bodies and, "The Pawn," still clasping an open knife, felt himself borne along with the crowd.

Childress was in the fore and under the rays of the electric light on the corner his face showed red and bloody. He seemed to be dripping with gore. He was. It took a whole bottle of red ink.

He saw "The Pawn" and started up the stairway shouting:

"There he is! He cut me! See, fellows; he's got a knife!"

The conspirators slipped quietly away while Diaz went back to lock up the office and perchance, manufacture additional evidence.

When he entered "The Pawn" was still standing in the middle of the floor with his knife gripped tightly.

"Come, come, Chess," said Diaz, "you'd better quiet down. You've done enough for to-night. Childress is cut pretty bad, I guess. The boys are taking him home. What possessed you to butt in, anyway?"

"Look here, Diaz," said "The Pawn," "you're a friend of mine. Now I didn't cut Childress, but I wish I had. I'd like to kill him. I'm afraid that's all true that he said about Mary."

"Well, what if it is? She's not worth fighting for," answered Diaz. "Come on, you'd better go home and in the morning it won't bother you a bit."

In the meantime the further details of the plot were worked out over a table in the back end of "The Gold Eagle Exchange," where other conspirators were waiting.

When they reached McCurdy's office the "court" was already in session. Had "The Pawn's" mind been capable of connected thought he would have observed that the court, the attorneys and the spectators, all were members of the "Gentleman's Club."

"The Pawn" was led to a chair in front of the magistrate's desk. McCurdy read several docketed entries and each case was continued at the request of some one of the young attorneys present until he reached the entry:

"The People of the State of Illinois against Chester Easter; Assault with Intent to Kill."

"Is the state's attorney present?" inquired the magistrate.

"If the court please," said Davies, "the state's attorney has deputized me to try this case, as he is out of town and it seems to be the wish of all the parties to avoid publicity as much as possible."

"Who is for the defense?" inquired McCurdy.

Walter Linton, a brilliant young attorney, went over to "The Pawn" and held a whispered conversation. Then he announced that he would defend the prisoner.

"Will the defendant have a jury?"

"We elect to try the case before the court," said Linton.

Davies opened for the state and in words of fire he painted the awful treachery of "The Pawn" who, too cowardly to battle in his own behalf, had waited until his rival was engaged in a "friendly scuffle" with another and then had slipped in and delivered the poltroon's blow. He trusted that the real cause of the rivalry might not be made apparent. It was no wish of the state to drag in the mire the name of one of its most lovely daughters if the ends of justice could be subserved without it. But the state would be able to show a motive, a powerful, compelling motive. While he was a friend of the accused he had still his duty to perform, and he felt that he must put friendship out of his heart and do that duty with all the power that lay within him.

And where was Tom Childress? Why was he not there to ask the vengeance of the law upon his assailant? The state would seek to show why. If the accused had any special knowledge of the whereabouts of his victim the state would be very likely to discover it. But he had no charges to make; the present charge was serious enough, and he was willing to let what might come out in the evidence.

Linton then outlined the defense and said he would seek to show that not Chester Easter but Tom Garrity had struck the blow.

But this hope for "The Pawn" was dashed when Garrity went on the stand and swore that he had no knife, and was fully corroborated by all the rest. They swore with equal positiveness that "The Pawn" did have a knife. All had seen it as he stood brandishing it at the top of the stairway. Diaz had seen it when he returned to the office. Diaz also heard the threat against the life of Childress. He did not know what had become of Childress. He lived near him, and his family knew nothing of his whereabouts. He believed that Easter could tell where he was if he wanted to. This objected to by defendant's counsel, and objection sustained.

Through it all "The Pawn" sat with bloodless face and with eyes far, far away. He seemed to take no interest in the proceedings until Linton said:

"I will now put the defendant on the stand in his own behalf. Be sworn, Mr. Easter."

McCurdy mumbled the oath: "Do you swear to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth concerning the matters and facts pertaining to this case which shall be asked of you by counsel, so help you, and so forth?"

"The Pawn" took the stand like an automaton. If the object of the conspiracy was to daze him nothing could have succeeded better. The mystery is how they kept their faces straight. Several of the less experienced at the noble art of practical joking had to leave the room to indulge in smothered shouts of laughter.

"Now, Chester, tell your version of this affair," said Linton.

"I will tell it all," began "The Pawn" in a voice choking with emotion. "I will tell everything. I can't keep it back any longer. Tom Childress' face is with me day and night. I wake up and see it in the dead of night. If I sleep it is with me in my dreams. O, great God, if only I could shut that terrible vision from my mind!" He rose and, throwing up his hands, wildly clutched his hair and shouted:

"You want to know where Tom Childress is. You'll never know where he is if I don't tell. But I'm going to tell. I'm not going to keep that vision with me any longer. Tom Childress is at the bottom of the water works well. I killed him."

The conspirators started back in amazement. It almost sounded like the truth, so well was it done.

"Magnificent," returned Linton. "He's done us. I didn't think he had it in him. But let's carry it out. Go on, Chester; tell the whole story."

"The Pawn" had sunk down in his chair and buried his face in his hands.

"Yes, I'll feel better to tell it all," he continued. "I made up my mind to kill him when I left the office. I waited for him in the alley and when he passed on his way home I followed him. When we got to the dark place by the water works well I caught up with him. We had some words. I dared him to throw away the gun I had seen him flash and fight me fair. All the time I had the knife in my sleeve. Then he struck me and I let him have it. He dropped. I bent over him and he was dead. Then I found a heavy rock and a rope and I tied the rock to him and dropped him over into the well. There's wasn't much blood and what there was I washed away with the hose they sprinkle the flower beds with. I saw nothing of the watchman and I thought I was safe. I didn't know what a terribly relentless accuser conscience is. I wish the court to bind me over without bail."

"The decision of this court," he said, "is that the prisoner at the bar has played his part nobly, and that he be elected to full membership in the 'Gentlemen's Club'," and his face broke into a broad smile.

There came a loud knocking at the door and excited voices demanding admission. It was opened and the chief of police rushed in.

"Tom Childress has been murdered!" he shouted. "His body has just been found in the water works well. Do any of you know how he came there?"

The smile died from McCurdy's lips. "There is your man," he said, pointing to "The Pawn." "He has just confessed it all to us."

With eyes that looked neither to the right or the left "The Pawn" placed his arm in that of the chief and walked out and to the jail. Already the news was on the streets, how it had been found necessary to drain the well, how the body of Childress, dead from a knife wound and weighted down with a stone, had been found at the bottom. It was all too horribly true.

A scared and horror-stricken band of conspirators filed out of McCurdy's office and gathered the news from excited groups. While the first shock was still tingling in the nerves of the public a second one ran like electricity through the town. A terrible sequel to the tragedy had been recorded. Chester Easter had committed suicide immediately on being placed in a cell. The provincial search had failed to discover in his shoe the very knife that slew Tom Childress.

The last meeting of the "Gentleman's Club" took place that afternoon in the back end of the "Gold Eagle Exchange," when the members with sad and troubled faces took a solemn oath never to disclose the true facts of the proving of "The Pawn."

No Place for the Artist.

It may be regrettable, but the artist to-day lives more apart from the generality of men than in almost any other age, and the reason is plain—it is because he has no definite place in the present economy. Neither can a place be established for him by confederations of artists and such like nonsense. Solemn humbug of this sort is of use only for the glorification of a set of professional men of taste, from whose tyranny good Lord deliver us.—New York Evening Sun.

Strange Doctrine of Fate

Chinese Fully as Firm Believers in Foreordination as Are the Turks.

The Chinese are invariably courteous and considerate if you take them the right way. Superstition, of course, is deeply engrafted in their natures, and a kind of kismet policy, after the manner of the Turks, takes possession of them, so that whatever is going to happen will happen, and there the matter ends.

Battling against fate for a Chinaman is sheer waste of time, and he simply bows his head to the inevitable. Take, for example, the strict attention, or rather the devotion, that is paid to fengshui on the Yangtze. Feng-Shui is the superstition that determines good site or locality, and if a town on the Yangtze has not a good feng-shui trade will not come to it, and it will be ruined.

A town named Peh-Shih had its pagoda in the wrong place, not far enough down the river, in fact; the result being that all traffic which should have come to it was swept past, the result being that Pei-Shih was left out in the cold. All the talk in the world would not convince the Pei-Shih folk that the depression could arise from any other cause than that of a bad feng-shui, so they pulled the pagoda down and built another one in the supposed right spot. So far prosperity has not returned to Pei-Shih, though the inhabitants live in hope.

The city of Wanshien, on the other hand, has a perfect feng-shui two fine pagodas, one 1,000 feet high, below the town, while Wanshien itself is very prosperous. The fact that Wanshien is situated in a most fertile valley, where wheat, barley and the poppy flourish abundantly, while Pei-Shih is barren and miserable, does not concern the inhabitants of these places so much as the feng-shui site. This absurd idea in the Chinese mind is only one of thousands like it.

So Near and Yet So Far.

Johnny, aged eight, likes high-flown words, but, as accuracy is not to be expected in one of his years, he often mispronounces and misapplies them. The other day he came home with this announcement:

"Mamma, I just saw a gentleman standing on the corner sunk in profane thought."

GAVEL MADE OF MANY WOODS

Gift to Medical Institute Is of Historical Interest—Contains Seventy-Seven Pieces.

Kansas City, Mo.—During the annual session of the American Institute of Homeopathy, held in this city a year ago, Dr. William Davis Foster of Kansas City was elected president of the institute for the following year. To show his appreciation of his election Dr. Foster had made a gavel which he presented to the institute. A year was required for Dr. Foster to get together the material of which it is made.

The gavel is made of 77 pieces of wood, a piece from every state and territory in the United States and from Germany and France. There are pieces from the houses or the possessions of all of the pioneers of homeopathy. Each piece in the gavel is numbered. In a bound volume, called the "Gavel Book," is contained all the correspondence bearing upon the gathering of the material of which the gavel is made. The varieties of wood used include mahogany, white pine, ebony, black walnut, rosewood, sequoia gigantea, vegetable ivory, surrender oak, Arizona ironwood, redwood, a bit from an Indian medicine man's tomahawk from Alaska, orange wood, diamond willow, fir, petrified wood, yellow cedar, cherry and yellow pine. Each piece is numbered with a small gilt number. In the "Gavel Book" under a corresponding number is a short biographical sketch of the person of whom the piece is a souvenir. The ends of the gavel are gold. One end is engraved with "Similia Simillbut Curentur." Upon the others is engraved "Presented to the American Institute of Homeopathy by William Davis Foster, M. D., President 1909." The handle is ebony tipped with ivory.

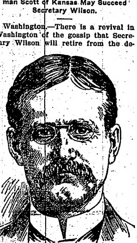
MENTIONED FOR THE CABINET

Washington Rumor Says Congressman Scott of Kansas May Succeed Secretary Wilson.

Washington.—There is a revival in Washington of the gossip that Secretary Wilson will retire from the department of agriculture in December and that Representative Scott of Kansas will succeed hihm. Several prominent papers have printed stories to that effect.



Congressman C. F. Scott.

It was said at the White House that the matter had not been considered there, and Representative Scott said that the president had never mentioned the subject to him.

Secretary Wilson has held the place under three presidents—McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft—and holds the record for cabinet service.

Charles F. Scott represents the Second Kansas district, is chairman of the committee on agriculture, and is serving his fifth term in congress. Two of his terms were as congressman-at-large. He was born in Kansas, lives in Iola and is editor and owner of the Iola Register.

"What's the trouble, my little man?" asked the kind-hearted old gentleman in the park.

Governor Johnson and his staff leave this week for Seattle where the governor will make the address on Minnesota Day, August 3. He will also be the chief speaker at the unveiling of the bust of James J. Hill.

The people of the Ninth congressional district await with anxiety Congressman Steenerson's vote on the Aldrich bill. If he casts a vote for upward revision he may as well begin negotiations for a return to the pratice of law.

If the county commissioners had only known the Thief River News would oppose the building of a court house doubtless they would never have thought of incurring its displeasure. We're awfully sorry John is too late with his "kick."

Official Washington is said to be glad that Teddy is in Africa, but the people who pay the tariff taxes would be much happier and feel that the outcome would be much more satisfactory if Teddy's big stick could parade down Pennsylvania avenue two or three times.

Prof. C. R. Frazier, assistant superintendent of public instruction in a recent address before the summer session of the state university said that all teachers should be beautiful. We supposed that they were, and it is a shock to have our dreams of a quarter of a century so rudely disturbed.

The race for the pennan in the American associatien league is very close. It is possible for any one of the eight clubs to land at the top. There has never been a time in the history of the association when the difference between the high and the lowest percentages was so little.

A Washington Telegram says: "Unless the tariff bill is materially modified in conference, it now seems probable that nearly all the Northwestern Republicans in the house will vote against it. This would mean that the bill would be sent back to the conference and the current session prolonged indefinitely."

Governor Johnson has purchased a home in St. Paul, and it is said he will claim that city as his residence. It is a little tough on good old St. Peter, but for some years it has been considered that the Governor belongs to the whole state, and perhaps by this time his old town and county are reconciled to the idea of giving him up.

It grieves us much to learn that our old friends Aldrich and Payne have had a quarrel with regard to the provisions of the new tariff bill, but the common people have little to expect from the hands of either of these eminent standpatters. We would have more faith in the situation if President Taft would lay aside his smile and get real mad for a day or two. As the recognized leader of his party it would seem as though the president could exercise a considerable influence among the members congress.

There will be a chance to buy a railroad at St. Paul on August 21. While this road is said to be somewhat run down at the heel it is guaranted all wool and a yard wide. As the minimum price is only $12,000,000, no doubt some of the Red Lake county caditalists will be down to attend the auction.

It is not likely that Governor Johnson will call an extra session of the legislature. It would cost fully $200,000 to hold an extra session and rather than incur this enormous expense he thinks the various counties can well afford to borrow money for road improvements until the next regular session.

It is reported from the automobile manufacturing centers that never before has the demand for automobiles been so great as at present, and buyers of weeks ago are still waiting for their motors to be delivered. Many of these orders are from the rural districts and it is nothing at all uncomm now-a-days for the farmers to take their porkers to market in their autos, get a good price for the cargo and spin back home in full enjoyment of the ride and its satisfactory business accompaniment.

The Anoka Free Press has recently been sold to the Anoka Herald, and the publication of the former will be discontinued. It would seem as though two newspapers were plenty for a town the size of Anoka. It is rumored that Editor Olson of the Free Press has purchased the Red Wing News, and will transform it into an aggressive Democratic paper. Mr. Olson is one of the ablest writers in the state, and Red Wing certainly presents an inviting field.

The Sunday "lid" is just now an important question at St. Paul. A few weeks ago the officers of the civic league discovered that a large number of the cafes and saloons were selling liquor on Sunday, and an appeal has been made to Attorney General Simpson for the removal of Chief of Police O'Connor. While it is extremely unlikely that such an efficient police head as O'Connor will be removed from office the league's work will undoubtedly bring about a more strict enforcement of the law. Under the St. Cloud decision the city officials charged with the responsibility for law enforcement must be removed when the court determines that they have been lax in the performance of their duty.

RAISING THE BOYS.

Judge Lindsey of Denver, Col., who has done more perhaps than any other man on the continent to refoam the juvenile courts, spoke last week before the National Educational association in his home city. He declared that there are no bad boys but only a bad atmosphere and it is the duty of educators of the state to remove such environments. His honor is right in his contention, argues a North Dakota Exchange. By heredity some boys may have a tendency towards evil but taken at the right time in the right way there is no reason why any boy should go wrong. Some boys are spoiled by over attention but by far the greater number from willful neglect. Some parents give more time and attention to the training of a pet dog or favorite horse than they do to their children. They will let them run wild until they are five or six years old, then turn them over to a teacher who is suppsed to convert them suddenly into bright and shining lights. Obedience is the first law of discipline; should the teacher take a firm stand to secure this, there are parents foolish enough to condemn the teacher for her conduct. Children hear this criticism and right then have received great impetus in the wrong direction. The litle tyrant at home, soon becomes the little outlaw at school and later becomes the outlaw in the state. Liberty is a splendid thing but the child may have too much of it. The greatest menace to the state today comes from too great liberty, or better, too great license to children. Every student of criminology, of which Judge Lindsey is probably chief, admits that every individual must be taught to obey, if not in the home, at school, then by the state and the methods must be harsher to each stage.

NEW DEPARTMENT OF BANKING

bill became law the treasurer and the auditor were to assert themselves, and turning down the governor, were to appoint as superintendent of banks some one whom the group of bankers' politicians headed by William E. Lee would select. As the story goes the Bank Superintendent had already been selected; and the intention was instead of taking the men from the public examiner's office who have been transferred to the new department, to let them go and to pick out men who had been active in the two last campaigns in the attempt to defeat the governor. The whole department was to be rock-ribbed Republican and the Kitchen Cabinet wasn't to have a look in.

The Steering Committee Takes a Hand

For a while things went on swimmingly. The Republican house steering the committee was interested in the feat. In fact the Steering committee, which was notoriously under the tutelage of the Secretary of State, was always up to something of that kind, and the number of ways they boasted they were going to trim up the governor was a caution. Indeed it was for that purpose the Steering Committee was brought into existence. But after all the laboring mountain brought forth only a mouse. The real bankers as soon as they caught on to Wily Billy's scheme to make the banking department a political engine and to humiliate the governor, got on their fighting clothes. They pretty soon let the gang know they weren't going to be party to a job like that. They bore down on their representatives on the senate banking committee, and the upshot of the whole matter was that the commission scheme was knocked out and the responsibility for the department put where it belongs, on the shoulder of the governor. The only concession the Steering Committee was able to secure was the vesting in the next governor power to promptly remove the head of the new department. While the ordinary term of office provided for by the new law is three years Mr. Galerneault's term expires the first Monday in January, 1911. For my part I think it a pity that politics should enter into the management of this department at all.

Dan and His Big Stick.

The hot weather has no effect to curb the activities of the man with the big stick. I don't refer to Roosevelt; nor to Taft, for, while some considerate Kansan has been moved to repesent him with one, the only club he has any use for, although in Washington there is sore need of one of more Knotty mould, is the golf stick. Mayor Lawler has taken Roosevelt's for his prototype, and whenever he sees corruption or inefficiency sticking up its head he's after it with a club. The other day he got after the scavengers who were distributing odors promiscuous around St. Anthony Hill. This led into further inquiry into the health department. There he found graft, and a peculiar relation between one Burns who superintends the collection of the city's garbage and draws a salary from its Treasury, and the St. Paul Rendering Co., which disposes of dead animals for its private profit. He appears to have found also that the company's plant was erected without the formality of securing the city's consent, and that a road has been constructed for its sole use and benefit at the city's expense. The mayor is still pursuing his investigations along this line and at the next meeting of the City Council something is likely to drop.

The City Hospital.

Also the Mayor has been looking into the management of the city and county hospital. The fact that complaint was made to him that patients discharged from there were fond to be infested with vermin first brought the hospital affair to his attention. On inquiry it appeared that discrimination was made between patients treated there, paying patients being assigned private rooms and the poor people having to put up with such accomodations as they could get. This wasn't his idea of how a city hospital ought to be run. He thought all should be treated alike and that private rooms should be at the disposal of those who need them regardless of whether they were able to pay for them or not. And he said out quite loud that what was wanted out there was warm hearts, considerate sympathy and the glad-hand extended to all alike and not only to those who had money to put into it. Believe me, "Our Dan" is bossing his own job and he don't care who knows it.

Bad for Nye.

Frank Eddy has been having his ear to the ground. Although Frank is rock-ribbed Republican and would probably vote the ticket straight under any conditions he's got sense and sees what's under his nose. And he likes to say things—no one better. Thus it comes that he has taken occasion to point out to Minneapolis Republicans what they are up against unless their representative in Congress gives some indication that he ain't backing the Aldrich-Payne crowd. "Thus far," says he, "no opposition has appeared to Mr. Nye's renomination, but the Fifth district is by no means certain to be in the Republican column in the next campaign. A very large portion of the voters of Minneapolis are wage workers. They were led to believe that the extra session of congress would enact legistation that would would decrease the cost of living that has increased more rapidly than the wage scale. Minneapolis Republicans have got into the habit of voting the Democratic ticket if things do not suit them and if the result expected is not attained it would be difficult to predict the outcome of the next election in the Fifth district."

Cough Caution

Never, positively never poison your lungs. If you cough—even from a simple cold only—you should always heal, soothe, and ease the irritated bronchial tubes. Don't blindly suppress it with a stupefying poison. It's strange how some things finally come about. For twenty years Dr. Shoop has constantly warned people not to take cough mixtures or prescriptions containing Opium, Chloroform, or similar poisons. And now—a little late though—Congress says "Put it on the label, if poisons are in your Cough Mixture." Good! Very good! Hereafter for this very reason mothers, and others, should insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. No poison marks on Dr. Shoop's labels—and none in the medicine, else it must by law be on the label. And it's not only safe, but it is said to be by those that know it best, a truly remarkable cough remedy. Take no chance then, particularly with your children. Insist on having Dr. Shoop's Cough Cure. Compare carefully the Dr. Shoop package with others and note the difference. No poison marks there. You can always be on the safe side by demanding

S.S.S. HEALS OLD SORES

No old sore exists merely because the flesh is diseased at that particular spot; if this were true simple cleanliness and local applications would heal them. Whenever a sore or ulcer refuses to heal readily, the blood is at fault; this vital fluid is filled with impurities and poisons which are being constantly discharged into the place, feeding it with noxious matter and irritating and inflaming the nerves and tissues so the sore cannot heal. These impurities in the blood may be the remains of some constitutional trouble; the effect of a debilitating spell of sickness, leaving disease germs in the system, or the absorption by the blood of the fermented refuse matter which the bodily channels of waste have failed to remove. Again the cause may be hereditary, the diseased blood of ancestry being handed down to posterity; but whatever the cause, the fact that the sore will not heal shows the necessity for the very best constitutional treatment. There is nothing that causes more worry and anxiety than an old sore which resists treatment. Every symptom suggests pollution and disease—the discharge, the red, angry looking flesh, the pain and inflammation, and the discoloration of surrounding parts, all show that deep down in the blood there are morbid and dangerous forces at work, constantly creating poisons which may in the end lead to Cancer. Local applications are valuable only for their cleansing and antiseptic effects; they do not reach the blood, where the real cause is located, and can therefore have no real curative worth. S. S. S. heals old sores by going down to the fountain-head of the trouble and driving out the poison-producing germs and morbid matters which are keeping the ulcer open. It removes every particle of impurity from the circulation and makes this life-stream pure, fresh and health-sustaining. Then as new, rich blood is carried to the place the healing begins, all discharge ceases, the inflammation leaves, new tissue and healthy flesh are formed, and soon the sore or ulcer is well. S. S. S. is the greatest of all blood purifiers and finest of tonics, just what is needed in the treatment, and in addition to curing the sore will build up and strengthen every part of the system. Special book on Sores and Ulcers and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write. THE SWIFT SPECIFIC CO., ATLANTA, GA.

I want to recommend S. S. S. to any who are in need of a blood purifier, and especially as a remedy for sores and obstinate ulcers. In 1877 I had my leg badly cut on the sharp edge of a barrel, and having on a blue woolen stocking the place was badly poisoned from the dye. A great sore formed and for years no one knows what I suffered with the place. I tried, it seemed to me, everything I had ever heard of, but I got no relief and I thought I would have to go through life with an angry, discharging sore on my leg. At last I began the use of S. S. S., and it was but a short time until I saw that the place was improving. I continued it until it removed all the poison from my blood and made a complete and permanent cure of the sore. JNO. A failing tiny nerve—no larger than the finest silken thread—takes from the Heart its impulse, its power, it's regularity. The stomach also has its hidden or inside nerve. It was Dr. Shoop who first told us it was wrong to drug a weak or failing stomach, heart or kidneys. His prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restoratve—is directed straight for the cause of these ailments—these weak and failing inside nerves. This, no doubt clearly explains why the Restorative has of late grown so rapidly in popularity. Druggists say that those who test the Restorative even for a few days soon become fully convinced of its wonderful merit. Anyway don't drug the organ. Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of one hundred eighteen & 85-100 dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John P. Gonigam and Lizzie V. Gonigam, his wife, Mortgagors, to Matilda Meckenstock, Mortgagee, bearing date the 17th day of January, 1905, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Red Lake and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February, 1905, at 4 o'clock P. M., in Book 20 of Mortgages, on page 634.

And default having been made in the conditions of said mortgage,

And Whereas, the said Matilda Meckenstock, the Mortgagee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Two Thousand Three Hundred, Seventy Four and 75-100 Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of Six per cent per annum, from the 23rd day of June, 1909 including delinquent taxes paid by said mortgagee, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Northeast quarter (NE¼) of Section nine (9), in Township One Hundred and Fifty (150), North Range Forty-four (44) west of the Fifth principal Meridian, and in Red Lake County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Red Lake county at the front door of the Post Office, in the City of Red Lake Falls in said County and State, on the 7th day of August, 1909, at ten o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $2374.75 and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 23, A. D. 1909.

STAR STIRS.

May seem more like slurs.

But they stir some just the same.

Sunshine and a few light showers lately.

The crops in this vicinity seem to be going some after all and are getting "there" just the same.

Ye scribbler, in last week's correspondence, tried to stop the typos by a series of showy signs but did not succeed.

Here is a general belief among settlers that dairying in connection with intensified farming will be the most satisfactory occupation in eastern Red Lake county soon as ditches, roads and bridges have been established to best advantage.

Independence Day celebrations were observed in nearly every township and village of eastern Red Lake county this year with the exception of Star township which fact does not speak much for us or for Independence Day.

Large ditches, good roads and bridges are things of which we speak about sometimes. Some people say: "Low taxes and no bridges, roads, ditches nor schools." Others say it would be better not to kick so much on taxes for local improvements but to register a good sensible kick at the right time and place against Wall Street and Chicago board of trade speculators.

The Red Lake river boat service seems to be slowing down to a standstill. Suppose there were two or three fair sized launches running on schedule time during the entire season. These could handle all the passengers, express and possibly most of the freight. The lumber corporations had ought to "go some" to stop the boat service on a navigable stream.

Ye gods! Where, O, Where is that "much talked about" bridge proposition which used to be all the rage in this cuntry some time ago? Not even the sound of it is heard any more. No bridges have as yet been discovered at any point on the Red Lake river above Thief River Falls. Not even a tolerably decent ferry this side of Kratka. Shall we wait until the "Soo builds?" How soon will that be?—Suburban.

Another Stir.

Sultry. Showers.

Haying! "It am postponed now."

That strong shower we had last week struck the crops kind of hard but things are straightening up again at swift speed.

After all we should see that a fair supply of rain during spring and summer had ought to be signs for a tolerably nice fall.

Suppose we send a strong petition for a fair sized ditch excavation on East and West district line; also for North and South district line; Would there be a "roar" or what?

No signs as yet of the Duluth-Thief River Falls railroad. Very likely no such a thing this fall. Next spring suppose we "rubber" again and see "nothin" doing. Can it be that the Wall Street stock exchange has more to do with the prospects than any other party? The Suburban Photographer says he may "back up and squat" for some time to come.—Suburban.

ROOSEVELT BAGGING the GNUS in AFRICA

By GERALD A. RODERICK

NAIROBI, British East Africa.—I guess everybody in the civilized world knows that ex-President Theodore Roosevelt of the United States is getting two American dollars for every word of "copy" he writes for a certain New York publication. Therefore the business of bagging the gnus in this lonely spot on the world's map has a double meaning.

Spell it gnus or news—suit yourself—they are pronounced alike. The only difference is that you get one with a rifle of heavy bore and the other by means of mental ingenuity.

Mr. Roosevelt, I have discovered, makes his own news. And he sells his own news. Hence his declaration that "because there are no journalists with this expedition all apparently authentic reports are barren falsehoods or are obtained by means of bribing ignorant servants and it stands to reason that for the sake of a bribe one of evil intentions is not above inventing falsehoods for the purpose of obtaining the bribes."

ROOSEVELT IN HUNTING COSTUME

Be that as it may, early in the month of August Mr. Roosevelt will impart some of his news to a select gathering of East Africans at a banquet. You can't keep reporters from a banquet, consequently at the time of writing there is no reason to suppose that the world will not get the former American executive's remarks in full.

Mr. Roosevelt will tell his hunting experiences, his views on world politics and lots of other things which will astonish his staid British hosts and will set them to thinking.

The world at large is getting little Roosevelt "stuff," as the editors call it. The reason for it is said to be the hunter's desire to pursue the life of a nimrod undisturbed by eager newspaper men. They are on his trail every day, but they keep out of sight.

Entering the port of Mombasa, Theodore Roosevelt and his big stick made an instantaneous hit. He was strenuous. Britishers are slow of movement and thought; they are deliberate. Not so with the American hero. He thought quickly, spoke quickly and said things which made the inhabitants stand up and shout.

He talked about the great country which the British had built and almost civilized in Africa. He made other points which tickled his hosts and he was solid with them from the minute he put foot on the gangplank of the steamer which brought him from Naples, Italy. He told his East African friends that he wanted to be treated like a regulation American citizen, not like a former president of the United States. This, the British seemed to think, was a first class invitation to treat him like a king, which they did.

With his entourage riding in the passenger compartments of a primitive Uganda railway coach, Mr. Roosevelt gave a real strenuosity exhibition by daring Acting Governor Jackson to ride with him on the cowcatcher. He said there was more breeze on the front of the train anyway. Mr. Jackson and Mr. Roosevelt then stopped the outfit and took positions of vantage ahead of the fireman and engineer.

This tickled the Britishers. Nobody had ever thought of riding on the front of an engine before in East Africa. They had always done the most commonplace thing by seating themselves on the "cushions." So, because he was different from their kind, they liked the American from the start.

The ride that day lasted 50 miles, when the engine, being a union engine, refused to work over eight hours and gave out. The next day the ride was repeated and to-day half the British East African highbrows ride on the front of the engine when they want to make an impression.

MacMillan's ranch is a notorious hangout for man-eating lions. They roar around the ranch at night and tear up things generally. Colorado mountain lions were easily beneath the hunting prowess of Mr. Roosevelt and he proved that African lions are also-rans alongside of the American brand by depleting the kingdom of Leo by six in two days, thereby setting a new record for huntsmen in this section of Africa.

A big, hungry hippopotamus chased Mr. Roosevelt one day. Formulating his plans as he sped along through the jungle, the ex-president led the enraged animal to the open and set two steel bullets crashing between his eyes when the hippo was only 100 feet away. Kermit had a similar experience with a rhinoceros and, displaying the family traits of his father, stood his ground and succeeded in dispatching Mr. Rhino at 40 yards. The beast was charging him in dangerous fashion.

KERMIT AND SERVANT

KAPITI PLAINS

ALL ABOARD FOR THE HUNTING GROUNDS

A NOVEL RIDE

Not long ago Mr. Roosevelt captured two baby antelopes and sent them to his daughter, Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who by this time doubtless has received them. More than 1,500 specimens had been captured by the Roosevelt party up to the time of this writing and before the expedititon weighs anchor for other shores probably 1,000 more will have reached the taxidermists.

Lions, wildebeests, antelopes, giraffes, hippopotami, rhinoceri, tigers, monkeys and dozens of other varieties are among the trophies of the chase.

To Kermit Roosevelt the expedition has been a source of wonderment and pleasure. Everything was new to him. He had read about the mysteriousness of darkest Africa but had never been given an opportunity to even peer into the confines of a real lion hunting camp.

At the present writing both Kermit and his father are in the best of health, both wearing a swarthy tan which is darker than the jungle stained khaki suits in which most of the hunting is done.

A short time ago Mr. Roosevelt visited the American mission near here and he expressed pleasure at the work which the organization is doing for the African savage. The morning of the day he visited the mission he spent in hunting Culubra monkeys and succeeded in shooting several, which were added to the list of specimens.

Officials here have expressed the belief that Mr. Roosevelt's bagging of game is justifiable in view of the fact that his specimens are being secured for the purpose of stocking up the Smithsonian institution at Washington.

Perhaps the biggest test of Rooseveltian strenuosity came when the party crossed the desert west of this city. In this instance they were compelled to go for more than a week without procuring water. All the liquid refreshment they had was carried with them in great water skins, suitable for this purpose.

Bwana Tumbo, which is an African expression of reverence, was the nickname which Mr. Roosevelt's native servants soon attached to him, and when I met the ex-president at Kapiti Plains station, where he was obliged to stop during his travels, he seemed pleased to be reminded of the fact that he had struck a responsive chord in the make-up of the semi-savage blacks.

Eighty-four souls comprised the small army which Mr. Roosevelt took with him from Mombasa. Bwana Tumbo dressed his aides up in American made loose shirts and khaki trousers. Of their own choice were queer little skull caps decorated with feathers and tassels.

Wall tents, the same as those used by American army officers, provided the ex-president's sleeping quarters and his patriotism was fully shown by the fact that the American stars and stripes floated from the flag pole before Roosevelt's tent. The colors were dipped at sunrise and sunset in accordance with the United States army custom.

The Roosevelt camp presented a unique scene. Situated in the center was Mr. Roosevelt's adobe, which also housed Kermit. Before it floated the American flag and grouped around it along miniature "streets" were the "pup tents" of the porters, gunbearers, bush beaters, cooks and other servants.

Kermit Roosevelt's personal servant, Juma by name, became as devoted to his young master as though the latter were of regal heritage. He followed him everywhere and was at his side during the rhinoceros incident in which Kermit's life was periled.

Juma's gaudy turban, khaki half-hose and American-made calfskin shoes, which were a present from Kermit, marked him as a man to be envied among his fellows. The ex-president said that whenever he needed Kermit for any matter whatsoever, it was onoly necessary to scan the horizon for Juma's gay headpiece.

During his hunting, travels and speaking Bwana Tumbo never has lost sight of his writing. He is writing a chapter here and there, whenever he has the time or inclination to devote a few hours to the book of travels which he has half completed.

Mr. R. D. Cuninghame, Mr. Roosevelt's hunter, is typical of the African sportsman and is declared to know more about game in this section of the world than any other game expert.

No more unique sight was ever presented to the casual observer than that which met my eye when I alighted from a Uganda railway coach at Kapiti Plains, where Mr. Roosevelt and his army were grouped. The station is on Sir Alfred Pease's ranch or estate, as it is known here.

"The Plains" consists of hardly more than the signboard which tells its name. Mr. Roosevelt's "army" was drawn up about him, the ex-president was conversing with Hunter Cuninghame and the former executive's gunbearer, Abdallah bin Said, was awaiting orders from his chief. Of the army Abdallah is most devoted to his master and the frequent lashings which the heads of the expedition are often compelled to administer to quell impending mutiny are never necessary with this character. He is a unique type of African and because of his good qualities he commands better pay than the rest of his fellows.

The man who aided Mr. Roosevelt in getting his expedition ready cautioned him against asking any of his servants to do duties for which any of the others were hired.

The labor union instinct is second nature with the attache of the African hunting expedition. Let a gun bearer try to do the work of a porter or bush beater and there is war in camp at once. Neither may the game carriers beat the game into sight. Perhaps this system is for the best after all for the reason that every man specializes and therefore is able to do his own allotted work to a better advantage.

It is said here that Mr. Roosevelt's entire expedition will cost between $15,000 and $20,000, which to an American hunter may seem an enormous price. But hunting wild game in Africa is a heavy undertaking and in order to go through with such a task that amount of money is actually necessary. But the party is getting results and that is what they figure is the proper viewpoint.

Having arrived in the Stoik district Kermit and his father had plenty of game upon which to exhibit their prowess. The younger Roosevelt immediately set about establishing a hunting record by bagging the biggest lion which, up to that time, had found its way to the taxidermist of the party. In the Stoik district Mr. Roosevelt shot many buffaloes, their skins being preserved for the Smithsonian institution.

TO MAKE CORNSTALK OF USE

Government's Experiments for Making Paper Out of These Likely to Be Valuable.

Professor B. T. Galloway of the agricultural department at Washington, who has been experimenting with cornstalks as a material for making paper, announces that great progress has been achieved along this line. While he does not say that the experiments so far prove that the thing is actually accomplished and is a commercial success, he is very hopeful that it will work out satisfactorily.

The paper workers are greatly interested in the experiments because, if it turns out that this great product of the farm can be turned into good paper it will have a marked effect on the paper making industry.

Cornstalks are about the cheapest product grown on the farm, and while not entirely useless as stock food, millions of acres are allowed to go entirely to waste every year.

Paper-making wood is becoming somewhat scarce, although there is no such famine in the northern woods as some alarmists would have us believe. If, however, the government succeeds in making good paper out of cornstalks, the wood will last longer and the price of paper will not be advanced to a point where its use would necessarily be restricted.

The government has done many great things for the benefit of the farmers, but if the cornstalk experiments prove successful this achievement will rank among the most beneficial.

It will be a great day when the farmer can read the news printed on paper made from the cornstalks grown in his own field.

One of Life's Sad Facts.

Pay days come and pay days go, but bills go on forever.

WITH THE FUNNY FELLOWS
PARIS GREEN

WHY HE'S SO GOOD.

"There is a little boy in our neighborhood who never whistles."

"Most unusual."

"He never beats a toy drum, never uses a sling and never throws stones through window panes."

"Truly, a remarkable child!"

"Furthermore, he has never been seen to make faces at elderly people, never fights and no matter how many circus parades may be passing from time to time on a near-by street, he never runs away from home."

"I didn't think there was such a boy in the world. I should like to see him."

"Oh, his good qualities are very easily explained. You see, the boy I'm talking about is a marble boy, and he presides over a fountain on Mr. Bleeker's lawn."

He Was Real Mean.

Miss Golding—Here's your ring. I have decided that I can never be your wife, so the engagement is off and I shall expect you to return everything you may have in your possession that belongs to me.

Mr. Hamlin—All I have is a lock of your hair and photo. I don't suppose you care anything for the photo, but the lock of hair you will no doubt want to preserve as a souvenir.

Miss Golding—As a souvenir of what

Mr. Hamlin—Of the time when you were a brunette.

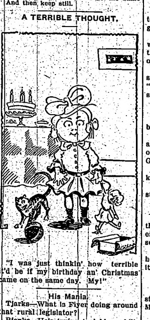
The Sorrow of It.

The jokesmith sat at a table. On his hands he rested his head, and after trying to think a think this is what he said: "Alas, my brain tank's empty! All thoughts seem to have fled. It's funny I can't remember the jokes I think of in bed."

Wise.

The wise man thinks before he speaks,
And if you will
But take his hunch you'll do the same
And then keep still.

A TERRIBLE THOUGHT.



"I was just thinkin' how terrible it'd be if my birthday an' Christmas came on the same day. My!"

His Mania.

Tjarks—What is Flyer doing around that rural legislator?

Bjenks—He's trying to lobby a bill. Flyer has the airship craze strong.

Tjarks—And what kind of a bill is he trying to lobby?

Bjenks—A bill to compel farmers to spread feather beds over their farms when they see an airship descending.

Stood the Test.

"Mamma, why don't you want me to play with that Kudger boy?"

"Because, dear, I know the family. He hasn't good blood in him."

"Why, mamma, he's been vaccinated twice, and it wouldn't take either time."

Coeducation.

"But," asked the first coed, "why did you elect to take up the study of German instead of French?"

"Oh," replied the other, "the German professor was so awfully handsome, you know."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Hardly.

"Here is a list of the hundred worst books."

"I'll bet you one thing."

"What?"

"The pocketbook isn't mentioned there."

An Aeronautic Stunt.

"Riches have wings," quoth the party with the quotation habit.

"Yes, and they fly," rejoined the matter-of-fact person, "otherwise those chaps who are asking $7,000 each for airships wouldn't be able to do much business."

In the Spring.

"Why do you run your car so slowly these days?"

"With everybody carrying home garden tools you can't run over a man without risking a puncture."

THE NEW FAD.

Once we rode horses
And thought they were fast;
But found that their fleetness
Was not so to last.
Then steam drew our coaches,
O'er land we go,
And wondered however
We traveled once slow.

But into our living,
Our peace laying waste,
Came leaping and bounding
The Spirit of Haste,
Into his car horseless,
He tossed us with glee,
Nor unless we were breathless,
Content could we be.

But to dash through the ocean,
To race o'er the land,
Are joys our tastes jaded
Not now understand.
A swifter progression,
We feel we must try,
So the world's getting crazy
To learn how to fly.

THOSE SUMMER MEN.

He—Do you read fiction during the summer?

She—No; but I listen to it.

Putting on Airs.

They're getting stylish,
I'm afraid;
Their hired girl
Is now a "maid."

Had Nothing to Say.

The stranger had been compelled to linger twenty-four hours within the gates.

"Well," queried the landlord of the village inn, as the stranger was settling his bill, "what do you think of our place as a summer resort?"

"I'd hate to tell you," answered the stranger, as he picked up his grip. "Even what I think of it as a last resort would not look well in print."

Those Car Windows.

George Washington never told a lie because he was cautious.

One day, on a railroad train, a lady asked him to open a window. Instead of saying, "Certainly, I will, madam," George said, "I will try."

George did try, and, of course, you know the result.

But his reputation for veracity was still safe.—Yonkers Statesman.

How Could She.

He (rhapsodically)—I adore everything that is grand, exquisite, supereminent. I love the peerless, the serene, the perfect in life.

She (blushing coyly)—Oh, George, how can I refuse you when you put it so beautifully?

No, Indeed.

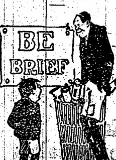
"Science seems to be puzzled by the strange beast recently captured by Mr. Roosevelt."

"Rest assured of one thing."

"And what is that?"

"It isn't a nature fake."

MANY EXCUSES.



Tall Office Boy—Dat new kid is stuck on his people. He's always talking about his forefathers.

Short Office Boy—Four fathers? Gee, what a lucky kid! In de baseball season think how many grandfathers he must have.

Getting the News.

Maid (with severe reflection of her mistress' manner)—Miss Hauten told me to tell you, young man, that she canot see you; she is engaged.

Society Reporter (with insouiance)—Just what I wanted to know. Go back and ask her if they are going to live home with the ol. man."

Unusual.

"What makes the fellow so popular?"

"He'll listen to a funny story without insisting on telling another."

WHY PEOPLE SUFFER.

Too often the kidneys are the cause and the sufferer is not aware of it. Sick kidneys bring backache and side pains, lameness and stiffness, dizziness, headaches, tired feeling, urinary troubles. Doan's Kidney Pills cure the cause. Mrs. N. E. Graves, Villisca, Iowa, says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for years. The secretions were disordered, there were pains in my back and swellings of the ankles. Often I had smothering spells. I had to be helped about. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me five years ago and I have been well since. They saved my life."

Remember the name—Doan's. For sale by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

NOT THE BUTCHER'S FAULT.

Mrs. Customer—That lamb you sent me, Mr. Stintwaite, was the largest and toughest I ever saw.

Mr. Stintwaite—Tut, tut. It's that boy been loitering again. I assure you, when that joint left the shop it was the sweetest little leg of lamb you could set eyes on, and I gave him strict orders to deliver it at once because you wanted it young.

TOLD TO USE CUTICURA.

After Specialist Failed to Cure Her Intense Itching Eczema—Had Been Tortured and Disfigured But

Was Soon Cured of Dread Humor.

"I contracted eczema and suffered intensely for about ten months. At times I thought I would scratch myself to pieces. My face and arms were covered with large red patches, so that I was ashamed to go out. I was advised to go to a doctor who was a specialist in skin diseases, but I received very little relief. I tried every known remedy, with the same results. I thought I would never get better until a friend of mine told me to try the Cuticura Remedies. So I tried them, and after four or five applications of Cuticura Ointment I was relieved of my unbearable itching. I used two sets of the Cuticura Remedies, and I am completely cured. No Need of Interference.

The two neighbors who were passing the little cottage heard sounds as of a terrific conflict inside and stopped to listen.

Presently they heard a loud thump, as if somebody had fallen to the floor.

"Grogan is beating his wife again!" they said.

Bursting the door open, they rushed into the house.

"What's the trouble here?" they demanded.

"Ther' ain't no trouble, gentlemen," calmly answered Mrs. Grogan, who had her husband down and was sitting on his head, "Gwan!"

A Gentle Aspersion.

Among the prisoners brought before a Chicago police magistrate one Monday morning was one, a beggar, whose face was by no means an unfamiliar one to the judge.

"I am informed that you have again been found begging in the public streets," said his honor, sternly, "and yet you carried in your pocket over $10 in currency."

"Yes, your honor," proudly returned the mendicant. "I may not be as industrious as some, but sir, I am no spendthrift."—Harper's Weekly.

AFTER FOURYEARS OF MISERY

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Baltimore, Md.—"For four years my life was a misery to me. I suffered from irregularities, terrible dragging sensations, extreme nervousness, and that all gone feeling in my stomach. I had given up hope of ever being well when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Then I felt as though new life had been given me, and I am recommending it to all my friends."—Mrs. W. S. Ford, 1938 Lansdowne St., Baltimore, Md.

The most successful remedy in this country for the cure of all forms of female complaints is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It has stood the test of years and to-day is more widely and successfully used than any other female remedy. It has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, that bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration, after all other means had failed.

If you are suffering from any of these ailments, don't give up hope until you have given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for it. She has guided thousands to health, free of charge.

According to Taste.

Discussing missionary work, Mme Helene Vincente, the well-known Congo missionary, said at a dinner in Cleveland:

"A Chinese heaven strikes you as ludicrous. Yet here in your own country you are careful to fit heaven and the—er—other place to your people's dislikes.

"Thus, on my recent southern trip, I heard a Georgia negro divine describe hades as ice cold, a place where the wicked shiver and freeze through all eternity. I asked the divine why he altered in that radical manner the usual description of hades, and he replied:

"'Ah don' darst tell mah people nuffin' else, marm. Why, if Ah sed hades wuz wahm, some o' dese ole rheumatic breddern an' sistern o' mine would be wantin' ter staht right down dah come fust frost.'"

Exchanging Solemn Thoughts.

"Ah, says the man with the parted whiskers, "when one stands alone in the night and contemplates the wonders of creation, how futile, how puny man seems! How vain, how puerile his hopes and longings, when he is surrounded by the eternal silence of the universe! Has this ever occurred to you?"

"You bet!" answers the man with the big scarf pin. "He feels just as punk as he does when he misses the owl car and has to stand on the corner an hour for another one."—Chicago Post.

One Cause of Neck Boils.

Neck boils come with the sweaty season. Many people have large hair pores on the back of the neck. The sweaty, starched collar rim is good culture soil for boil and carbuncle germs, which get rubbed into the large hair follicles or sacks, producing a painful, sometimes dangerous spreading crop.

Fully Realized.

He frowned in perplexity on hearing she was out again.

"I wonder, Jimmy, if your sister realizes," he said bitterly, "that I have treated her to three taxi rides and four open-air concerts this month?"

"You bet she realizes it," said the small boy, grinning. "That's why she's keepin' her engagement to Joe Johnson a secret."

HOME TESTING

A Sure and Easy Test on Coffee.

To decide the all important question of coffee, whether or not it is really the hidden cause of physical ails and approaching fixed diseases, one should make a test of ten days by leaving off coffee entirely and using well-made Postum.

If relief follows you may know to a certainty that coffee has been your vicious enemy. Of course you can take it back to your heart again, if you like to keep sick.

A lady says: "I had suffered with stomach trouble, nervousness and terrible sick headaches ever since I was a little child, for my people were always great coffee drinkers and let us children have all we wanted. I got so I thought I could not live without coffee, but I would not acknowledge that it caused my suffering.

"Then I read so many articles about Postum that I decided to give it a fair trial. I had not used it two weeks in place of coffee until I began to feel like a different person. The headache and nervousness disappeared and whereas I used to be sick two or three days out of a week while drinking coffee I am now well and strong and sturdy seven days a week, thanks to Postum.

"I had been using Postum three months and had never been sick a day when I thought I would experiment and see if it really was coffee that caused the trouble, so I began to drink coffee again and inside of a week I had a sick spell. I was so ill I was soon convinced that coffee was the cause of all my misery and I went back to Postum with the result that I was soon well and strong again and determined to stick to Postum and leave coffee alone in the future."

LOVE'S AWAKENING

BY CHARLES L. DOYLE

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

Maude Alvin had promised Edwin Ralston that she would become his wife, her promise had been given two months before, and there seemed to be no reason why she should regret it. There was certainly no fault to be found with her prospective husband as far as money, family and position went, and Maude was not ambitious. Yet her aunt, Mrs. Chambers, who was living over her own youth in this love affair of her favorite niece, had said rather anxiously to the girl's mother only yesterday: "Do you think Maude is really happy?"

"Why shouldn't she be?" responded Mrs. Alvin. "Surely Edward is as good a match for her as she is for him."

"Yes, I know, but—do you think, Fanny, that she loves him as a woman should love the man she is about to marry?"

"You must remember," replied her sister, gravely, "that Maude was never like other girls in anything, and we cannot expect her to be any different in this case. She is not to be judged by ordinary standards, and is certainly not too impressionable."

Mrs. Alvin ended her sentence with an uneasy laugh, she seemed divided between amusement and impatience when discussing this child of hers, whom she but little understood.

Just why Maude had promised to wed Ralston she scarcely knew. Perhaps it was merely because he was such an old friend, and his mood had fallen in so well with hers that night in July as they stood on the beach at Atlantic City, watching the long, silvered roll of the sea. She was thinking of it as she sat alone this late October evening. An east wind, penetrating and chill, swept in from the ocean and a bright fire burned in the open grate.

"I Was Thinking of You, Edward."

Maude moved over to the piano, her slender hands touched the keyboard, and from under them swelled the opening bars of Rubenstein's "Melody," a sure indication in her of a softened mood. She played on and on, sometimes dreamily, sometimes mournfully, sometimes with splendid power and depth, changing at last into a movement of sad loneliness wherein it seemed she were playing to her own thoughts.

In a little while the music came to a sudden stop and Maude rose and began to walk nervously back and forth across the room. She was telling herself that she could not marry him, after all, and yet had no particular reason for refusing to carry out her promise, at least no reason that she could formulate into a thought and express in words. It was useless to try to shape out a plausible explanation, she would simply tell him that her feelings were all against it, she meant to appeal to his generosity and beg him to be still her faithful friend. She threw herself wearily into a chair, and when the bell sounded in the hall below, it did not occur to her even to wonder who it might be at this late hour. A moment more and Edward Ralston was shown into the room. A faint flush stole across her cheeks and her eyes brightened and widened as she went to meet him and extend her hand in greeting.

"I was just thinking of you, Edward," she said, "but I imagined you were away off in New York to-night. When did you return?"

Ralston did not reply, but sat looking steadily at her for several moments. He seemed strangely unlike himself, and Maude, burdened by the weight of the confession she wanted to make, was afraid.

"Did you arrange your business in New York satisfactorily?" she asked, timidly.

A spasm of pain contracted the man's features. "That is what I have come to speak to you about, Maude," he answered, gloomily. "I could not put it off for a single night."

Something in his manner, more than his words, smote the girl with a sudden sense of impending sorrow, she saw trouble ahead vaguely. That the tidings he bore in some way concerned their future she felt certain. "Tell me, Edward—what is it?" she queried, gently.

"It is simply this," he said, "the house in New York went into the hands of a receiver yesterday, and the one here will probably follow tomorrow."

"Well, and what then, Edward?"

"What, then? Oh, Maude, you can guess the inevitable result of such a crash. I must surrender you, too, along with all the rest, and I came tonight to give you back your promise."

For a few moments neither spoke. She was thinking with a thrill of exultation, mingled with regret, that now she would not have to tell him, after all, that she could not marry him. Fate had intervened to settle her difficulties. At last the man lifted anxious eyes to her face, and in them were both appeal and renunciation, but the cold, classic features of the woman he loved were [illegible] not fathom [illegible]

"Well, Maude?" he queried, impatiently.

"Really, Edward, it doesn't seem so tragic and disastrous to me as it does to you. You can surely resume business in Chicago, at least, so why worry about the New York house—and you can come to see me just as you have always done, and we can be the same good friends we were before this—this engagement," she faltered.

Ralston sprang to his feet and faced her with flashing eyes.

"Maude!" he cried almost fiercely, "is this all? Have you no other word for me? Can you not understand something of what I feel and feel it yourself?"

The girl was silent, and the man went on hurriedly: "I do not even ask you to be sorry for me, I do ask"—and here his voice broke—"that you be sorry for the infinite pity of it all, for our cherished plans so rudely shattered."

He crossed to the window as he finished speaking, and stared blankly into the darkness outside. Maude's hands clasped and unclasped nervously, and her face moved beyond her control, but Ralston did not see; he was gazing down at the black, bare branches swaying in the fitful wind. Presently he turned and spoke slowly and listlessly.

"I have made all my plans," he said. "As soon as the business is settled and I find what there is left, I am going to California. I shall at least see what the new field offers."

Maude still sat silent, her head bowed, her eyes fixed on the floor. A flood of strange emotion was sweeping over her, and she suddenly realized that she was endowed with the power of loving, and felt for the first time the need of being loved. At last, she rose and placed her hand on his shoulder.

"Edward," she said, tremulously, "I won't let you go without me. You must take me with you, dear, don't leave me here alone."

Ralston's arms closed around her, and in that supreme moment of tenderness he knew that his gain had been greater than his loss. For the heart of Maude Alvin had awakened to a sense of better things.

INVENTORS ON THEIR METTLE.

Securing Control of the Air Is in the Minds of Many Just at This Time.

Within a radius of 100 miles of the city hall of New York there are something like 50 flying machines, some of them constructed on scientific lines by scientific men, and others have taken shape through wild fancy and untried theory. Go to the Morris park race track and you may understand how eagerly men are following this lure of the air. The Aeronautic Society of New York has leased the place for its aviation grounds and in the abandoned paddocks and sheds are housed a dozen finished and partly finished heavier-than-air machines. In overalls and jumpers, night and day, millionaires and mechanics are working side by side as if the very price of existence were the completion of their devices. In this group are three physicians, a lawyer, one capitalist, three or four successful engineers, one automobile dealer and several inventors and scientists, all of whom have parctically abandoned every other interest and activity in life aside from the pursuit of flying. Two of these machines have already been wrecked in initial trials, others may meet the same fate, but that will not dishearten the builders. They will keep on mending and trying. They have learned at last that men can not imitate a bird in flying. Man must fly in his own way and that way is not an easy one.—Van Norden's Magazine.

He Dug Frisco From the "Quake."

Timothy Carroll, the California inventor and builder who cleared away the debris of the San Francisco disaster, dumping it into the bay, adding 20 acres of usable ground to the Oakland side, has settled his claim for royalty on dumping wagons and apparatus used on beet dumps in Colorado.

For years the name of Tim Carroll has been a familiar one to Colorado mining operators and sugar beet growers. By the use of the dumping device of the Californian here thousands of dollars have been saved annually in the shipment of products and the removal of ore. For some time the companies have been using dumping apparatus made along the same lines, Carroll presented his claims and after an investigation, they were settled.

Carroll is one of the unique figures of the coast country. In the face of adverse criticism Carroll followed his own ideas concerning the disposal of the debris from the earthquake in the coast metropolis and succeeded by teh use of his apparatus on flatboats and wagons in building up 20 acres in the bay with the rubbish cleared from the wrecked buildings.—Denver News.

Mustaches and Love.

"If a good-looking young man," remarks a writer in a Berlin journal, "suddenly grows a wild and bushy beard, be sure he loves a woman who cares most for domestic joys. That is why one sees more full beards in Germany than anywhere else.

"If another man appears unexpectedly wearing a small upturned mustache of melancholy aspect, he surely loves a woman who adores classic art. But if a man, formerly famed for his beauty because of his beard, should appear clean-shaven, he has been captured by an American lady. If he wears a toothbrush mustache, which doesn't become him at all, he admires an Englishwoman who dotes on everything English."

PRACTICAL WATER SYSTEM FOR GENERAL FARM USE

Many Waters from Deep Wells, Which Are Otherwise Pure, Are Rendered Unfit for Use On Account of Iron.

In answering a query as to the best system for a practical water system for general farm use a writer in the Country Gentleman gives the following interesting facts:

It is a well-nown fact that many waters from deep wells which are otherwise pure are rendered unfit for domestic or for manufacturing purposes on account of the compounds of iron in solutiton in the water. Such water, after being exposed to the air or discharged through sprays or jets, very soon becomes cloudy and shows a reddish brown precipitate, which is ferric oxide, formed from a chemical combination of the carbonate of iron with the oxygen in the air. This ferric oxide can be removed by filtration and then the water usually becomes clear and wholesome and of excellent quality and loses its objectionable iron taste entirely.

In practice the removal of the iron is accomplished in various ways. We do not advise "letting the water stand" in order to aerate it. A much better way is to let the water fall a height of several feet from douches or sprays on a sand filter bed, which in turn removes from the water the iron precipitate. It is still better to arrange a percolating or trickling filter or aerator, from seven to eight feet high, filled with coke or other porous substances. The water to be purified is discharged over this filter in fine sprays and trickles down through the filter. The effluent should then be made to pass through a sand filter. Fig. 1 shows a rough sketch of the first method, while Fig. 2 shows the second. It is fortunate that the iron present in your well water is in the form of carbonate, because if it were sulphate of iron a chemical treatment by adding milk of lime or alum or both would be required, which would add considerably to the expense.

A third method consists in the treatment of the water with ozone, which has been largely developed by the large German firm of Siemens & Halske, but which has not passed the experimental stage in this country. The claim is made for this last method that it not only purifies the water but also kills the bacteria and chiefly the pathogenic germ. For this reason the ozone treatment of water has been recommended for the purification of a polluted water-supply. The generation of ozone requires a rather complicated electrical apparatus and for this reason it is too costly to be used for a small private water-supply.

We advise you to select a good gas engine pump, suitable for natural gas, and that you erect it in a small pump house over well at barn. The discharge pipe should be carried to the spring house, where the coke percolating filter and the sand filtration basin should be placed. The purified water can be led to the basin or reservoir which contains the spring water. The two supplies together will probably furnish a sufficient quantity for the residence, the tenant's house, the laundry and the garden. Judging from the number of horses and other livestock which you have, we should say you require a supply of at least 2,000 gallons a day. Your attic tank in the residence is not of sufficient capacity to hold this daily supply and we strongly urge you to consider the erection on a tower of suitable height of an elevated tank, the tank and pipes being frost proofed so as to be suitable for winter use. In that case the attic tank may be done away with.

GOOD, CHEAP FRAME LUMBER

Cedar Trees Can Be Used in Making Farm Buildings.

At the present time lumber is so high that it is out of the question for the poor or common class of farmers to build all the buildings they need, and so they have to do without. Of course, near the sawmill lumber is always cheap, but for the benefit of those that do not have these advantages I will tell how I framed several buildings on our farm.

We got some straight cedar trees and straightened them as follows: Sills and plates on three sides, the floor timbers on one side. When ready to lay in place we hewed the top ends all of a thickness where they were to rest on the sill, then hewed the butts, which will be much larger, down to the same thickness, but did not hew any more than was necessary to get the ends all of a thickness, and the tops will be as level as any joist. If any one is a little lower than the rest just put a shingle under the ends. The posts we hewed on two sides just to get one square corner. The studding and rafters we hewed on one side just enough to get a straight line to nail to. We peeled all the bark off as frame is then much lighter and looks far better. We halved the frame together, which saves lots of time, and is just as strong.

This frame we covered with cheap boards and then shingled them all over, and this made a cheap yet durable building. I have put up several buildings this way at about one-half the cost of such buildings if everything had to be bought of the contractor. We always used galvanized nails to put on shingles with, as the plain ones are not worth the time it takes to drive them.—Exchange.

Cutting Hay.

Our plan is to cut in the evening, when we can take the hay in the next afternoon. As soon as the dew is off in the morning we stir the cut clover with a tedder and then, if it is wilted enough to take up before noon or just after dinner, we haul it in. We have no trouble to make good, bright clover hay in this way if the weather is at all favorable. We sow a little timothy with our clover, because it makes better hay and helps in the curing. The best clover hay is made by raking up as soon as it is wilted, putting in shocks and letting it cure for two or three days, then turning it over and hauling in. If one has good, bright straw and the clover is not well cured, it is a good plan to mix some of the straw with the clover in the mow. This aids in curing and the stock will eat up both straw and clover. [illegible]

GOOD FEEDING SUGGESTION.

A ration consisting of two-thirds corn and cob meal and one-third bean meal may be fed to dairy cows with good results.

Most feeders find two carloads of cattle can be fed together to better advantage than a larger number.

Good protein, from clover or cow peas, combined with some nice corn stover (stover is simply the stalk without the ear, and may be used whole or shredded) will make a satisfactory roughage for feeding young heifers.

A limited amount of silage may be fed with satisfaction to sheep—say about ten pounds per head each day. But it should be fed in connection with some dry roughage, such as clover or alfalfa hay, or even mixed hay and straw.—D. B. Green, O.

Shortcake.

The strawberry shortcake, I love it, I love it; I prize it more dearly than tongue dare to tell! No sherbet or pudding or pie is above it; there's nothing in pastry I like half so well. Just give me a section as large as a platter, with freshly crushed berries spread over the lot, and I am contented and happy, no matter what ailment or trouble or sorrows I've got. Ho, bring on the shortcake, the strawberry shortcake, and always and ever I'm Jack-on-the-spot.—Los Angeles Express.

Bernard Koke, who had been at Twin Valley, Minn., where he had taken the remains of his deceased wife for burial, spent a part of the week in Red Lake Falls with his sister, Mrs. Jos. Salley. Mr. Koke formerly resided here. He is now engaged in the harness business at Malta, Montana. Mrs. Salley accompanied her brother to Montana, they leaving Wednesday. On her return she will bring Mr. Koke's eight-weeks-old baby with her and the child will be cared for in the Salley home.

Ed. Nelson got the "real live baby" given away by Manager Barr of the Bijou theatre Saturday night and there is great rejoicing at the Nelson household. But the joy is liable to be short lived. The baby was stolen shortly after it was acquired and was recovered just in time to prevent it being choked to death by the kidnappers. It is said that certain near black hand artists are planning to steal the baby. Nelson is so worked up over the conduct of the people who threaten to do the kidnapping that he sits up nights with his new charge and to quiet its wailings he gently croons, "we keep the pig in the parlor." As time passes the infant is waxing fat and the danger that the blood thirsty kidnappers will accomplish their design increases.

County Juvenile Court.

An important law passed by the legislature which went into effect in June was that extending the operation of the juvenile court to all the counties of the state. Under the new law the probate court is to to have jurisdiction in all cases in which the welfare of children is involved. Heretofore the probate court has only acted in cases of committment of dependent and neglected children to the state school at Owatonna but in future the probate judge will have the power to deal with incorrigible children and those charged with minor criminal offences. When such a child is brought before him he will appoint a probate officer familiar with the case; the youthful offenders will be sent to the state training schools only as a last resort. The plan is indorsed by the State Conference of Charities and Correction, and the Minnesota Educational association and is a distinct step forward.

Houses Become Vacant.

The Attorney General has ruled that when a house becomes vacant by the removal of the owner or occupant, and such absence extends over a greater period than thirty days, even though furniture and furnishings remain in the house, the house is vacant.

The insured in order to protect himself must have a vacancy permit attached to his policy to cover this hazard.

Call for Bids.

Sealed bids will be received by the County Commissioners of Red Lake County, Minnesota at the courthouse in Red Lake Falls up to 2:00 o'clock P. M. August 14th., 1909, for the building and completion of a county courthouse. All bids must be in strict accordance with the plans and specifications prepared by Fremont D. Orff, architect, Minneapolis, Minnesota, Lumber Exchange, and must be accompanied by a certified check for the sum of five per cent of the bid, made payable to C.A.Lindquist, Chairman of the board of County Commissioners, as an evidence of good faith that the successful bidder will enter into contract to erect and complete said building.

The successful bidder will be required to furnish an approvek bond for the full amount of the contract.

Plans can be seen on and after July 25th 1909, at the office of the County Auditor at Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, and at the office of the architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

The Board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

SPECIAL ELECTION SEPTEMBER 7

Charter Commission Has Made Report and Recommendation to Council.

Election to Vote on Proposed Amendments to City Charter.

The members of the charter commission, pursuant to the call of Mayor Duffy, met at the city hall Tuesday afternoon, July 27, and adopted a resolution recommending amendments to the city charter and recommending that a special election be called to vote on the proposed amendments.

Acting on these recommendations the city council has called a special election to be held Sept. 7 to vote on the proposed amendments. The proposed change in the city charter of the greatest importance is that that would give the council authority to grant long term franchises. The adoption of the amendment does mean that franchises will be granted: it simply gives the council authority to act. If the amendments are adopted the provision against exclusive franchises will remain in force.

The official publication of the report of the commission is made below:

Report of Board of Freeholders Constituting the Charter Commission.

We, the Board of Freeholders, duly appointed by the Judges of the District Court of the County of Red Lake as a charter commission of the City of Red Lake Falls in the County of Red Lake, and State of Minnesota, do hereby make this our report and certify that it is a correct record and statement of our proceedings.

Pursuant to notice issued by J. A. Duffy, Mayor of Red Lake Falls, and a member of this Board, the Board of Freeholders met at the City Hall on the 27th day of July, 1909, at one o'clock, P. M. There were present at said meeting the following members:—J. A. Duffy, A. P. Toupin, N. M. Watson, Fred Borchers, Theo. LaBissoniere, Joseph Helm, H. H. Zaiser, T. A. Crompe, Simon Paul, Arthur Lizee and Joseph Remick.

J. A. Duffy was elected President of the Board and A. P. Toupin Secretary.

Simon Paul offered the following resolution and moved its adoption which was seconded by N. M. Watson, and upon being voted upon was declared duly carried, there being 11 votes aye, and no votes no.

Resolved, that this Board report and recommend the adoption of the present charter of the City of Red Lake Falls as the same is set forth in Chapter 8, of the General Laws of Minnesota, for 1895 and laws amending same, but with the following amendments thereto:—

That section 138 of said charter (being section 138 of Chapter 8 of General Laws of Minnesota, for 1895) be amended so that the same shall read as follows:—

Sec. 138.—No exclusive nor perpetual franchise to be granted:

Term of franchise:—No exclusive nor perpetual franchise shall be granted by the city council; but said city council may in its discretion and on such terms as it may prescribe, grant to any person, co-partnership, or corporation, the franchise, privilege, or right, to use the streets, alleys, bridges, highways, and other public places of said city for the conveyance of electricity, gas, water, or sewerage, thereon, under, or over, by the erection of poles, wires, or the laying of conduits and pipes, for a term not to exceed 50 years and such franchise shall not be exclusive.

That section numbered forty one (41) of said Charter (being section numberd forty one (41) of Chapter eight (8) of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota for the year 1895) be amended so that the same shall read as follows:—

Section 41.—Elective officers.—The elective officers of said city of Red Lake Falls, Red Lake County, Minnesota, Mayor, Treasurer, Assessor, one Aldeman elected from each ward, and two aldermen elected from the city at large.

That section numbered two hundred three (203) of said Chapter eight (8) of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota, for the year 1895 be in all things, repealed upon the adoption of these resolutions.

That section numbered one hundred twenty nine (129) of said Charter (being section numbered one hundred twenty nine (129) of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota, for the year 1895, be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

Section 129. Improvements and vacation of Streets, Avenues and Alleys. It shall have the power to extend, widen, straighten, grade, drain, pave, repave, macadamize or otherwise improve any street, avenue or alley, or public ground, and to lay or order laid sidewalks, curbs, and gutters thereon, on the front, or side, or sides, or rear, of any lot or lots, or other real property abutting upon any street, avenue or alley in said city; also to establish a building line for any residence, or any business building, warehouse, or other building, along any street, avenue, or alley in said city, and prevent the erection of any building or other obstruction, in front of such line when so established.

Said resolution having been duly carried, we hereby report and recommend the adoption of the present charter as so amended.

Given under our hands this 27th day of July, 1909.

OUTLOOK OF CROPS PLEASES J. J. HILL

Conditions Indicate Much Money Will be Brought into Northwest.

"If the present crop matures as well as the present conditions indicate, it will bring a large amount of money into the northwest this fall," said James J. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern board of directors in answer to a question about the conditions of the northwest.

Mr. Hill has kept in close touch with industrial and agricultural conditions in this territory and is as well informed as any individual in the country. That he is optimistic is taken for granted.

When things go wrong in the territory from which the Great Northern hauls its freight, Mr. Hill takes an active part in putting affairs back in a smoothly running channel. At present he seems satisfied and, as a barometer of conditions in the business world, he indicates "fair weather."

"I do not care to forecast the situation in the industial pursuits out here," was his reply to all questions on that subject. "If the crops are good, good conditions should follow and there is every indication of an excellent crop in all grains that form the staple of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Nebraska, and other states in this section."

DITCH CONTRACT LET

Ditch No. 35, in Silverton and Smiley, Seven Miles Long.

The contract for the construction of county ditch No. 35 was last Saturday awarded to the Northwestern Drainage company of Grand Rapids, Mich.

The ditch when completed will be seven miles long and located in the towns of Silverton and Smiley.

The constracting company will receive 12 24-100 cents per cubic yard of earth removed. It is estimated that more than 73000 cubic yards of earth will be removed and it is estimated that the total cost will be more than $8000. By the terms of the contract the ditch is to be completed by Dec. 1, 1910.

spray higher than the brink of the cataract. The river is colored by the red soil, and flings a tawny mane into the air as it leaps from the rocky edge, which is of slate and as black as night. The falls are in their wild state, as the power flume leads from far above and does not mar the landscape. There is no sign of man's presence save the well worn paths, and the visitors stand on the very edge of a sheer descent of 100 feet, in the spray of the falls, and feast their eyes on the majestic play of the torrent. All around is a thick bush of alder, dill berries, blue berries and other northern shrubs in perfectly wild state.

The gopher delegation left Kakabeka reluctantly, and were soon back on the Hamonic by way of Fort William, the lusty rival of Port Arthur for commercial honors. Late Friday evening the Hamonic sailed for Duluth, and a final run of 180 miles along the picturesque north shore brought the editors back to Minnesota soil at noon on Saturday. Most of them remained together as far as St. Paul, going by the Northern Pacific in the afternoon after a couple of hours for sightseeing.

Good-byes were said before reaching St. Paul, where the pleasant outing of 1909 came to an end. Here the party, after a week's close association during which many new acquaintances and pleasing friendships had been formed, finally disbanded and sought their homes over various lines, carrying with them many pleasant memories and rich experiences from their most delightful vacation.

LANGUAGE OF MUSIC.

The Manner In Which It Appeals to the Human Heart.

To those musical agnostics who deny to music any beauties save those of design and maintain that of itself it cannot express ideas and feelings Redfern Mason makes appropriate reply.

But there is another side to the picture. What was it that made George II. rise in his place when they sang the "Hallelujah" chorus, thereby setting an example which is followed to this day? What was it in the finale of the fifth symphony that drew the Napoleonic veteran to his feet with the exclamation, "The emperor!" What sanctity in the Ambrosian hymns moved St. Augustine to tears?

During the wars of the French revolution it was forbidden, on pain of death, to play the "Ranz des Vaches" in the hearing of the Swiss soldiers, for so acute a longing for home did it bring upon them that they deserted in hundreds. Are we to think that there was no virtue in the music itself and that the effect produced was the outcome of purely accidental circumstances?

The Austrian government forbade Berlioz to play the "Rackoczy" march at Budapest, fearful of its effect on the inflammable Hungarians. Was the fire of patriotism kindled by the mere knowledge that the melody symbolized Hungary, or did the notes speak with tongues of flame?—Atlantic Monthly.

Vacuum Cleaners on Trains.

The Great Northern Railway has introduced another innovation on its transcontinental train between St. Paul and the Pacific coast. Vacuum cleaning machines are now used to keep the cars spick and span. The time honored broom has been relegated to a dark corner of the porter locker and its function hereafter will be performed by a machine in charge of a skilled operator. The apparatus comprises a vaccum pump driven by an electric motor and a metallic reservoir for receiving the dirt. The machine is mounted on wheels and is taken from car to car. There are special attachments for taking the dust out of upholstery, curtains, draperies, as well as from the carpet. The machine is a part of the train equipment and a uniformed operator has been added to the train crew; his only duty being to keep the cars neat and clean.

THE SEASON FOR GAME

Warden Munch Here and Gives Some Valuable Information.

Wm. Munch of Crookston, official guardian of all the game beasts and birds, was in town Monday and incidentally the information became public property that there will be much less illegal hunting this year than in previous years owing to the vigilance of the officials. The rigid enforcement of the game laws is having its effect. There is less illegal hunting and consequently there are lots of game birds in the country.

Owing to the attempt by some members of the last legislature to prohibit the killing of certain birds for a season, there is much confusion regarding the provisions of the game laws. For the information of the nimrods the Gazette got some timely information in condensed form from Mr. Munch. The dates and information given below are authentic:

Turtle dove, snipe, prairie chicken, grouse, woodcock, pluvver may be killed and had in possession between Sept. 7 and Nov. 7.

Quail, partridge and ruffled grouse may be killed and had in possession between Oct. 1 and Dec. 1.

Wild duck, wild goose and Brandt of any variety or any variety of acquatic fowl may be killed and had in possession between Sept. 7 and Dec. 1.

The limit for one day's hunt is fifteen birds. The limit for a hunt of several days is forty-five chickens or fifty ducks.

Cutting the Finger Nails.

Cutting the finger nails appears to have been the most indispensable service the ancient Roman barber rendered to his patrons. Martial, chaffing a fop who had tried to dodge the barber by using plasters to remove his beard, asks triumphantly, "How are you going to manage about your nails?" And the miser in Plautus collects the parings of his nails from the barber to make something out of them, apparently never dreaming that he could save money by cutting them himself.

Perfectly Reckless.

The members of the church voted that their dearly beloved and devoted pastor should have a vacation, and so he decided that he would visit a brother worker in the neighboring village. This good brother, recognizing his fellow worker in the Lord way back among the congregation on Sunday morning and wishing to show every courtesy, asked him to lead in prayer. But the visitor calmly replied: "You'll have to excuse me, dear brother. I'm on my vacation."

Threshermen Will Meet.

There will be a very important gathering in Crookston on Saturday August 14th, when the threshermen of the Red River Valley will meet in the city hall there to discuss prices to be charged this fall and other matters of interest.

This is the first attempt that has ever been made on the part of the threshermen of this section to get together. It is expected that practically evey thresherman in this section of the country will be present. The meeting will be held at two o'clock and all threshermen are invited to be present.—Crookston Times.

THE GREAT PYRAMID.

It Illustrates the Wonderful Ability of the Ancient Egyptians.

The cost of the labor and material necessary to duplicate the great pyramid of Gizeh at the present time would amount to considerably more than $50,000,000, according to a paper read before the Society of Engineers in New York city by E. S. Wheeler, says the American Architect. The cost of the material alone is estimated at $48,000,000.

This structure, one of the wonders of the world, is founded on solid rock at a depth of about 120 feet below the surface level and rises to a height of 454 feet. Its base covers an area of almost fifteen acres.

Mr. Wheeler's scheme for the reproduction of this pyramid contemplates first the setting of a base of concrete. This would represent about 2,000,000 cubic yards of material and would cost at least $10,000,000. The estimate for the superstructure is about $38,000,000, and it would contain 3,313,000 cubic yards of backing stone and 140,000 cubic yards of facing stone. Mr. Wheeler's estimate of labor is 24,000,000 days.

These figures are cited to show the great engineering skill of the Egyptians and the fact that no task in construction appeared to be too large for a people whose extant monuments showed their patience and ability to overcome obstacles that would daunt even the modern engineer.

As we act toward others we may expect others to act toward us.—Syrus.

MINNESOTA DAIRYMEN ORGANIZE

Will Fight Proposed Legislation Detrimental to Dairy Industry.

Paul Pry's Gossipy Comment About Politics and Things.

St. Paul, August 2.

There is no occasion to regret the recent attack made by certain St. Paul shippers of cream of the dairy and food department. No department of government will be any less efficiently conducted if a sharp lookout is kept on it. It is not likely the dairy and food department will be any worse off because Mr. French knows that those are watching him who are eager for the chance to catch him tripping. At this time anything that will have a tendency to induce dairymen to jealously guard their own interests and keep a sharp lookout for encroachments upon them should be especially welcomed.

Is There a Conspiracy?

Not that I think the dairy commission and Mr. French are likely to fail in their duty. On the contrary I believe that no department of the state government is conducted with a greater regard to the interests of the plain people which it vitally affects. The dairy and food department is not playing politics, nor has it been, either under Mr. Slater or the present incumbent; and from the fact that the centralizers would like to see it abolished, and the department made a mere adjunct of an academic institution like the State University, is only evidence that its management is too practical and too efficient to suit those nterests which appear to make a renewed attack on the dairying industry. All signs appear to me to indicate that the centralizers and the packers have pooled their interests with a view to concerted action to monopolizing the market for dairy products.

The Washington end.

It seems to me insignificant that the evidently carefully planned attack on the dairying and food department should have followed so closely upon the heels of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury that the tax of ten cents a pound on oleomargarine colored to resemble butter should be reduced to two cents a pound. The law now provides a tax of one quarter of a cent a pound on uncolored oleomargarine in conjunction with the tax of ten cents a pound on the butter colored oleo. Mr. McVeagh's recommendation can only have one purpose, namely, that oleomargarine may again be put on the market in competition with butter. Those who remember the prices for butter which prevailed before the present laws were enacted will know what that means.

The Organization at the Capital.

That the forces at Washington are fully organized to secure the repeal of the ten-cent tax on oleomargarine there can be no question. The recommendation comes, as I have said, from Mr. McVeagh, the Secretay of the Treasuy, a Chicago Capitalist, in close touch with the Armours, the Swifts and the other packers. Recently the packing interests took an active part in the election of a United States Senator from Illinois. To whom did they lend their support. To none other than to William W. Lorimer, who, when the present law was under consideration led the forces against it and only gave up the fight in the last ditch. Speaker Cannon's capitalistic affiliations are well known, and therefore it is not surprising to learn from Washington that the house committee on agriculture has aleady been framed up with a veiw to the repeal of the oleo tax.

The Executive's Hand.

There was another man who was active in the fight against the oleo tax when the battle was made for it by President Hoard and Secretary Knight of the National Dairy Association, and put every conceivable obstacle in the way of Congressmen Tawney and McCleary and the others who at that time championed the cause of the dairyman. That man was Scott oof Kansas. Scott is now slated to succeed Wilson as Secretary of Agriculture. His affiliation with the packers leaves no doubt of what his altitude will be. With McVeagh recommending a uniform tax of two cents on colored and uncolored oleomargarine, with Scott chapioning it, who can doubt that the easy-going president will adopt their view? Then with Cannon to lead the oleo forces in the house and with Lorimer to engineer the executive measures through the senate, it can readily be seen that the dairymen and farmers whose interests it so vitally affects will have the fight of their lives to pevent its passage. When it is remembered that the packers are behind the movement with practically unlimied money to be used in subsidizing Washington reporters and the press, to create public sentiment in favor of the reduction of the tax, and, if necessary, to influence voters, it can readily be under-

An Item of Interest.

In the museum of the San Francisco Mint one sees a lump of gold like a large bean, stamped on one side with the rude outline of a crowned archer. It is a persian daric which has come down from the time of Darius. This suggests the interesting fact that in the old coins of today are particles of precious metals which have come down from a very remote past as considerable of the material that goes into the new coins come from old ones re-melted. Another interesting fact is that Golden Grain Belt Beer, if served regularly at mealtime, will aid digestion and make rich, red blood. Keen appetite comes with its use. EIGHT HOUR DAY ON FARM

STATISTICS SHOW THAT FARMER DOES NOT GET UP AT DAWN AS HE USED TO DO.

CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVED

And 42 Cents' Worth of Food Every Day Is Living High, According to Government Figures Just Completed.

Washington, D. C.—No longer does the tired farm hand tumble out of bed at 4 a. m., with the prospect of sixteen hours' work before retiring—at least not in Minnesota. Farmhands in Minnesota have practically an eight-hour day, according to the department of agriculture.

Not only that, but the up-to-date farmhand lives off the fat of the land, the statistics showing he eats daily food which costs on the farm 42 cents. He eats $12.65 worth every month—estimating country costs and not city prices. It is figured by the department of agriculture that this is living high.

A bulletin just issued by the department deals with the work of state experiment stations. In Minnesota an important, although somewhat unusual line of investigation has been carried on relating to hours of labor on farms, wages paid hands, and the cost of living for farmers.

Investigation of farm wages in four localities for the years 1904-1907 showed that the average wage paid during the crop season (April to November, inclusive), a little over $26 a month, or 12.7 cents an hour, and the average for the other four months is $14 a month or 11.2 cents an hour, the hours of labor being much shorter in winter. The wages paid are not in addition to board, the cost of which has been added to the wages actually paid.

The hours of labor in three localities during six years were found to average for all months of the year 8.6 hours for week days with three hours' work on Sundays.

Studies of the cost of living showed that in Minnesota the average farm family uses annually farm produce worth $222.97, groceries and fuel costing $170.89, and house furnishings costing $32.57, while the value of the women's labor involved is $216.66, and that of men and horses $57.74, making a total cost of $700.83 per family a year. Of this $203.35 represents the actual cash outlay for supplies, to which must be added whatever wages may be paid to hired women, the balance representing the produce of the farm and the labor of the family.

The average cost of the board of hands was found to be $12.65 a month or 42 cents a day.

Will Fight Attempt to Lower Rate on Colored Oleomargarine.

Minnesota dairymen are not going to let the tax be taken off colored oleomargarine without a protest. Although the plan of Secretary McVeagh to decrease the tax from ten to two cents fell through this session of congress, some dairymen fear that the effort to remove the tax will be renewed at the regular session next winter and they are going to meet with the congressmen from this state to protest.

The meeting has been called by Dairy and Food Commissioner Andrew French and will be held in the state capitol Wednesday, July 28. Officials of the various dairy organizations have been invited to attend the conference. The tax of ten cents a pound on oleomargarine colored yellow to represent butter was adopted a few years ago after a strenuous fight.

DERRICK FALLS; THREE DYING.

Two Others Seriously Injured in Accident at Chisholm, Minn.

Duluth.—Three men will in all probability die, and two others were badly injured as the result of an accident at Chisholm, when a derrick on the new city hall broke and let two heavy cornices drop on the workmen. John Hamlin, Gust Hazgert and August Olson are probably fatally injured, and Frank Bellen and Arthur Diltman were slightly hurt.

Looking After Business.

"I like this flat very well," she said. "I will be very glad to rent it to you," replied the landlord.

You never know how much good there is in men until some dark day falls on us all.

STUDENTS TO BE ENUMERATORS.

Durand Will Seek to Keep Census Work Out of Politics.

Washington, D. C.—If Director E. Dana Durand, of the census bureau, has his way, students of the University of Minnesota will be be given preference for appointment as enumerators in the Minneapolis district next year. This preference may also extend to other districts in the state.

The directors' idea is that with college students as enumerators he will get the maximum of energy and intelligence, which is very desirable in making a count of the population and in getting other information required by the census law. In the past it has been the custom to give these places to active political workers in the various districts and in some instances the supervisors have been able to build up pretty good political machines through distribution of this patronage.

These machines have in some instances been operated for the benefit of the congressmen who were responsible for the appointment of the supervisors themselves.

It is expected that Mr. Durand's proposition to make university students and other young men in the same class enumerators of the census, will meet with opposition among members of congress who have in some instances at least, already promised places to their political friends.

DRYS TO AID GOVERNMENT.

Will Work to Suppress the Selling of Liquor to Indians.

St. Paul.—According to a communication received by W. G. Calderwood, secretary of the state prohibition committee, a move will be made soon by the department of the interior to have the treaties regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors to Indians on reservations carried out to the fullest extent where possible. At present there are six treaties, and it is proposed to have them strictly observed, especially in districts in the immediate vicinity of reservations. Mr. Calderwood says that the local prohibitionists will assist the department of the interior in any action it may take, and if an investigation is to be held instances will be submitted showing violations of the treaties.

Prohibitionists are already getting ready for the elections of next year, when they expect to make the best fight they ever put up. "We will have a candidate in every district of the state at the next election," said Mr. Calderwood. "We are going to have a full ticket, and wherever possible we have already selected our men."

$40,000 OFFERED IN PREMIUMS.

New Premium List of Minnesota State Fair Issued.

Novel in style, and of unusual typographical excellence, the 1909 premium list of the Minnesota State Fair, which has just been issued to the number of 15,000, contains a good deal of information which this annual publication has not heretofore carried. Including the introductory matter generally descriptive of the coming state fair, Sept. 6 to 11, and the almost complete list of the county and state fairs of the United States and Canada, the new volume has 200 pages and will be mailed to any address in response to a request addressed to Secretary C. N. Cosgrove Minnesota State Fair, Hamline, Minnesota.

MRS. STEENERSON HURT.

Wife of Minnesota Representative Is Struck by Bicycle in Washington.

Washington, D. C.—Mrs. Halvor Steenerson, wife of Congressman Steenerson of Crookston, was knocked down by a bicycle ridden by an unknown man, while she and her husband were out walking. Mrs. Steenerson ran from the middle of the street toward the pavement to escape an automobile and was struck by a bicycle coming in an opposite direction. There were some contusions of the right shoulder, thigh and knee but no bones were broken. It is expected that she will be about in a few days.

Lumberman Is Murdered.

Duluth, Minn.—Oscar Granlod, aged thirty years, an employe of a Cloquet lumber company, was shot and fatally wounded by another lumber employe on the tracks of the Duluth & Northeastern road, near Cloquet.

There was no motive for the shooting as far as known, though it is said there was an old grudge between the men.

News for Dad.

Tommie—I see wood yields about one-fifth as much heat as coal.

Bobbie—I guess my dad don't know that.

"Why?"

"Because, when he warms me he always uses a shingle."

Had a Good Start.

She—What an air of well-bred repose Cholly has.

He—Yes, but Cholly was naturally lazy to begin with.

Tariff Bill Is Completed

Called Back by Taft Conferees Reconsiders the Schedules. Sign the Report.

AGREE ON THE DISPUTED POINTS

Surrender to President's Views and Republicans Sign The Report

Washington, D. C., July 30.—The Payne-Aldrich tariff bill tonight stands completed, an agreement on all disputed points was reached this afternoon and at 4:55 p. m., the conferees report was signed by the republican conferees. It will go to the house tomorrow and be voted on by that body on Saturday. The senate will begin consideration of the measure as agreed to by the conferees on Monday.

Halted by the mandate of President Taft, the tariff conferees were compelled to turn back and revise their rates on lumber and gloves In a communication to Senator Aldrich and Representative Payne, the President demanded that the high rates on gloves as fixed by the house and the high rates on lumber as fixed by the senate should not be made a part of the conference report.

After struggling over these questions throughout the entire day the conferees surrendered to the president's view and signed the report. The report will go to the house tomorrow at noon and will be ordered to be printed. The house may be called to meet at 10 o'clock on Saturday for it is the intention of the leaders that the report shall be pushed through in one legislative day. Probably a week will be required to dispose of the conference report in the senate.

When the conferees fixed lumber and glove rates yesterday by shading very slightly the higher rates on each they were so certain that the president would consent to the arrangement that notices were sent to the democratic members of the conference committee to be present at 10 o'clock today to approve or disapprove of the conference report.

The president had other ideas of what the rates should be and he expressed them very forcibly in a letter. He said that lumber should not be more than $1.25 per thousand feet for rough, with the differentials fixed by senate on finished. He also declared that the senate rates on gloves, which are the same as the Dingley rates and much less than the house rates, would have to be adopted in order to obtain his endorsement.

It was not until after the democratic members had assembled that the White House communication was received at the conference chamber. Hurriedly opening the envelope, Senator Aldrich read the president's missive and called his republican associates to an adjoining room. The contents of the letter were discussed at some length and it was decided that the minority should be informed that the conference report had not been advanced to a stage where it could be submitted to them for their judgment. Senator Daniel and Represenative Griggs exhibited some annoyance at having been called into session prematurely, but Bailey had scented trouble for the majority and advised his associates to go in peace.

The republican members continued in session after the democrats left the chamber. There followed one of the busiest scenes witnessed about the corridors of the senate office building during the three weeks the bill has been in conference. Hurrying to and from the chamber were senators and members of the house with representatives of special interest to get in a final word with the conferees.

Later in the day representatives Fordney and Calderhead went to the White House and from there to the office of Speaker Cannon and then back to the conference chamber. Later they conferred with a number of northwestern senators who were interested in the lumber question. After their activities without the conference room, Speaker Cannon was seen hurrying down the main corridor. The door of the conference room was thrown open and he was permitted to enter without delay.

When the speaker concluded his visit to the conference chamber, he hurried down the corridor without stopping. One of the waiting newspaper correspondents asked him if the conferees had finished.

"I am not a member of the conference committee. How do I know?" responded the speaker. His reply, however, was garnished with certain emphatic expressions which gave it considerable weight. The speaker wore the unmistakable air of a man who had capitulated before a superior force.

TRAGEDY FOLLOWS QUARREL.

Hannibal, Mo., July 29.—A triple tragedy occurred here today when Charles Beasley shot and killed his baby, dangerously wounding his wife and then committed suicide. The first shot was directed against the baby. Mrs. Beasley fled, but her husband caught her and forced her to return to the house. She slipped away a second time and he fired at her as she ran. Then he stretched himself on the floor beside the dead child and turned the revolver on himself.

MARINES GUARD ROYALTY.

Kiel, July 29.—The Russian imperial yacht Standard with Emperor and their children on board, started through the Kiel canal today. Both banks of the canal are picketed with marines, and squadrons of cavalry are patrolling the country.

A storm now prevailing in the North sea will probably delay the voyage to Cherbourg, where Emperor Nicholas is going to pay a visit to President Fallieres.

Spain on Eve of Revolution

Reverses Continue in War and Serious Riots Occur in Capitol.

"DOWN WITH THE KING" IS CRY

Artillery Is Ordered in Streets to Quell the Rising Disturbances.

Madrid, July 28.—The revolution in Catalonia has reached a serious stage. There is much bloodshed and artillery has been employed in the streets of Barcelona to quell the outbreaks. The city is terror stricken. The revolutionists are reported to be fighting desperately behind barricades. The troops include mounted artillery, and the defenses of the rebels have been raked with shot.

King Alfonso hastened back to Madrid from San Sebastian today and at once issued a decree proclaiming martial law and the suspension of constitutional guarantees throughout Spain. Orders have been given to the governors of the provinces to crush the revolution at any cost, without hesitation and without pity.

Today marks a black chapter in Spain's history, for there was tragedy both at home and abroad. The king reached here in time to learn that part of his army at Melilla had had a bloody battle with the Moors, which, though the final victory was won by the Spaniards, cost the lives of twenty-one officers and a total of 200 Spaniards killed or wounded.

The center of the rebellion is Barcelona, to which city the government is rushing extra troops. A dispatch this morning said that the Barcelona revolutionists had been defeated as a result of desperate charges by the troops, but a dispatch at noon announced that fighting had begun again, the artillery using heavy guns to demolish the barricades. The peaceful section of the population fled in fright to their homes and locked and barred themselves in. A military proclamation has been issued at that city that no life is safe an dwarning peaceful citizens to remain under cover.

The greatest inquietude reigns in Madrid. King Alfonso was closeted until a late hour with Premier Naura and an official note was issued saying that the situation was grave and that the rebellion must be repressed with an iron hand, as the Catalonians were struggling to engulf all Spain in a revolution.

The hostility of the people against the Moroccan campaign, which has been followed by widespread disturbances, is based on resentment that the nation has been plunged in a foreign war and that the nation's sons are being sacrified merely because of opposition to a private mining undertaking. The poorer classes are especially bitter, complaining that the man who can pay $300 is exempt from military service. It is the poor, therefore, who are forced to go to Africa to meet death.

The greatest anxiety has been caused in Spain by the withholding of the casualty lists of the fighting at Melilla. Special dispatches from Madrid describe the situation as extremely grave. King Alfonso was wildly hooted in the streets on his arrival, and the government is doing its utmost to minimize the effect of the crushing reverse suffered by the Spanish force at Melilla. It will be obliged to send large reinforcements to that point.

In Catalonia the socialists and other extremists are fanning the flames of revolution. Already the cry is heard:

"Down with the king!"

Latest advices from Barcelona state that eight persons have been killed and fifty wounded in a collision between the police and populace. The soldiers refused to obey orders to shoot into the mob, which acclaimed them with cries of "Long live the army." At night Barcelona is in darkness. All the shops have been closed and shuttered and activities outside the mob and the police have been completely suspended.

COMMENDED FOR ASSAULT.

Senator Is Landed By Judge For Beating Waiter.

Baltimore, Md., July 28.—Declaring that in the circumstances the assault was justifiable, Police Magistrate Grannon, this afternoon dismissed the charge against William J. Stone of Missouri, of having assaulted Lawrence G. Brown, a waiter on a Pennsylvania railroad train.

Justice Grannan said:

"Senator Stone, I have traveled a great deal in my time. I can fully appreciate the treatment that you received at the hands of Brown, who it has been shown, was discourteous in the extreme. I feel that you had sufficient provocation and that you were absolutely justified in reprimanding and striking Brown. I dismiss you."

The crowd applauded until the magistrate rapped for order.

The case grew out of an incident of the trip yesterday of Senator Stone from Philadelphia to Washington, during which he become involved in a dispute wit hthe colored waiter and struck him.

FARMERS' UNION IN SESSION.

Columbia, S. C., July 28.—That the South Carolina branch of the Farmers' Union is rapidly spreading its membership and influence to every nook and corner of the state was evidenced by the large and representative attendance at the opening here today of the annual convention of the organization. Reports in regard to the affairs of the union were presented and several speakers of note discussed the principles and purposes of the organization.

RECEIVERS ARE DISCHARGED.

Pillsbury-Washburn Receivers Turn Over Property.

Boston, Mass., July 28.—In furtherance of a plan for reorganization, Albert C. Loring, Charles S. Pillsbury and Albert C. Cobb, ancillary receivers of the Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills company, have been discharged. They have turned over the property in their possession to the principal receivers in Minnesota.

The KITCHEN CABINET

WHEN HUSBAND'S SICK.

IN SCOTLAND all the gude wives say:
"There is na luck at a',
There is na luck aboot the hoose,
When my gudemon's awa'."
But, with all deference to what
Old Scotland's wives may say,
My gudemon sick, at home, is worse,
Than my gudemon away!

I get the water-bottle—no,
He wants a mustard plaster;
And every time he feels his pulse,
He swears it's going faster.
That he is getting better,
He never will agree;
But if I think him worse, he'll say:
"Don't cry Calamity!"

"Gangrenous trouble will set in,"
Of that he's very certain.
"Turn down the light; pull up the shade!
Let air in; close the curtain!"
These things must all be done just so,
And they must all be done quick,
"There is na luck about the hoose,"
When my good man is sick.

Bridget's Beatitudes.

Blessed is the sour cream; it makes excellent biscuit, and takes the place of both milk and butter. Use with soda in the proportion of a teaspoonful of baking soda to a pint of thick cream. It also serves in plain loaf cake or spice cookies.

Blessed is the new style which admits of salted almonds being served on the cloth without the formality of extra dishes.

Blessed is the gridiron which is piping hot when the meat is placed upon it. Otherwise the steak will be tough. The sudden grilling retains the juices. Use little, if any, extra grease. Neither should steak be pounded; by this barbarous method all the juices escape. If the meat is tough or of inferior grade, lay it half an hour in a weak solution of vinegar.

For the Banquet.

This was the spread recently set before a crowd for the chef d'oeuvre of the banquet: A whole lamb was stuffed with a whole turkey; the turkey was stuffed with a whole chicken; the chicken with a squab; the squab, in turn with a humming-bird.

This sounds very much like the banquets of Lucullus, and a pessimist might be pardoned for a gloomy view of the return to the days of nightingales' tongues, and the brains of peacocks, served a la Roman.

"THROUGH-OTHER" NORA.

AS A colleen, my Norah,
Had byes all before her,
And they came from afar and a-near,
But Norah, machreo,
Is a throuble to me,
Since her housekeepin' ways are so queer.

For a cat-and-dog life,
Is a "through-other" wife.
And though, bedad, Norah's a daisy;
I would really like
A shillelah or pike,
When Mavourneen is shiftless and lazy.

Now, wid order and care,
There'd be room for us there,
(Just Norah, myslif and the pig).
If she'd sweep a bit more,
And keep things off the floor,
Wan room wad be almost too big!

So I think some foine day,
I'll be runnin' away,
To Killarney, Tralee or Athlone,
And me and the pig,
Wid some praties and swig,
In a cabin we'll live all alone.

"Through-other" is an Irish expression meaning careless, untidy, shiftless. It is the same peculiarity which in the neighboring Scotland is called 'ne'er-do-well." It has reference, especialy, to domestic concerns. It is the chief fault of the Irish peasantry that they are not neat; not systematic; not orderly. And it is a fault in which they are, alas, not alone. Many a woman in all countries, everywhere, is there who forgets the salt, puts too much soda in the muffins; has ever a germ-laden dishcloth and pots with broken lids. All these are "through-other" tricks. They are fatal to the peace which should prevail in the household. The "through-other" woman works harder; her hours are longer; her lot is harder than that of the systematic, tidy, orderly woman whose work is managed with regularity, system and forethought.

There are many "Pats" in the world, and happy is the wife who gives them no excuse, by her housekeeping, to go running away,

In a cabin, wid praties and swig.

Peach Chutney.

To four pounds of peaches, peeled and pits removed, add a pint and a quarter of vinegar and stew till soft. Then mix and pour together a half pound each white mustard-seed, chopped onions, sugar and raisins; one-quarter pound ginger root, and an eighth of a pound each of garlic and dried peppers. When mixed well, add to the fruit with three-quarters pint additional vinegar. Boil slowly together 15 minutes and seal.

To Keep Celery.

To prevent celery from having the rusty appearance which spoils it for salads, keep it closely wrapped in paraffin paper in a closed, cool place. Also avoid using water on it until a short time before serving. The discarded stalks are excellent for soups, gravies, etc., being more effective than celery salt.

Be Not Too Ready with Excuses.

That man who always is searching for excuses for his short-comings is a bugbear in business life. To find an excuse almost always involves some one or more of his fellows. To have his excuses accepted tends to place his fellows more or less under censure, and whether the censure be just or unjust, friction results inevitably.

Forgetting Their Troubles.

Some people act as if they were afraid they might forget their troubles if they didn't talk about them all the time.—Chicago Daily News.

Gambling in Green Goods

By JOHN IRVING DAY

Garnering the Gold by a Unique Method, Originated and Practiced by "Doc" Floyd

"HERE'S hoping that you get even, alderman." Doc Floyd raised a goblet of sparkling burgundy, across the brim of which he glanced and smiled at the member of the High Rollers' club who was host at a dinner he was giving in part payment of a bet that there was not a man in the country with $5,000 who could be beaten out of that amount on the ancient "gold brick" game. The dinner end of the bet was merely a paltry side issue for the big ex-alderman had also wagered $5,000 and lost that, too.

Doc Floyd had asserted that even in the twentieth century the time-worn "green goods game" could be worked.

"Have you got the nerve to tell me that you can put over the old green goods thing," was the amazed demand of Alderman Mehanty. "I'll bet just one more bundle of $5,000 and again a dinner for the crowd that it can't be done. Why the biggest sucker in the country would take your flash bank roll away from you if you tried to work that."

"Well, maybe he would," returned Floyd, but I'll just bet you it can be done and will let Cleland do the rough work and I'll just go along to oversee it. I may have to find the man, but I'll let Jack do the trimming."

"And I'll take half of Floyd's end of the bet that they put it over," broke in Col. Powley once more. Is it a bet?"

"It is. I'm game for another try," replied the alderman.

"How about it, Jack? Can we do it?" quired Floyd of a tall, cold eyed dyspeptic looking person who had sat silent, sipping his wine and puffing a big cigar throughout the bantering conversation.

Jack Cleland merely grunted his assent. He was the one pessimist of the party, but always dependable and a handy man to have in any deal.

A bell clanged, a gate slammed and the conductor and a belated passenger climbed aboard the Twentieth Century Limited train which was leaving the La Salle street station, Chicago for its 18-hour spin to New York. The big engine throbbed and the long train of rolling palaces slid out of the shed without a jerk or tremor, as easily as a trim sail boat propelled by a gentle breeze. At the forward end of the train, the buffet car, a comfortable small club on wheels, already was more than half filled with passengers. Solid looking business men were scanning the market pages of the afternoon papers. At one small table, the steward was opening a large bottle of wine for two New York theatrical managers, who were drinking to the success of the new play that they had produced in Chicago. They were satisfied with its initial performance and were hurrying back to look after other interests.

Seated on one side of the car Doc Floyd was contentedly puffing a cigarette while on the opposite side of the aisle, Jack Cleland pulled at a strong cigar, and neither man glanced at or seemed to know of the presence of the other. All was quiet save for the businesslike conversation of two showmen. The vestibule door opened and into the car came Solomon Rosenberg, wise man of the west in which section he had imbibed the air of freedom in speech and manner.

Acquaintances are almost as easily made in the smoking car of a train as on shipboard and here was Floyd not 20 miles out of Chicago drinking with a person whose natural propensities for "butting in" with strangers could not be overcome. Within ten minutes after they had met, Solomon Rosenberg was narrating the story of the most recent happenings of his life and riding to a swift and certain fall. Doc Floyd, according to the song of Solomon, came to know that fortune was easy of acquirement in the booming mining camps of Nevada. Solomon brazenly admitted that he had just cleaned up a clear profit of $25,000 selling the stock in a worthless mining claim that had never been touched with pick or shovel to a gullible public at five cents a share. He announced that he was now on his way to New York to treat himself to a grand, good time as a reward for his own astuteness.

"It's as easy as taking pap from a baby,' Solomon told Floyd. "Why they had me sweating blood down on the race track at Oakland where I was making book, when I heard of the good graft in Nevada. No more bookmaking for mine. It's too tough a game. You stand a chance to lose there and I found an easier graft."

Oh yes, Solomon was a wise one. He knew it and was proud of it. Floyd had listened to his talk and wondered the while, whether there was a chance to take some of Solomon's easily gotten wealth and also lower his stock of conceit. He concluded that it might be well worth while to cultivate his new acquaintance. It was at least worth trying, so he ordered another bottle which further mellowed the talkative one, whose tones by this time had disturbed a commercial traveler who sat near him running over columns of figures in his sales book.

The traveling man appeared slightly annoyed as he glanced toward the wine drinkers. Suddenly he seemed to think of something and placing his memoranda in his pocket he turned to Floyd and his companion and asked if they cared to kill the time with a small game until the call came for dinner in the dining car.

"Sure," was the reply of Solomon, answering for Floyd as well as himself. "My friend and I will play if you'll dig up some one else."

A telepathic thought seemed to travel from Floyd to Jack Cleland who was looking at the party from the opposite side of the car. The others also seemed to notice his presence at the same time and it appeared a mere chance that he was invited to make the fourth man in the game.

The play was not resumed after dinner, Cleland saying that he had lost about all he could afford, but the party stuck together and when it came time to retire for the night, Solomon, Floyd and Cleland had all agreed to make their headquarters at the Hotel Astor during their stay in New York and see more of each other. The drummer had told them that his home was in the city but that he hoped to look them up during their stay.

"What's the game, Floyd?' inquired Jack Cleland who had visited his friend's room in the hotel ten minutes after they had reached the big Broadway hotel.

"Well, old top, you know what we are on here for," was the reply. "You've got to sell an order of green goods to some one. You are lucky because I've already found your man for you. It must be some one, so why not our friend Solomon? He's already delivered himself."

"What's the use of bothering with anything else when we can get what he's got in a card game?" demanded Cleland.

"But, how about that bet with the alderman? We've got to make good on that, you know. And just look how easy it is for you. Solomon is a wise old eagle from the crags of the Sierras or whatever mountains they have in his part of the county. Ostensibly I'm a Chicago lawyer on here to do a little legal work and to have a good time. Likewise, ostensibly, you are a traveling auditor for a railroad here to testify before the interstate commerce commission. Our friend Rosenberg likes my company so I'll let him cultivate it and in a couple of days you can get busy. See Danny Roberts and get the lay of the land and then attend to all the other details of getting the bank roll in shape. You go on down stairs. I'm to meet Rosenberg there soon. We'll both have to appear pretty busy during the day but we can meet late in the afternoon. Another little game in which Solomon may win a hundred or so may add to his good feelings, and I'll put him over a few high jumps while the lights are burning brightest on the Great White Way."

The trio met in the lobby of the hotel a few moments later and Solomon insisted on having just one drink before they parted company for the day and then also insisted that they dine together that evening. The only dissipation Cleland would indulge in that evening after dinner was the theater to which he consented to accompany Floyd and Solomon. After the theater, however, Floyd was indeed the gay man of law away from home for a good time and he put Solomon through such paces as to endear him to the heart of that boisterous person.

This journey through the tenderloin was followed by another. Solomon liked the gay life but was beginning to have a pain in his pocketbook, so that when the third evening after his arrival in Gotham, Cleland proposed another game of cards, saying that he wanted revenge for his loss on the train, there was ready consent on the part of the westerner, who proposed to make some one else pay his expenses if he could. Cleland already had found the drummer's telephone number and invited him to dine and join them in another little friendly game.

Again Solomon won, but his winnings were small. The salesman also was allowed to carry away a few dollars for his evening's work. Floyd, however, made a heavy winning and Cleland lost $2,000, playing with the feverish recklessness that comes to the average loser at cards. The game broke up when the salesman announced that he would have to quit and get a few hours' sleep before appearing at his place of business. Cleland went off to his room with a grouch, refusing even to take a "night-cap" drink. Solomon, however, readily accepted Floyd's invitation to take in some of the all night restaurants.

"I wonder if our friend has left town without saying good-by," remarked Solomon to Doc Floyd two days after the poker game in which Cleland had lost his money to Floyd. He had not appeared since that time.

"I wonder?" replied Floyd. "Let's inquire of the clerk at the desk and see if he's gone." Acting upon this suggestion they learned that Mr. "McCleland," the name under which Cleland was known to them, was still in town, and in fact was in his room at that moment.

"Let's go up and see what ails him," proposed Floyd. "Maybe he's not feeling well."

In his room the two callers found Cleland pacing the floor with a worried look on his face. It was anything but a cordial welcome which he gave them.

"Not ill, I hope," said Floyd. "We'd missed you for a couple of days and thought we'd look you up. Haven't cut us out, have you?"

"To tell you the truth, fellows, I haven't felt very cheerful since I made that losing. I'm only a salaried man, you know, and can't really afford to play that kind of a game, even if my salary is a big one. It isn't that I'm worrying about just now, though, for I've got a chance to get more than even. My conscience will hardly let me do it though, and besides I've got to have more money than I've got to put the deal through."

"Buck up, and tell us about it" broke in Solomon. "And say, kid, don't let your conscience put too much weight on you. Throw it away and get rid of the handicap, but don't do anything to get into jail. I don't mind telling you that there are two or three places in this country right now where I don't want to go for fear the jail doors would open quick to get me. Our friend here is a lawyer. Let him advise you."

"I wonder if I should tell you?" replied Cleland, brightening perceptibly, polished actor that he was.

"Yes, go ahead and out with it," returned Floyd. "You know we lawyers hear some strange stories now and then and can't afford to be too particular as to our clients."

"Well, I'll tell you on one condition," agreed Cleland. "That condition is that you come in on the deal with me. I haven't got enough capital to put it through, anyway. There's no danger in it, and it's a sure way to make a big haul."

Both Floyd and Solomon agreed to come in on any deal where they could see a sure and quick profit, and asked for particulars.

"It's perfectly simple," explained Cleland. "I once did a young fellow a good turn and kept him out of a lot of trouble. He's the trusted messenger in the Nineteenth National bank here now. This bank is the clearing house for a lot of smaller banks and also gets the biggest part of the city's deposits. They get thousands of dollars in old and dirty money every week which they turn in to the subtreasury on Wall street, getting new bills in return. This young friend of mine has been the messenger and made the exchanges. He says they never even open the sealed packages of bills that he takes to them and which have been certified to by the officers of the bank. The subtreasury simply O. K's the amount on the back of the package and forwards it with a lot of similar bundles to Washington, where the old and dirty money is never counted, but just ground up and destroyed. He has thought the whole plan out and says he can substitute a phony package for the one with the old bills in it. He has to have some one in the deal with him, for he would never dare to try to get rid of the old money. I saw him this afternoon and to-morrow he will have to make his regular weekly trip, and the package already is made up with $30,000 in good money in it. All he wants is half for his share and I can give him $15,000 in $100 and $500 clean bills and take the package. I only have about $7,000 to my name, so I will have to get some one to go in the deal with me. You two can come in for $5,000 each. Are you on? And wait a minute, you needn't agree right now, but meet me at ten o'clock in the morning and go with me to the Nineteenth National and see my friend for yourself."

The two agreed to meet Cleland on the morrow and said good-night. "And what do you think of it?" inquired Floyd as they went down on the elevator. "I'm a little afraid of it."

"Well, let's look into it, anyway," returned Solomon. "If there's a chance to pick up some easy money, I want it."

On the following morning they were convinced that the deal was a good one when they went to the Nineteenth National with Cleland, and visiting the safety vault section of the bank, met Danny Roberts as that young man came out of a small compartment in his shirt sleeves with a package of papers in his hands and a pencil behind his ear. Danny looked the part of a busy clerk and they heard him whisper nervously to Cleland that "it was all right." He added that he would be at the appointed place at precisely 12 o'clock.

The appointed place was a small dingy office of a dilapidated building on New street. Cleland explained that it was the office of a friend who dealt in curb stocks and was seldom in, but allowed him free use of the place. The trio were waiting when Danny Roberts, carrying a suit case, entered. He immediately took from the case two packages, exactly alike in appearance and as to outer signs and seals. Quickly cutting one of them open, he disclosed large bundles of money. It took a half hour to count this out and ascertain that there was $30,000 in the lot. Fifteen thousand dollars in large bills were placed in the hands of Danny, who hurried away. In five minutes the old bills of perfectly good money were divided into three packages of equal amounts and tied up into neat paper-bound parcels on the roll-top desk.

Just at that moment there was a knock on the locked door of the office and Cleland slammed down the top of the desk and kicked the waste paper underneath before he went to answer the summons.

"It was only a customer looking for my friend," he remarked, as he returned and raised the top of the desk, disclosing the three neatly tied parcels. "You fellows had better take your bundles and separate. We will all meet at the hotel for dinner."

Solomon and Floyd, acting like two conspirators, agreed to take separate conveyances uptown to their hotel and to meet there later and drink to their good luck.

Two hours later, when Floyd had not put in appearance, Solomon began to feel nervous. He was afraid something had happened to Floyd and Cleland, but for another half hour he did not suspicion anything further, and then he suddenly decided to go to his room and investigate his newly acquired wealth.

"Stung!" yelled Solomon when he undid the parcel and found a tightly bound package of tissue paper with a dollar bill on each outer side. "And I never once thought of the old green goods game!"

PRACTICAL ROUND BARN FOR SUCCESSFUL FARMER

When Built Strictly So, It is Very Expensive.—Plan For Erecting Stable and its Cost.—By J. R. Bridgman.

There is no economy in building a round barn that is, strictly round, writes J. E. Bridgman in Orange Judd Farmer. The barn herewith illustrated has 26 sides, nearly 12 feet long, making a barn 94 feet in diameter. The sills, plates, roof, etc., in a strictly round barn are very expensive and the finished work will not last as well as when built as shown. The floor space of the first floor is just about the same as if round and the hay loft is very little smaller. However, the building may, of course, be built round if desired. In this case the walls should be lathed with metal lath, over rough boxing, and plastered with two coats of portland cement. In fact, this finish is to be preferred in building any shaped barn, as it requires no paint and practically no repairs.

The floor plan of the barn shown is self-explanatory. It has stalls for 40 milch cows, three bull pens, two hospital stalls, pen for baby beef that will accommodate about 2⅓ cars of calves, stalls for seven horses, including the two box stalls and the feeding room and silo. The silo is 16x34 feet, will hold about 140 tons of silage and requires about ten acres of average corn to fill.

The hay loft has 166,500 cubic feet of space and deducting the silo and bins for ground feed will hold 300 tons of loose hay. The ground feed is stored in hopper-shaped bins above the feed room and drawn down through small spouts as wanted. The hay is handled with hay forks and to locate the trolleys as near the roof as possible trap doors are left in the loft floor and the hay hoisted from the driveways. A circle trolley may be installed or two straight ones. Several large hay doors are also built in the outside walls above the loft floor. The silo, the floors of the cow stalls, including the gutters and mangers, also the eight-foot driveway around the silo are of cement and, while it is intended to install litter and feed carriers it is also intended to drive around the entire barn or the feed floor with a cart if desired. The interior arrangement of first floor may, of course, be changed in several ways and the cows faced in the opposite direction, etc., or stalls and other equipment arranged for different stock.

The barn as shown has about the same floor space as a barn would have 36 feet wide and 180 feet long. The ventilation is always much better in the round barn, the work of caring for and feeding may be accomplished with less labor, there are never any drafts on the stock, the building may be built for less money and is much stronger. As shown, the barn has a stone foundation, the roof is covered with asbestos roofing felt and the walls covered with six-inch drop siding. Everything is of the best and all exposed woodwork painted two coats. This building contracted at this point would cost about $4,700 completed, without the cow stanchions. These are not figured for the reason that every cow man has his own ideas of the cow stall and stanchion he wishes to use. Where home labor is used and the lumber can be secured for less than $30 per thousand the barn may, of course, be erected for less.

UP-TO-DATE HORSE STALL

Illustration and Plan for Erecting Quarters for Equine.

The features of the horse stall shown in the pen sketch are the hay chute, manger, feed box and door at the rear of the feed box. The hay chute is built outside of the stall and connects with the upper floor. It also has a door near the top on the outside of the stall by which hay may be fed from the lower floor. The chute is three feet wide and two feet deep. The upright bars are eight inches apart. The bottom of the chute is made slanting to the front, so with much or little hay in it all will be in reach of the horse. The manger and feed box are the same width and depth, one foot deep and two feet wide. The partition between them sets off two feet from the end, which makes the feed box 2x2x1 feet. There is a door to the feed box through which all feed may be given, thus preventing any accident likely to happen by going into the stall with feed or lantern.

I prefer concrete floors, but for those who prefer plank the floor should be about three inches lower at the horse's heels, with the plank running as shown in the cut. This makes the stall easy to sweep and to keep clean.—J. Wesley Griffin.

Plant Pumpkins.

The pumpkin likes warm weather. So it is not too late to plant some yet. Many farmers put them in with their corn, but they may be grown in a patch by themselves the same as watermelons.

It pays to have pumpkin feed along in the fall and early winter. They are a succulent food and come after most other crops have largely passed. They thus serve to keep open the alimentary canal and ward off disease.

Some farmers claim that when pumpkins are fed hog cholera never comes. This is because the pumpkin keeps off the constipation when the hogs come heavily onto the new corn diet. As in man, the animal is more apt to contract disease when the alimentary canal is blocked with putrescence and disseminating poison through the system.

Lawn Beautifies Home.

A good lawn is the best part of the home grounds and a good lawn mower is one of the essential tools for making the good lawn. Money in a lawn mower is money well invested. Keeping the grass of the grounds about the dwelling closely clipped kills out and keeps down weeds, gives all of the grass plants an equal chance and makes the grounds neat and sanitary. The last is not the least of these benefits.

BLOOD NOT THE ONLY THING

Improved Breeds of Live Stock Reached by Care and Feeding.

It has been said that the kind of live stock kept in a community marks the advance of the community's progress as much as the kind of school houses. In selecting live stock we have no better guide than the well-recognized law of selection furnished by nature. The practice of careful and intelligent selection should be thoroughly understood by all farmers. Small flocks of sheep, herds of cattle and even the pig exhibit a superiority as a result of the care bestowed upon them.

The average farmer will succeed better in the work of improving his farm stock by using pure bred sires and grading up than by investing too much money in high-priced breeding animals.

Many farmers who have attempted to breed pure bred animals have been sorely disappointed. While they began, perhaps, with good foundation stock and undoubtedly would have succeeded had they given them proper care and feeding, yet the idea seemed so firmly fixed upon their minds that if the improved animals were better than the common ones they formerly kept they would prove more profitable than the common ones, even when they were kept under the same conditions. This theory is all wrong. The improved breeds of live stock have all been brought to their present high state of perfection by selection, liberal feeding and good care and unless we are prepared to continue this treatment we had better keep along with our common herds and flocks that have become more or less accustomed to hardships and neglect.

Land burned over almost always comes up with an inferior growth, such as gray birch, wild cherry and soft maple. Such land offers the most hopeful chances for cheap improvement through seeding or planting pines and cutting the other trees in a few years.

The Little Falls Herald has bought the Democrat of that city, and a consolidation is the result.

We confess that we're up a tree on the tariff question. Shall we stand by the republican party or by the Minnesota delegation.

Chicago has passed the two and a half million mark in population, and St. Paul and Minneapolis have a combined, total of 525,000, according to the directory figures.

Free hides doesn't mean cheaper shoes. It only enables the manufacturer to get his new material cheaper and make a larger profit. What the people wanted was a lower tariff on manufactured leather goods.

If the Minnesota congressmen had voted their records would be pretty straight. But it must be remembered that Cannon is responsible for the Aldrich bill in the house. He appointed Payne as chairman of the ways and means committee, and he also appointed a conference committee of members who were pronouncedly in favor of upward revison.

The Northfield News says that Frank Eddy is in Washington ostensibly on private business but really, it is believed in search of an office. While the News trusts that his quest will prove successful, it will be sorry to see him leave Minnesota, where he has done some good work, and in which his versatility, no less than his phrase-making, has added to the gaity of otherwise dreary campaigns.

Tariff revision bodes ill for the party in power. The tariff bill of 1878 defeated the republicans; the McKinley bill defeated Harrison in 1892; the Mills bill beat the democrats in 1896, and the Dingley bill would have driven the republicans from power but for the Spanish war. The Aldrich bill, the worst of all, is a clean-cut invitation for the voters to come along and take another whack at the republican party.

Jim Tawney stuck to Cannon to the last. It required a high degree of courage on Jim's part to sign his own death warrant, especially in view of the fact that every other representative of Minnesota voted aganst the conference report on the Aldrch bill. Jim was loyal, at the expense of his seat in congress and his political future. But loyalty to the people of Minnesota is a higher virtue than is loyalty to Cannon and Aldrich, and it is inconceivable that Mr. Tawney can be re-elected in the face of the universal demand for the defeat of the infamous tariff bill.

An Arkansas editor published the following salutatory in the first issue of his paper: "Our aim is to tell the truth, though the heavens take a tumble; our paper, of the people, for the people to be paid for by the people; our religion, orthodox, with a firm believer in hell for delinquent subscribers; our motto, take all in sight, and rustle for more; our policy, to love our friends, and brimstone our enemies. If thine enemy smite the on the cheek, smite him with haste and dexterity at the butt of his most convenient ear. What we advocate, one country, one flag and one wife—at a time. Our object, to live in pomp and oriental splendor."

ONLY THE TAG LEFT.

"Gov. Johnson has done all that was expected of him, and a few things more. Democrats, also, have satisfied the public expectations in the executive departments, as well as their republican predecessors did.

"The most effective members in the last legislature were Democrats, and they showed an independence and moral sense that put the majority of the Republicans to blush, while in the finesse of the game they were easily superior. There seems no reason left for electing Republicans, except the tag, or in defeating the Democrats, save because they are of that name.

"There is not one single party issue in the state, except the offices and honesty with fair ability and an open mind are the best qualifications for them.

"So there is little of partisanship in Minnesota [illegible] will go with the tail."

THE TARIFF BILL.

At this writing the connferene report on the Aldrich tariff bill has been adopted by the house, and ere this reaches the reader the report will probably be adopted by the senate, the bill passed by both houses and signed by President Taft.

That the bill is in no sense a fulfillment of the pledges of the republican party, nor in accord with the reasonable expectations of the people of the midde West is recognized by everybody regardless of political lines. On the contrary it is so much worse than the high-tariff Dingley bill that every republican member of congress in Minnesota, except Tawney, voted against the adoption of the conference report, and to be consistent, must vote against the passage of the bill.

The Aldrch bill is a measure plainly in the interest of the New England manufacturers, and there is not the slightest relief for Minnesota and the adjoining states of the Mississippi valley. Our people were vitally interested in free wool and wollen goods, free cotton and cotton goods, free lumber and a large decrease in the schedules of the many articles we eat and wear. All of these schedules, save lumber, are higher, and it is figured that it will cost the people of Minnesota $15,000,000 more to live next year, owing to the unjust exactions of this outrageous bill. This means that every man, woman and child in the state will be obliged to pay $4.50 more for their articles of necessity next year. Supposing our beneficent government should levy a direct head tax of $7.50 on the two million inhabitants of Minnesota. There would be a howl of disapproval portending civil war. And the Aldrich tax is less justifiable, because the money does not go to the support of the government, but is a gift to the special interests and nabobs of the East.

The republican party has dug its own grave, deep and wide. The people will not soon again trust a political organization which has not only brazenly repudiated its promises, but has increased the cost of living. The Aldrich bill has not a single newspaper defender in Minnesota, and is repudiated by both senators and every congressman, with the single exception of Tawney. It will be a herculean task for the g. o. p. orators in the next campaign to explain why the people should vote to continue the rule of a party that has abjectly surrendered to the predatory intersets of the East. In summing up the iniquities of the bill the Duluth Herald aptly expresses the sentiment of the Minnesota people in saying:

"The bill is infamous. It is a brazen betrayal of the apparent good faith in which the republican party promised tariff revision. It is a shameful proof that the processes of government are controlled by the power of greed; that those in power are deaf to the most agonized cry of the consumer, but sharply alert to the merest whisper of special privilege."

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Princeton Union: Orders have been issued by the navy department that all figure heads on battleships must be removed. There are a number of animate figureheads maintained by the government who should also be put out of commission.

Elk River Star-News: The unanimity of the country press in the beleif that the decision in the pork barrel was wise, is only exceeded by the hope that the grandstand can be included. No appropriation that we can remember was ever so unpopular with the public, and it is probably the last one of the kind that will ever be made.

Floodwood Broadaxe: The "Good Book" tells us that Saul, the son of Kish, went out to seek his father's asses, and a found kingdom. Pooh, that sounds like a kindergarten story now. There is Nelson B. Aldrich, the son-in-law of the only John D. who went out and found a whole herd of American asses and a continent on which to graze them.

Fergus Falls Wheelock's Weekly: The final outcome will be a bill with duties definitely higher than those fixed by the house, which were in their actual effect more burdensome than those of the present tariff. The president will sign the bill as it finally passes and a herculean effort will be made to convince the people that they are getting a good thing in the new tariff. The revisions of tariff "by its friends" always result in soaking it to the people a little harder.

Dairymen Organize in Minnesota.

I am glad to note that the representatives of the dairymen and buttermakers are fully alive to the danger which menaces them, and it is especially gratifying to learn that Mr. French is taking an active and a prominent part in the movement for the protection of the dairy interests. The other day a number of the prominent representatives of the dairy and buttermaking interests of the state met at the office of the dairy and food commission and organized the Minnesota Dariy union whose mission will be to fight the proposed change in the oleo tax. The new organization will be an affiliation of the Dairymen's association, the Creamery Buttermakers association, and the leading dairymen of the state. The Minnesota Dairy Union will be a branch of the National Dairy union. The board of directors selected at the meeting are John R. Morley of Owatonna, J. A. Farrell of Carver and Mr. French.

Carrying the War into Africa.

The purpose of the National Dairy union is to maintain a strong lobby at Washington to fight the farmers' interests and against Secretary McVeagh's proposal. It should enlist the co-operation of every farmer in Minnesota, and for that matter of every business man, for it is not necessary to point out to any intelligent reader the extent to which Minnesota owes its present prosperity to the dairying industry which has in recent years become general in all parts of the state. Everybody will remember the spur given to that industry by the passage of the law which drove butter-colored oleo from the market. The enforcement of the law was immediately followed by a strong and sharp advance in the price of butter, and ever since that time the price of butter has been maintained at a uniformly high level. The adoption of a two instead of a ten cent tax on oleomargarine would be followed by again bringing butter-colored oleo into active competition with genuine butter. Oleomargarine can be manufactured at a profit of from 10 to 15 cents a pound less than butter. This could have only one result, namely, to reduce the level of butter prices which would at once be felt in the size of the monthly check the farmer receives for his milk. The matter is of such vital importance to every owner of a dairy herd in Minnesota that I need make no apology for the space I have devoted to it. The Minnesota Dairy union should have the active support and, if necessary, the material aid of every man in the state who in any way has profited from the spread of the dairy industry. And speaking of matters at Washington I questioned whether there was ever a time in the history of the nation when the people of the west had so little hope or so much to fear from that source. As I write the President is said to have won in his contest with the extreme reactionaries in Congress. And what has he gained? A few concessions which, while affording greater advanages to a few indusries affected by the higher duties on raw materials proposed by Mr. Aldrich will not in any essential particular result in giving any relief to the great body of consumers groaning under the exactions of the Dingley law. The proposed revision will still be a revision upwards, certain to be followed by a material increase in the price of many articles of general consumption. The people have asked for bread. The republican party in violation of its pledges have tendered to them a stone.

Where Responsibility Rests.

The responsibility of the failure of Congress to revise the tariff rests largely with Mr. Cannon and with those who insisted on investing him with autocratic power. It was Cannon who named the house conferees, themselves to a man only a little less reactionary than Aldrich himself. Payne in the house was in the forefront among the standpatters. The conferees who have consented to the compromise which in many particulars is a surrender to the upward revision crowd, are men of like kidney. Tawney of the First district and Stevens of the fourth especially must answer to the people of Minnesota for the part they took in making Cannon the lord paramount of the destinies of the nation.

Cannon a Ship Subsidizer.

Having dragooned Congress into making an upward revision of the tariff, the Speaker is now organizing his forces with a view to perpetrating another outrage on the people. The measure which is to be pushed to the front at the regular session, it is plain is to be the ship subsidy bill. The manufacturing interests having been placated Congress will next be asked to bow to the demands of the shipping trust. Questions like these arise above politics and there is no loyal citizen of Minnesota who does not appreciate the service rendered to the nation or the sacrifice made by men who like Nelson, and Davis, Lindberg and Volstead, have put their duty to their country before the allegiance they owe to their party leaders. The country will generally approve the stand taken by Senator Gore of Oklahoma, who, although a strong party man, insisted that the people irrespective of party consideration should be loyal to the men who were loyal to them. While we applaud Hammond's course we must remember that the Republican Congressmen from Minnesota who refused to respond to the party lash are men more entitled to the credit.

Cultivating Public Sentiment.

The campaign for the ship subsidy bill is not confined to congress. Public sentiment in its favor is being assiduously cultivated. Thus we find Congressman Landis of Indiana making use of the Chautauqua assemblies to laud its virtues, and Congressman McCleary of Minnesota diligently if quietly spreading the propaganda. It cannot fail to be a matter of general regret to find Senator Nelson who fought so valiently, if ineffectively against the Adrich iniquity enlisted in the same cause. There is not the excuse that any Minnesota interest can possibly be benefitted by imposition on its people of additional taxes that the shipping trust may be benefitted.

The Leading Questions.

These two things, the tariff and the proposition to tax the people in order that millionaire ship-owners headed by Pierpont Morgan may add their accumulations of public wealth, are bound to be the leading issues in the next campaign. They are questions of vital interest which should be considered on their merits, and which no man should permit his party bias to obscure. These are essentially times when the men of independence are needed in Congress. While our form of government makes any other than a government by party impracticable, there is a wide difference between that and a government by such autocrats as Aldrich and Cannon. The people will never be properly represented by men whose idea of party allegiance involves a weak surrender of their political consciences into their keeping.

An Accommodating Court.

As was anticipated the Supreme court which strained the constitution to prevent the expenditure of a few thousand dollars a year on needed improvements on the public highways consented to a flagrant disregard of the plain and express constitutional injunction that no greater public debt could be incurred than $250,000 when the purpose is to build a new state prison with its $80,000 residence for the warden, its $25,000 green house and so on.

The Attorney General Too.

Guided by such authority the attorney general has naurally found nothing in the statutes to prevent the squandering of public money on capitol grounds for which there is no practical need, and sees in the construction of a $200,000 grand stand at the state fair a proper exercise of governmental functions. The grand stand, it appears, is in its nature educational; at least a necessary adjunct of the fair whose mission is educational. In the same opinion a trifling appropriation to provide a proper outlet for a public drain which drains state land, and to prevent fields being overflowed and farmers impoverished is blocked. If the people in the country want improvements at public expense they should move to St. Paul.

S.S.S. CURES SKIN DISEASES

There is an evaporation from the body going on continually, day and night, through the pores and glands of the skin. This is nature's way of maintaining the proper temperature of our systems and preserving the softness and flexibility of the skin, and so long as the blood is free from impurities no trouble will result. When, however, the blood from any cause becomes infected with humors and acids, these too must be expelled, and coming in contact with the delicate fibres and tissues with which the skin is so abundantly supplied they produce irritation and inflammation, and the effect is shown by Eczema, Acne, Tetter, and skin affections of various kinds. These impurities and humors get into the blood through a deranged or inactive condition of the system; the members whose duty it is to carry off the waste and refuse matter of the body fail to properly perform their work, and this impure, fermenting matter is left in the system to be absorbed by the blood. The skin is not only affected by poisons generated within the system, but poisons from without, such as Poison Oak, Poison Ivy, Nettle Rash, etc., enter through the open pores and glands, and so thoroughly do they become rooted in the blood that they are ever present, or return at certain seasons of each year to torment the sufferer. Salves, washes, lotions, etc., cannot cure skin diseases. True, such treatment relieves some of the itching and discomfort, and aids in keeping the skin clean, but it does not reach the real cause, and at best can be only palliating and soothing. A thorough cleansing of the blood is the only certain cure for skin diseases. S. S. S., a gentle acting, safe blood purifier, made entirely of vegetable ingredients of the forest and field, is the proper treatment. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation, and neutralizes the acids and humors, thoroughly cleansing and purifying the blood, and curing skin affections of every kind. It supplies to the blood the fresh, nutritive qualities necessary to sustain the skin and all other parts of the body, and rids the blood of any and all poisons. S. S. S. cures Eczema, Tetter, Acne, Salt Rheum, Poison Oak and Ivy, Nettle Rash, and all other skin troubles, and cures them permanently by removing every trace of the cause from the blood. Special book on Skin Diseases and any medical advice desired furnished free to all who write.

> I have used your S. S. S., spring and fall, for the past two years, with the result that it entirely relieved me of a form of Eczema which my doctor was unable to cure. My arms, lower limbs, and, in fact, the biggest portion of my whole body was affected, and when I first began S. S. S. the itching, etc., was worse, but I continued the remedy with the result that the dry, itching eruption entirely disappeared. I think a great deal of your medicine, and have recommended it to others with good results. It is the best blood medicine made, and I can conscientiously recommend it for the cure of all blood and skin affections. CHAS. HORSTMAN.

One View of Saving.

Ik Marvel, author of the "Reveries of a Bachelor," was all his life opposed to the modern commercial spirit. A young disciple from the west once visited the aged writer in his New England home. The youth, a poet, said he thought he would put away his verses and write magazine love stories, so as to able to save money.

But Mr. Mitchell frowned and shook his head.

"Saving," he said, "is the mania for depriving yourself of things which you want now for fear you may not have things which you won't possibly want forty years hence."

College Foolishness Barred.

"John," said the farmer, "I've given you the best education the college had in the shop."

"Yes, sir."

EXCURSION OF THE MINNESOTA EDITORS

Pen Pushers Delighted With Canadian Scenery and Hospitality.

Delightful Lake Trip—Important Lake Ports Are Visited.

The Minnesota editors and ladies have just completed one of the pleasantest and most enjoyable outings in the history of the association.

The Editorial Tour for 1909 was another invasion of Canadian soil and Canadian waters, and the brethren of the press have once again carried home with them the most pleasing memories of the liberal and charming hospitality of the Canadian people.

Every moment spent across the line was filled with interest, instruction and entertainment. The friendly solicitude of our neighbors that our vacation days should be profitably as well as entertainingly spent, was manifested by the numerous well-planned and ably conducted side trips and excursions to many points of interest in the various cities visited.

Having rendezvoused at the Merchants Hotel in St. Paul on Saturday, July 10th, the Editorial party at two o'clock in the afternoon boarded the special coaches provided for them, and which were attached to the Northern Pacific train, and were soon en route for Duluth, at which city they arrived as per schedule shortly after six o'clock. The party on this stretch of its journey was accompanied by Mr. C. L. Townsend, district passenger agent of the Northern Pacific, who was constantly occupied both on the trip to Duluth and the return trip to St. Paul in anticipating the wants of the members and whose thoughtfulness and courtesy added greatly to the enjoyment of all.

Having arrived at Duluth the party was immediately conducted to the St. Louis hotel, where dinner was promptly served, enabling the members to take their vessel and get settled by eight o'clock, the hour scheduled for sailing.

The voyage through the Great Lakes was made on the Hamonic, the magnificent and palatial new steel steamship of the Northern Navigation Company's line.

A brief description of this splendid ship, with its magnificent dimensions and luxurious appointments, its manly and courteous officers and crew, and its almost absolute safety of construction, may prove interesting.

It is a new boat. The keel was laid on May 26, 1908, and it was launched on November 26, 1908, just six months later. It was built by the Collingwood Shipbuilding Company, at Collingwood, on the Georgian bay in Ontario. Its first trial trip was made on May 12, of the present year, and its first regular trip on June 23 last. Leaving Duluth at eight o'clock on Saturday evening it completes its circuit and returns at noon on the following Saturday. The Editorial party consequently sailed on the vessel's fourth regularly scheduled trip.

The first view of the great Hamonic and an introduction to its magnificent interior fills you with amazement. Not so very long ago a ship like this one would have been the pride and admiration of any Atlantic service. At the present time no ship on any waters can show more perfect construction, more comfort or luxury. She is one of the highest type of vessels of her class, not only as to construction, carrying capacity and speed, but her passenger accommodation is of a superior order, with great beauty in design and ornamentation, while presenting an effect both rich and pleasing, the designer's dominating idea being that a beautifully harmonious scheme is more restful than an extravagantly elaborate plan of decoration.

The Hamonic is a large and capacious ship, 365 feet in length with 50-foot beam. Her gross tonnage is 5,240 tons and she is propelled by 7,000 horse power. She carries 400 first class and 75 second class passengers in addition to a crew of 110 people. The meaning of these figures may be a little clearer when it is pointed out that the main dimensions are only a little less than half those of the new Cunard giant, the Mauretania.

The whole ship is a Canadian product and our neighbors are certainly justified in the quiet pride they feel in being able to place upon the Great Lakes so magnificent a specimen of their skill as this, the finest vessel which sails these waters.

The accommodations for passengers are of the finest. There are five decks, the main, spar, promenade, shade and bridge decks, the first three being of steel construction. On the awning deck there is ample open space forward and a wide promenade entirely around the ship, six and one-half times around which constitutes a mile.

All the conveniences of the most perfectly appointed homes and the best ideas in the construction of the latest Atlantic liners have been adopted in fitting and furnishing the ship. At times the imagination and the hand of the interior designer have been given unlimited scope. The result will equal the best to be found afloat or ashore in beauty, harmony and luxury. The coloring throughout the ship is in one inclusive scheme of mahogany, soft green, old gold, ivory, grey, and pure white. The distribution and effects vary in different rooms and departments, but the plan is consistent and the eye is always pleased and never wearied.

It would be difficult in so brief a space to do justice to this sumptuous and luxurious floating palace, which, to be appreciated, must be seen.

Upon entering one reaches a spacious hall and rotunda from which rises the grand staircase. The stairway, hall and rotunda are of French-Gothic design, carried out in dark finished quarter sawed oak and adorned with pillars bearing fleur de lys ornaments in old gold. Carved oak pilasters with old gold capitals support a cornice and ceiling of paneled oak relieved with old gold ornaments. A marble base eight inches high extends around both hall and rotunda, and the floor is laid with interlocking rubber tiles of a form and color corresponding with the rest. At the top of the stairway opens a handsome lobby extending across the ship and having a width of thirty-five feet and done in Flemish style, toned in a grey-green and relieved in the panels, pilasters and cornice with broad effects and delicate traceries in dull gold. From both sides of the lobby corridors run fore and aft, the one forward widening at the bow into a magnificently appointed room called "the lounge," done in Colonial style, the walls and ceiling being finished in ivory. It is lighted with golden incandescents, the softened rays falling upon the deep rose color carpet which covers the floor. This deck is given largely to berth accommodations, the staterooms being large, light and well ventilated, all done in white, many with spacious closets, lavatories and conveniences, while the berths are most comfortable and inviting.

Our art is inadequate to properly describe the beauties of the cabins de luxe, the drawing room, the dining room, the smoking room or the service arrangements provided aft of the dining room, which equal anything to be found on land.

The observation room, situated on the shade deck, is undoubtedly the popular resort of the passengers. The artist has here created a beautiful place, in the style "L'Art Nouveau" paneled in quarter sawed oak and finished in forest green. Soft divans upholstered in golden brown velvet and large comfortable wicker arm chairs are disposed about the room. Above the divans the walls are finished in tapestry and in the centre and between the divans, at the forward end, a piano is placed. The floor is laid in suitable material in harmony with the color and design of the room and of such a nature that it can readily be converted into a splendid ball room if desired.

Upon this magnificent vessel, in the midst of ever changing scenic wonders, luxuriating in the pure and fresh ozone blown across the great stretches of Superior and Huron, the Minnesota Editorial party spent the most delightful week imaginable, made doubly so by the watchful care and kindly courtesies of Capt. Robert Foote, Purser James H. Ronan and Chief Engineer Sam Brisbine, the veteran officers in the service of the Northern Navigation Co.

This company is part and parcel of the great Grand Trunk system, under a long term agreement, and will form the lake connection between their eastern lines and the Grand Trunk Pacific Ry. when in operation next year. With two fine steamers weekly in and out of Duluth it offers the best service out of that port for points east. It makes prompt steamer connection at Sarnia for Detroit and special train service by the Grand Trunk direct from Sarnia wharf for Detroit, Niagara Falls, Buffalo, Toronto, and al. The best time can be made to these and all Canadian points east.

THE STANDARD OF THE WORLD

The first evening out was spent by the Editorial party in becoming accustomed to their surroundings, admiring the vessel and enjoying the invigorating air of the lake. Port Arthur and Fort William, the twin cities of Thunder Bay, and the great rivals for the growing commerce of a northwestern empire were reached on Sunday morning but the stay was short, as it was understood we would have nearly a full day's entertainment on the return trip.

The journey down the lake to the Soo was a delightful experience. The weather was glorious and the surface of the water as smooth and placid as a mirror. The ever-changing view of islands and mainland, rich in verdure and loveliness, offered a panorama beautiful and entrancing.

The evening after dark was spent in the observation room, where Bros. Whitney, Meyst and Easton, the tireless and efficient members of our Executive Committee, had arranged an interesting program of music, singing, readings and dancing, to which not only members of the Editorial party contributed, but many of their fellow passengers as well.

It was late at night before weary eyes were permitted to be closed in rest, so pleasing was the experience of being afloat amid such glorious surroundings, but the anticipation of another day consoled us for the loss of a few hours wasted in sleep.

The Soo was reached early the following day, where the party was able to inspect the scene of the recent disaster, where the gates on the Huron side of the Canadian lock were destroyed by collision with an upcoming steamer. The stop on the down journey, however, was brief and shortly after noon we entered Lake Huron, having passed through the beautiful St. Mary river with its shores lined with inviting summer cottages and resorts. The trip down Huron was delightful and so alluring were the decks with the opportunities for sight-seeing and enjoying the invigorating air that it was impossible to lure anyone inside to listen to any kind of a program.

On Tuesday morning Sarnia was reached. Here the party was landed and conducted to the Vendome hotel.

After a brief rest they found things doing. It is at Sarnia that Capt. C. H. Nicholson, the traffic manager of the Northern Navigation Co., makes his headquarters, and Capt. Nicholson is a favorite with the Minnesota men. He is the very head and front of all social and entertaining stunts and no one can remain within the radius of his activity and not feel the influence of his genuine good nature and affability.

After a brief rest therefore the party was put aboard a special car for Huron Park, where on the long stretch of sandy beach a delightful hour was spent in listening to the tales of the wild waves and in bathing, while the girls had their futures properly foretold by gipsy fortune tellers.

Immediately after dinner a committee of business men from Port Huron, headed by Editor Sherman, of the Port Huron Daily Times, led the party through the celebrated two-mile Grand Trunk tunnel under the St. Clair river to the Michigan city, where numerous automobiles were in waiting to take us for a two-hour drive about this splendid burg. Here we were given an opportunity to inspect the power house, from which all traffic through the tunnel is operated. The spin about the city will be long remembered by those fortunate enough to be of the party. Port Huron is an enterprising and beautiful place with miles and miles of magnificently paved streets, handsome homes, generous sized and well kept parks, prosperous industries and fine business district. The courtesy of her business men ad to the pleasure of our party and our visit to this delightful city will not soon be forgotten. We were returned to Sarnia, where Capt. Nicholson fearing a moment might be lost without entertainment, led the party to the new passenger terminals at the Sarnia wharfs. Beauty, both in design and architecture, has here robbed a great business structure of any commonplace significance and given it the appearance of romance. The second story is a mammoth roof garden covered with a massive roof, but open on all sides except one, through which you enter into the general offices of the company. The roof garden has the appearance of a park and flowering plants hang suspended at intervals. Comfortable seats are generously provided and as the garden overlooks the river here you may sit and watch the mighty traffic of two nations converge as it passes through the St. Clair. Twice the amount of traffic passes this point each year than goes through the Suez Canal. While waiting here and resting the thoughtfulness of Capt. Nicholson had provided refreshments. Nothing semed to be overlooked which would add to the comfort or enjoyment of the party.

Time was allowed only for supper and dressing, when the cars were again taken for the beach at Huron Park, where, at the pavilion, a ball was given under the auspices of the Northern Navigation Company and largely attended by citizens of Sarnia, who aided in making our party's stay a most pleasant one. Dancing continued until nearly midnight, when a wearied but grateful bunch of gophers returned to their hotel. The following forenoon was spent in resting and shopping, that being really the first opportunity the ladies found for purchasing their souvenirs. [illegible] At two o'clock the party again took ship, the weather continuing [illegible] [illegible] were all on the beauties of the boat and the pleasure of the occasion.

In due time the Soo was again reached. This time we were landed on the American side, where a committee from the Commercial Club, consisting of Messrs. F. B. Raymond, A. B. Davidson, John Olds, W. H. Ragan and W. Marriott, each wearing a badge with the legend "The Soo For You," met the party and led us to waiting open cars for a tour of the city and an inspection of the two magnificent locks now operating and of the site for the third which is under contemplation. At the conclusion of our visit we were ferried across to the Canadian locks, where the Hamonic was awaiting us. In the meantime some of the more venturesome employed their time in shooting the rapids of the St. Mary in canoes paddled by Indians.

Embarking once more the return journey across the greatest fresh water body in the world was begun.

Lake Superior was never more beautiful than Thursday night, as the Hamonic steamed across the very center of the lake on her way to Port Arthur. It was almost past belief that this vast expanse of water could ever subside to such a glassy stillness. It was a festal evening on the boat, and dancing in the observation room was the program until nearly midnight. The dancers were interrupted once for a little session of the Minnesota Editorial Association. It was called to order by Capt. C. C. Whitney, who said that there was much dissatisfacton with the way President C. S. Edwards had been conducting himself, and that former congressman Joel P. Heatwole had been selected by the members of the association to administer a suitable reprimand.

The Northfield statesman was quite equal to the occasion and in fitting terms of recognition for President Edwards' services he presented him with a handsome fob and Templar charm, as a token from his fellow excursionists. Mr. Edwards replied with a few words of thanks for the gift and for the loyal friendship of his fellow editors and the pleasant function was ended. The dance went on and joy was unconfined.

The Minnesotans were at breakfast Friday morning as they passed the majestic Thunder cape and entered Thunder bay, the lake terminus for all Canadian traffic. The Hamonic soon after docked at Port Arthur, and spent the day in freight handling at this port and its twin, Fort William, giving the tourists ample time for a visit in this most interesting locality. The morning was occupied in shopping about Port Arthur, especially in looking over the displays of amethysts, tomsonite and other stones found in the north shore district.

The officials and business men of Port Arthur were most cordial in their welcome. The official committee, which met the Minnesotans, consisted of Mayor Matthews, Aldermen Burk, McGovern and J. G. King, a delegation from the Business Men's Association consisting of President King, Dr. McKnight and Mr. Dawson; also Mr. Bell, agent of the Northern Navigation Company, Mr. R. Telfer, agent of the Canadian Northern, Mr. and Mrs. Rapsey, Mrs. McGovern, W. A. McCallum, A. J. McCombor, Mr. Young, Mr. Schultze, and R. A. Burriss, Dominion immigration agent.

The Minnesotans were much impressed with the wonderful growth of the Thunder Bay twins since their last visit four years ago. The two cities have made wonderful strides and now claim a combined population of 27,000. They are intense rivals, and their struggle for supremacy stimulates both. Port Arthur has made a tenstrike this year in securing a great dry dock, which is to be built by a Cleveland corporation, offering facilities for lake vessels to winter at the west end of their route and get an earlier start with the grain. The two cities now have an elevator capacity of 15,000,000 bushels, which will be increased to 35,000,000 bushels by elevators now under construction. The Canadian Northern elevator at Port Arthur, with 7,000,000 bushels capacity, is now claimed to be the largest in the world, and the new Grand Trunk elevator will eclipse it with a capacity of 10,000,000 bushels. The latter road will be completed through to Edmonton this fall, giving three great transcontinental outlets from the wheat fields to these lake ports.

The region is rich in mineral wealth that is hardly touched, but Port Arthur has a blast furnace in operation already.

Power for manufacturing purposes is available at Kakabeka Falls, 23 miles up the Kaministikwia river, which has already been tapped for 20,000 horse power, and has potential energy ten times as great. Saw mills and flour milling are already flourishing industries.

Kakabeka Falls, the scenic marvel of this region ought never to be missed by lake tourists. The Canadian Northern made up a special train which left Port Arthur at two o'clock, with the editors aboard and the trip was made so as to give the party an hour and a half at the falls and time to reach the boat again for dinner.

The falls, 110 feet in height, have a splendid volume of water, which is forced into a narrow channel and boils incessantly at the abyss of the gorge, throwing back a column of Petition For Public Ditch.

TO THE HONORABLE ANDREW GRINDELAND, DISTRICT JUDGE, 14th JUDICIAL DISTRICT, STATE OF MINNESOTA:—

The undersigned land owners whose lands will be liable to be affected by or assessed for the expenses of the construction of a drainage ditch hereinafter described would respectfully represent that the public health, convenience and welfare, and the reclamation of wet and overflowed lands require the establishment and construction of a public drainage ditch along the following described route in the towns of Star, Reiner and Goodridge, in the County of Red Lake, and the town of Moylan, in the County of Marshall, all in the State of Minnesota, and that the construction of the same will and would be of public benefit and utility and will promote the public health, and that the construction of the same is further necessary for the reason that the public roads and highways in the territory affected are wet and impassable a great portion of the year, and that the construction of the said drainage ditch will improve the said public roads and highways and render the same passable.

A general description of the proposed starting point, route and terminus of said drainage ditch is as follows:—

Commencing at the quarter post on the south side of section 36 in township 154 north of range 39 west, in Red Lake County, Minnesota, thence in a westerly direction on and along the section line south of sections 36, 35, 34 and 33 in said last mentioned township and range, thence north along the west boundary line of said last mentioned section 33, to the northwest corner thereof, thence in a westerly direction on and along the south boundary line of sections 29 and 30 in said last mentioned township and range, and the south boundary line of section 25 and 26 in township 154 north of range 40, in said Red Lake County to the southwest corner of said last mentioned section 26, thence in a northerly direction on and along the west boundary line of sections 26, 23, 14 and the south half of section 11, in said last mentioned township and range, and the west boundary line of the north half of section 11, and the south half of section 2, in township 154 range 40, in Marshall County, Minnesota, and emptying into branch two (2) of County Ditch number twenty (20) as its outlet, and also the following branch to be known as branch A, to the ditch above petitioned for, Viz:—

Commencing at the center of section 13, in township 154, range 39, in Red Lake County, Minnesota, thence in a westerly direction on and along the quarter line thru sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18, in said last mentioned township and range and sections 13 and 14, in township 154, range 40 in said Red Lake County, and emptying into said main ditch herein petitioned for as its outlet.

And also the following branch ditch designated as branch B, Viz:— Commencing at the quarter post on the south boundary line of section 24, in township 154, range 39, thence in a westerly direction on and along the section line south of sections 24, 23, 22, 21, 20 and 19, in said last mentioned township and range to the southwest corner of of said section 19, and thence north on and along the section line west of section 19 and 18, in said last mentioned township and range and emptying into said branch A, above petitioned for as its outlet.

And your petitioners further petition, and request that if better results for the drainage of the area affected can be obtained by a different course, source or outlet of the main or branch ditches herein petitioned for, that the engineer appointed in this ditch proceeding designate such different source, course or outlet, and that such source, course or outlet, therefor designated by the engineer be adopted, and that if necessary for the drainage of the area affected, different and other branches be designated and be laid out by the engineer and established by the Court herein.

And your petitioners further represent that the proposed outlet of the ditch herein petitioned for is County Ditch twenty (20) in Marshall County, Minnesota, and that your petitioners having duly made application and petition to the County Board of the County of Marshall, State of Minnesota for permission to empty the drainage ditch herein petitioned for into said Marshall County Ditch number twenty (20) and have petitioned said County Board to fix the terms and conditions whereon such premission shall be granted and your petitioners request that after permission be granted and the terms and conditions thereof be fixed by the said County board, that the Judge herein order compliance with such terms and conditions and that the costs and expenses thereof be paid out of the ditch fund of the said ditch herein petitioned for.

And your petitioners pray that you will proceed to establish such public drainage ditch and branches and cause the same to be constructed as provided by Chapter Two Hundred Thirty (230) of the General Laws of Minnesota for 1905, and acts amendatory thereto and suplementary thereto and in case of the establishment of such ditch that in the final order establishing the same you provide for the payment of ditch liens and for the bonds of the said ditch on the twenty (20) year plan; and we hereby appoint Brown & Eckstrom of Warren, Minnesota, our Attorneys herein.

THE NATION'S TRIBUTE TO ITS WARRIORS

By EDWARD B. CLARK

COPYRIGHT 1909 BY W. A. PATTERSON

WASHINGTON.—In the fall the Grant monument in the Botanical garden of Washington will be unveiled and dedicated. It is to be the most imposing statue in the capital city, fit, it is said, to do full justice to the memory of the foremost soldier who fought on the side of the Union.

The pedestal for the Grant memorial is already in place and is nearing completion. Its base is a huge square of stone with smaller stones superimposed to that the ascent to the statue proper will be by a succession of steps, though it is perhaps needless to say that the pedestal will not be given over to the uses of a stairway. At each corner of the base there is a lion couchant. The beasts have been shrouded to keep their bronze beauty hidden from the eyes of the multitude until the day comes to show the memorial in its completion.

The union general will be shown mounted on one of his favorite horses. It is said that the model of the horse shows lines that are as near perfection as art can make them. If the general's mount is as spirited and effective as the bronze horse shown in the memorial to Gen. Thomas on Thomas circle in this city it will leave nothing to be desired. The horse of Gen. Thomas is said to be the most perfect creature ever cast in metal.

The commission which had in charge the memorial to Gen. Grant had many difficulties to overcome before a site was selected. There was great objection to the placing of the statue in the Botanical garden, which is directly across the street from the grounds of the capitol at the Pennsylvania avenue corner where the peace monument stands. The Washington people, like the people in many other cities of the country, do not take kindly to the erection of stone and bronze memorials in what may be called the public pleasure grounds. They want them all to be placed in the little circles and squares at the intersections of the streets and avenues of the city.

After many meetings and after listening to many protests, the site in the Botanical garden was chosen and approved. In order to make room for the statue two magnificent elms had to be removed. The people mourned the loss of the elms, or rather mourned their prospective loss, for it was decided to transplant the trees, a tremendous undertaking, but one that finally was accomplished. It is too early yet to tell whether the transplantetd elms will live or die in their new beds.

It has often been a source of wonder that no statue of Gen. Grant appears in the Memorial hall of the capitol, where each state has memorials of two of its representative sons, or it ought to be said daughters, for one woman appears in Memorial hall in marble.

Grant was born in Ohio, but he went to the war from Galena, Ill., and his first command during the early days of civil strife was an Illinois regiment. Lincoln is also claimed by Illinois, but the legislature of the state in selecting persons to be honored in Memorial hall at the capitol chose Gen. James A. Shields and Miss Willard, who was the president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

In a short time Virginia will place in Memorial hall a statue of Gen. Robert E. Lee. There have been those who have thought and said that both Lee and Grant, the two great commanders in the civil war, should have places in Memorial hall, but as neither Ohio, the place of Grant's birth, nor Illinois, the place of his adoption, has seen fit to honor him the chances are that his statue never will find a place in the hall, which once was used as the assembly place of the representatives of congress and which is now given over to the purposes of remembrance of the nation's great.

The statue of Gen. Sherman, an equestrian memorial, was unveiled five years ago. It faces the Treasury building from the south, and it is one of the most notable public memorials in the city of Washington, although it is true that fault has been found with a few minor details of the execution.

STATUE OF GEN. GEORGE B. McCLELLAN, WASHINGTON, D.C.

STATUE OF GEN. JOHN A. LOGAN, WASHINGTON, D.C.

LA FAYETTE STATUE, WASHINGTON, D.C.

STATUE OF FREDERICK THE GREAT

Sheridan's statue, representing "Little Phil" as he appeared at the battle of Winchester when rallying his troops to turn again to the attack, stands in a little green circle on Massachusetts avenue. The Sheridan memorial has been in place less than a year. The widow of the Shenandoah campaigner lives in a house the windows of which overlook the memorial of her husband.

It is curious perhaps that the memorials to the three greatest generals of the civil war who fought on the side of the north were not erected until many years after soldiers of less fame had been remembered. The statue of Gen. McPherson has stood for years in the public square named for this soldier, who was killed in the battle of Atlanta. Gen. Thomas "the rock of Chickamauga," was remembered in bronze nearly 30 years ago. Admirals Farragut and Dupont have represented the sea service of their country in memorial form in Washington for years. The statue of John A. Logan, the civilian soldier, has had a place in the nation's capital for a long time. Hancock was not forgotten and neither were some eight or ten other officers whose fame was bright, but which never shone with the extraordinary luster of that of Grant or Sherman.

There are scores of memorials of various kinds in Washington. Foreign nations are represented. In Lafayette square are the statues of the Frenchmen Lafayette and Rochambeau, who came to the aid of the colonies in their struggle against Great Britain.

Before long there will be two other statues in the square, one to the honor of Pulaski and another to Steuben. When these memorials are in place Lafayette square will contain five bronze figures, Lafayette, Rochambeau, Pulaski, Steuben and Andrew Jackson. The Jackson statue stands in the center of the park, while each of the Frenchmen has a corner to himself. The other corners will be ocupied by the Pole and the German.

Emperor William about six years ago presented to the United States a statue of Frederick the Great. It was dedicated with impressive ceremonies Nov. 19, 1904. It was unveiled by the Baroness Speck von Sternberg, wife of the German ambassador, and was presented on behalf of the emperor by his personal envoy, the German ambassador. President Roosevelt made the principal address of the day, accepting the bronze figure on behalf of the American public. Other addresses were made by Lieut.-Gen. Chaffee, chief of staff; Maj.-Gen. Gillespie, of the general staff and master of ceremonies, and by Lieut.-Gen. von Loewenfeld, one of the special commissioners sent to the unveiling by the kaiser. An address was also made by Charlemagne Tower, American ambassador to Germany.

Seldom has the national capital witnessed a more brilliant and distinguished assembly than that which gathered on the esplanade of the army war college around the pedestal of Emperor William's gift. On the president's stand were seated the president and the members of his cabinet, the German ambassador and Baroness Speck von Sternberg and other distinguished persons. On the stand to the right and left of the statue were the officers of the army and navy in full dress uniform, members of the supreme court, members of congress and a number of distinguished invited guests.

Germany's gift created considerable unfavorable comment throughout the country on the part of the foreign population with no particular love for the emperor. The Poles were especially critical and Polish societies throughout the country met to protest against the United States accepting the present from royalty. The local Polish societies joined in the protest. There were many others who wondered what Emperor William was aiming at by his favor for the American people, but except in a few instances this query took the form of good-natured curiosity rather than of resentment.

On the afternoon of January 10, 1905, an attempt was made to blow up the statue of Frederick the Great. No serious damage resulted and there were those who thought that a practical joker had been at work, but the force of the explosion was such as to show that the joke, if joke it were, was a decidedly serious matter. Threats had been made from time to time by anonymous letter writers to blow up the statue, but little attention was paid to them. The tenor of the written threats was to the effect that no monarch ought to be remembered in the capital city of a republic, and that soon "something would be doing." Since that attempt to damage the memorial of the great Frederick a strict guard has been maintained about the statue.

Representative Bartholdt of Missouri at the next session of congress will champion a measure intended to change the name of Lafayette square to Independence square and he will ask that the memorial to Gen. Jackson, which stands in the center of the park shall be replaced by one of George Washington. Mr. Bartholdt thinks that the name Lafayette square gives too much prominence to a man of one nationality, while there were men of other nationalities also to be remembered by statues in the park who gave just as much service to the struggling colonies.

The Missouri congressman thinks that in a sense Lafayette square makes an invidious distinction. Lafayette holds a peculiar place in the affections of Americans, and though it may be without right or reason, he is known much better to the people than either Steuben or Pulaski. There will be opposition to the change in the name of the square, but as Lafayette is remembered in bronze at its most commanding corner it may be that Mr. Bartholdt is right in contending that the double honor is too much to give one man.

General Steuben's service to the American patriots hardly can be estimated. It was not so much his aid in actual battle as his teaching of drill regulations and tactics and his imparting to the revolutionary officers of the art of maintaining efficient discipline that brought him fame and the honor of the leaders of the revolutionary cause.

Three Diamond Bracelets

By LUCY LINCOLN MONTGOMERY

(Copyright, by W. G. Chapman.)

M. Narbonne, junior partner of the great firm of Le Clair Migy et Cie, on the Rue de Rivoli, beamed graciously upon the impetuous little woman before the counter.

"You must know, monsieur," she cried, "this is a birthday gift from my husband. I am to choose whichever I want; but how can I? They are all so wonderful!"

One after another the gleaming bracelets slipped through her slender white fingers, their diamond points showing a blaze of prismatic glory against her Alice-blue costume and into the eager, childish face.

"I wish I knew which he would like!"

"Will monsieur, your husband, not come and judge for himself?' questioned M. Narbonne.

The little madame laughed merrily. "He has no time. From morning until night is he busy with his patients, and days pass that even I scarcely see him. Oh! I forgot. He told me to present my card."

She laid it, with her address, upon the counter.

"Dr. D'Arcey, the famous alienist!" exclaimed M. Narbonne, while his manner became doubly assiduous.

Just then a tall, aristocratic-looking lady in black came from another part of the store over to where the bracelets were displayed.

"Ah, Marie," she smiled; "choosing the birthday gift you told me of? Which is it?"

"I cannot decide, Madame Marceau," replied Marie, a frown puckering her pretty forehead, and with a shy, deprecating look at the man behind the counter. "I have detained M. Narbonne already such an unconscionable time. Still, it is between these three."

"I Wish I Knew Which He Would Like."

She held them toward her friend.

"My time is yours," returned the young man, bowing deferentially. "Madame has great taste and judgment. Those are the most valuable as well as most artistic bracelets in the establishment."

Madame Marceau examined them closely.

"This would be my choice," she remarked, holding against her black sleeve one of filigree gold quivering with rose diamonds and shot here and there with the brilliant sparkle of rubies.

"But, Marie, surely the gentleman will take the bracelets for Dr. D'Arcey's inspection."

"I was on the point of offering to do so," returned M. Narbonne obsequiously.

"Oh, how delightful!" cried Madame D'Arcey eagerly. "How satisfactory! For I grow more and more bewildered. Will you come also, dear Madame Marceau?"

"Excuse me. I am so very sorry. I have an appointment at four," taking out her jeweled watch. "Oh, I must go immediately. Telephone me your decision, dearest. I shall be so impatient to know."

"How magnificent! How queenly!" exclaimed M. Narbonne under his breath as the stately lady, gathering up her costly robes, swept gracefully out.

Madame D'Arcey caught the low words.

"Madame D'Arcey comes of princely blood," she declared, "and is as good and kind as she is beautiful; so charitable and self-denying!"

"Indeed she looks it," returned M. Narbonne warmly, as he put the three bracelets in their cases and into his breast pocket. The remainder he locked carefully away, and, going to the back of the store, conferred with two gentlemen whose complacent manner and pleased expression showed their approbation of his plan.

Returning, he asked: "Madame, shall I call a cab?"

"My coupe is at the door," she replied, "and will bring you back, monsieur."

If the young man had been fascinated before by this charming little woman he was thoroughly captivated as they drove away together. Such an ingenuous way she had of smiling into his eyes and taking him into her confidence.

"Do you know," she cried, "I should not be surprised if my dear husband says I may have two of these bracelets. Would not that be entrancing?"

"For me, most certainly," he replied; "but madame needs no jewels to complete her attractions. No wonder," he thought, "Dr. D'Arcey showers jewels upon such a creature!"

It was but a short distance to the Rue St. Honore, where Dr. D'Arcey lived.

"Wait, Martin," said the lady. "You are to take monsieur back in a short time. This way, M. Narbonne."

With a kindly nod to the man in waiting she led him into a small anteroom on the left.

"Sit down, monsieur. The adjoining room is my husband's private office," she said. "Will you kindly let me show him the bracelets first? You know"—smiling coquettishly—"a wife has her little blandishments, and I have set my heart on having two!"

M. Narbonne took the three morocco cases from his inner pocket and gallantly placed them in her outstretched hand.

"Who knows but I may have all three?" she cried merrily as she danced toward the door.

Closing it quickly behind her, with most dextrous sleight of hand she slipped the three jewel cases into a leather bag on her arm and with troubled face and nervous manner confronted the grave, middle-aged gentleman who rose to meet her.

"Dr. D'Arcey!" she exclaimed. "I had great difficulty to keep my appointment. My poor husband is in the next room. His latest delusion is that he has jewels to sell, and only by suggesting that he might dispose of some to you could I persuade him here.

Her fingers twitched and her eyes turned restlessly toward the door.

"Dear Madame Dubois," spoke Dr. D'Arcey, "be calm. This trouble, you told me, came suddenly, and, I doubt not, rest and medical treatment will cure your husband."

She broke in: "I would rather you saw him alone, doctor. He is more excitable with me. Is there not another door I can slip out and wait in my coupe? Then, after I take him home, I will come for your opinion and advice."

"The wisest thing you could do, Madame Dubois. Have good courage. I do not feel it a hopeless case," he replied, opening a side door which led through a narrow court to the main street.

"Humor him a little at first, doctor," she entreated. "Let him talk of his delusions. Oh, I know you are wise. I trust all to you—but he may be suspicious if I linger."

She went hurriedly out.

Dr. D'Arcey watched for a moment the flutter of her blue suit and toss of white feathers with a serious look as he turned to open the other door.

Coming promptly at the summons, M. Narbonne glanced hastily around the room.

"Where is madame?" he asked.

"She has gone out for a few moments. Be seated, M. Dubois."

"Narbonne," corrected the young man. 'Have you decided which bracelet you prefer for your wife?"

A shadow of pain crossed the doctor's face as he said quietly: "I have no wife. We will speak of the bracelets later. Sit down, monsieur, and tell me of yourself. You have been ill?"

"Myself!" screamed the young man, as into his heart shot sudden terror. "What do you mean? I was never ill in my life. Tell me of the woman who brought me here with three diamond bracelets for you to make a choice and said she was your wife. Who is she and where are the bracelets?"

With flashing eyes, clenched hands and growing apprehension he hurled these vehement questions at the doctor.

The latter took him by the shoulders and looked into his eyes. Anger was there, bewilderment, mistrust, but no insanity. His ruddy hue, steady gaze and firm, vigorous poise bore token of unusual strength and health.

"Can there be a plot here?" he thought. "Tell me your story as quickly as possible," he cried.

M. Narbonne did so, the words tumbling after each other with nervous intensity, adding: "These bracelets were worth 80,000 francs. Telephone to my firm for the truth of my assertion."

First Dr. D'Arcey rushed to the front of the house. No trace was there of madame or coupe, and none of the servants had seen her drive away.

M. Narbonne's story was corroborated by Le Clair, Migy et Cie and a force of the cleverest detectives set immediately to work; but never was found the faintest clew of the charming little lady in Alice blue or her friend and accomplice, Madame Marceau, "of princely blood."

Employment of Old Men

The problem of finding employment for old men is the particular aspect of the labor problem now to the front. The commonest solution seems to be to discover a sufficient number of "easy jobs," and then to ask why these posts are not filled with men of advanced years.

Any thoroughgoing philosophy of the matter will have to go deeper. Misfortune, illness, or incompetence is generally implied when the elderly man is out of work. No very general cure for the first two causes, and no cure at all for the last is to be expected. The interlocking system of great industrial concerns is particularly unfavorable to the chances of the old. Such enterprises enlist the young, and for their own efficiency are forced to employ a system of promotion from the ranks.

The "standard rate" of the unions also is calculated to intensify the unemployment of the elderly. When the employer has to pay a standard wage, he must often discharge, or pension, an old employe still capable of work, but not of earning the standard wage. Some unions are said to blink at infraction of their rules here, and allow an old member to work as a "helper" at less than full wages.

Caught a Motor Boat.

During some firing exercises off St. Albans Head by two men of war the wire by which the target was being rowed parted. The targets were picked up, but instead of the wire coming in easily it was found to be made fast to something. Recourse was had to the steam capstan and by its means the wire was pulled up, when the end of it was found to be securely hitched around the screw of a motor boat.

The boat was about 24 feet long, but the name was undecipherable. The engines were quite intact and she did not appear to have been down so very long. She had evidently been sunk in a collision.—Strand, London.

PLACE OF TERRIBLE TIDES

Waters of Puget Sound Sometimes Reach a Height of 20 Feet—Magnificent Sight.

The waters of the Narrows, from which a party of University of Puget Sound students escaped through good fortune after a boat was upset, are treacherous. It is a place of terrible tides.

Viewed from the precipitous shores the surging waters are magnificent. The scene has been compared with the Hudson above New York city. The waters of that part of Puget Sound which extends to Olympia, Mud Bay, Shelton and Henderson Bay, a vast inland sea within itself, all flow in and out of the Narrows.

In the upper reaches of the sound some 25 or 30 miles from the Narrows, the tides attain a height of more than 20 feet. When the tides begin to fall all the accumulated water rushes out through the Narrows like a great river at flood. In like manner when the tide sets in the direction of Olympia the Narrows become a swift and turbulent stream. Frightful whirlpools are numerous. Streams running powerfully in contrary directions strike and the water boils.

Large steamboats struck by the contrary currents groan and creak and sway under the strain [illegible] ing so, it is no wonder that small craft often overturn in the Narrows. A whirlpool has been known to seize a rowboat and twist it 'round and 'round until the rowers almost despaired of coming out alive.

It is a marvelously beautiful water with all its terrors, and hundreds and thousands will continue to find pleasure there notwithstanding the summer tragedies. The rumble of the tides when running at full is like the distant rumble of the ocean. The terrors [illegible] are an element [illegible] charm and so it is with the terrors of the Narrows.—Tacoma Ledger.

Fate of the Spanish Woman.

Evelyn Mitford, writing in the Queen, says that the women of the lower classes in Spain do not make calls nor read books, and have no "parties" in the American sense of the word. They do their household work and go to church, and that is all there is of life to them. Their husbands are very jealous of them and they grow old and weary before their time [illegible]

DRUGS AND PLANTS

Effect of Chemicals on Vegetable Matter.

Experiments of Philadelphia Society Expects to Add Much to Our Knowledge of Relative Strength of Stimulants.

Philadelphia, Pa.—By means of extensive experiments to test the relative strength of drugs on 2,000 varieties of germinating plants, and also a number of animals, in the botanical roof gardens of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, Dr. Henry Kraemer, professor of botany and director of the microscopic and botanical laboratories, is compiling tables of values which, when completed, will probably work the greatest change in the nature and quality of drugs used as stimulants that has taken place since the days of Hahnemann. Since the establishment of a botanical roof garden two seasons ago by Dr. Kraemer, primarily for the purpose of supplying the college with authentic drug material of the rarer varieties, the garden has outgrown its original mission to some extent and has become an important arm of the research work of the college.

"Bill Possum" is an important feature of the gardens. All unconscious that he is adding to the supply of useful knowledge as well as furnishing diversion to visitors, "Bill Possum," shielded from the rays of a summer sun by the foliage of plants almost priceless in their rarity, and basking in a breeze made cool by the waters of the "Jersey marsh," reigns supreme high above the buildings of the city. The gardens cover the roof of the college buildings. Guinea pigs, frogs and chickens, though unconsciously contributing their share to the progress of science, are less important personages, by far, in this novel little world than "Big Bill Possum."

The vegetable life of the gardens is nourished chiefly in a well watered soil of sand. As little as possible of the usual soil elements is introduced, so that the plants may receive as far as possible without interference the effect of the chemicals fed them during the test The effect of the various chemicals on the plants is thus clearly discernible. In this garden are growing different series of the same plant under influences of widely different chemicals. A series of like age will differ so markedly that some will be in magnificent bloom, while others in the adjoining garden will be yielding a profusion of beautiful leaves without a bud. And among those in bloom will be found some, under the influence of a particular chemical, flowering in an abundance of healthy red, while others, fed from another chemical, will bear a blue or a white bloom.

One of the most interesting of the collection of plants brought together by Dr. Kraemer is a specimen of the original licorice plant brought from Spain by the late Henry R. Rittenhouse of this city. At that time this variety was unknown in this country as a commercial product, and after introducing it as such Mr. Rittenhouse built up a fortune from its sale. There is also a specimen of the famous poison hemlock of Socrates, the same species from which was made the fatal potion.

Among the trees of the garden is a comphor tree raised from a cutting of one of a grove of camphor trees now growing wild in Florida. Forty years ago these trees were set out as an experiment by the department of agriculture, and later their cultivation was given up as a failure. It is now thought that the camphor industry will take the place of the culture of oranges in Florida.

In the "Jersey bog" a huge garden of novel plants, receiving their nourishment from water, air and animal matter, are varieties not often seen in this country. There are the Dresora, or Sundews, which after clutching any insects which land upon them, digest the animal matter, forming thereby a valuable drug. The Sarracenia, or pitcher plants, form a bottle shaped prison in which bugs may easily enter, never to be released. The Venus fly tray is also a meat eating form of plant life which can be seen in the bog.

Hydrangeas, roses, carnations, rare varieties of violets, Jack-in-the-Pulpits, swamp pinks, blue flags, and orchids can be seen in various states of cultivation and evolution, giving the place an element of great beauty.

Digitalis, which, when compounded with strychnine and morphine, forms the basis of medicines used in the treatment of alcoholism, can be seen in all stages of cultivation, and the result of experiments with this plant has given sufficient data to warrant Dr, Kraemer making public the statement that strychnine produces the same effect as a stimulant as does alcohol.

The results of the experiments conducted by Dr. Kraemer in the botanical laboratories and gardens of the college will be given to the public as each is completed. Many of them are hardly begun, and will take years for completion.

To Raze Noted Bridge.

Washington.—The old Anacostia bridge over which John Wilkes Booth sped his horse to escape from an infuriated city the night he shot Lincoln, is to be torn down soon. It is over half a century old.

The district commissioners will receive proposals on July 31 for the razing of the landmark, a new structure connecting Washington proper with the suburb of Anacostia having been completed.

BATTLE OF BACTERIA

Germs Found Constantly at War in Man's Internal Organs.

Distinguished Surgeon Claims the Human Span Might Be Extended with the Large Intestine Removed.

London.—The theories of Prof. Metchnikoff of the Pasteur institute that man would live longer and be healthier without any large intestine are being put to proof in an interesting series of experiments now taking place at Guy's hospital.

Dr. A. Distaso, Prof. Metchnikoff's assistant, who has been sent to London by the Pasteur institute to conduct the experiments, explained his progress.

"When studying cholera a few years ago," the doctor said, "Prof. Metchnikoff discovered that the intestines of the ordinary healthy man always contained a great number of varieties of bacteria. Some of these were found to be dangerous, because they formed poisons which were harmful to the body when absorbed into the system, and others are beneficial because they hinder the development of the harmful germs.

"In the lower large intestine it was found that the harmful germs greatly predominated. Prof. Metchnikoff therefore concluded that if a man's large intestine were removed he would suffer less from the intestinal bacteria poisons which, according to Prof. Metchnikoff's belief, cause the common diseases of degeneration of the internal organs of the body and generally bring on premature old age. The difficulty was to find patients without large intestines on whom to test these theories.

"Dr. W. Arbuthnot Lane, the well known surgeon of Guy's hospital has solved our difficulties by placing at my disposal some 30 or 40 patients whose large intestines he had removed for the relief of chronic intestinal obstruction. These patients have been going about alive and well for periods varying from a few months to five years since their large intestines were cut out.

"In the short time I have been working I have proved beyond doubt that in Mr. Lane's patients many of the harmful varieties of bacteria are absent, while those still surviving are in much lesser proportion than in normal individuals.

"All animals (including babies) when born have perfectly sterile digestive tracts—that is, there are no germs growing in the intestines. Prof. Metchnikoff believes that if we could preserve this freedom from intestinal bacteria we could greatly prolong life, because the greatest cause of old age—the absorption of bacterial poisons in the intestines—would be nonexistent.

"That it is possible to exist without providing a culture bed within one's self for the development of these poison producing germs has been proved, at any rate, on animals.

"By feeding a pteropus, an Australian variety of bat, from birth on absolutely germ-free food I have kept its intestines free from all bacteria for the four months of its existence. It is therefore absorbing none of the poisons which ordinarily are developed in the intestines of these creatures, and I firmly believe that, bar accidents, it will live to a much greater age than its fellows."

Dr. Distaso made the following list of harmful and helpful germs found in the ordinary person's intestines:

Friendly Bacteria—Bifidus, Lactis, Aerogens; all Lactis microbes. Harmful Bacteria—Putrificus, Perfringens, Coli.

"It is interesting to note," the doctor concluded, "that no bacteria of putrefaction (the variety which Prof. Metchnikoff considers most active in bringing on premature old age) have been discovered so far in any of Mr. Lane's patients whose large intestines have been removed."

Milking to Music in Jersey

Montclair, N. J.—There was a time when the farmers and dairymen in this section thought that grass, hay, long fodder, turnips and an occasional hot mash were proper and profitable food for milch cows, but they are to drop all that and feed their milk producers on music.

Now, the pioneer in the movement is Steever Smith, a farmer near Great Notch. When he wants his cows to give milk he places a phonograph out in the barnyard and starts the music going.

From that time on it as much as he and his men can do to set the buckets under the cows fast enough to catch the milk.

Smith has discovered that the kind and quality of music also has an important bearing on the milk supply. The first day he used the phonograph he placed "The Heart Bowed Down" in the machine. It saddened the cows, and they gave scarcely any milk.

He then tried "I Stood On the Bridge at Midnight" on them. They immediately walked over to the trough and gazed pensively into the water. It was a pathetic sight. When the sweet strains of "The Nun's Prayer" broke the silence all the cows got down on their knees.

It was not until the phonograph began to play "The Old Oaken Bucket" that the animals manifested much interest. They looked at Smith so accusingly then that he took the record out of the machine and smashed it.

"I guess they want something quick and devilish," Smith said. He slipped "The Sailor's Hornpipe," "Rory O'Moore," "The Irish Washerwoman" and "The Arkansas Traveler" in the phonograph in quick succession.

INDIAN CLEARS LAND TANGLE

Granddaughter of Miami Chief Makes Explanations That Will Straighten Up Titles.

Huntington, Ind.—Through her son as an interpreter, Kilsoquah, granddaughter of Chief Little Turtle, gave information to attorneys and officers of this city that there were two great Indians named Little Turtle and this fact will enable a large number of Huntington county farmers to have their land titles quieted.

The lands lie in a former Indian reservation, which was not to be conveyed by the Indians without the consent of the president of the United States. Other people got possession and it is now necessary to get President Taft to sign the original deed to make all the transfers legal.

The treaty by which the land was given to Little Turtle was made in 1818, while the great chief died in 1812. Explanation of the fact that there were two Little Turtles is all that is necessary for the interior department at Washington to secure the president's signature.

RELATIONSHIP IN BIG TANGLE

Cross-Marriages Between Two Families Raises Many Puzzling Problems—Others Threatened.

Boston, Mass.—As the result of two recent weddings in Cambridge, acquaintances of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Murray of Ellery street and Mr. and Mrs. William F. Hurter of 25 Highland avenue, have been occupied with a most tangled puzzle.

On April 14 Frederick W. Murray, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Murray, married Miss Annie Bell Hurter, daughter of William F. Hurter. On June 30, Miss Edith Maud Murray became the bride of William F. Hurter. Mr. Hurter is 61 years old and his bride is 30.

The enigma which puzzles the friends of the two couples is whether Mr. Hurter should rightfully look upon his daughter as such, or as his sister-in-law, in that she is the wife of his brother. Again, should he consider that he should look after the guidance of Mr. Murray as a son-in-law or simply consider him a brother-in-law.

It is also asked whether, if Mr. and Mrs. Murray have a child, it should rightfully be considered a grandchild or nephew or niece of Mr. Hurter. Or, if a child were to bless the union of Mr. and Mrs. Hurter, would such child the the step-sister or brother of Mrs. Murray, or her step-niece.

Dog Baffles Snake.

Laurel, Del.—A pet dog's bark saved Miss Martha Lynch, Piney Grove's schoolmarm, from the embraces of a blacksnake six feet five inches in length while picking huckleberries in the woods back of her family's farm. The snake was in the act of dropping from the overhead limb of a tree when the dog barked, and Miss Lynch jumped in time to let the reptile land on the spot where she had stood.

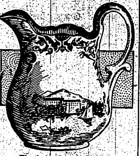
Then followed a fight, with the snake pursuing and the dog hindering it, till Miss Lynch came to a stick of wood sufficient for her defense. Thereupon she turned on the snake and with two blows killed [illegible]

FINE OLD HISTORIC PITCHER

Possession of a New Yorker and Bears Good Likeness of Early Hostelry on Lake George.

Boston.—Charles H. Sherman of Glens Falls, N. Y., is the fortunate possessor of a fine old english pitcher made many years ago, which is of especial interest just at this time owning to Champlain centennial.

The pitcher, which is in perfect condition, was produced at the Middlesboro pottery in Yorkshire, and bears a remarkably good likeness of the old Lake house, one of the most famous hostelries of earlier days, on the edge of historic lake George.



The Lake George Pitcher.

Lake George is connected with lake Champlain, and is one of the most beautiful sheets of water in the United States.

As seen on the pitcher, one not only obtains a view of the lake, but of Prospect mountain, which looms largely in the background.

The picture is done in various colors and it is further decorated in gold and white. The pitcher is 11 inches high.

So far as known, it is the only specimen in existence, for at the time it was made, only two were ordered by Mr. Tucker, the owner and manager of the Lake house. One of them was given to a friend by Mr. Tucker, immediately following its arrival from England, but to whom has never been discovered. The other Mr. Sherman obtained not long ago, from one of Mr. Tucker's relatives.

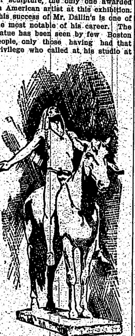
In its early days the Lake house could be reached only by means of the stage route from Glens Falls. The building was torn down nine years ago, and while there are other hotels on the lake, there is none on the Lake house site, which is not far from old fort George.

The ruins of fort Ticondereroga are on the waterway connecting the two lakes.

STATUE OF AMERICAN INDIAN.

Cyrus Dallin's Work Awarded the Gold Medal for Sculpture at the Paris Salon This Year.

Boston.—The accompanying illustration is a reproduction, enlarged from a photo taken in Paris recently of the statue that won the salon gold medal for sculpture, the only one awarded an American artist at this exhibition. This success of Mr. Dallin's is one of the most notable of his career. The statue has been seen by few Boston people, only those having had that privilege who called at his studio at Arlington Heights. It was exposed at the Nationol Sculpture society's exhibition at Baltimore last year, and was taken by Mr. Dallin when he went to Paris last September to complete his huge Soldiers' and Sailors' monument for Syracuse, N. Y. It suggests vastly more than it directly depicts, and herein, perhaps, lies its power. Had Cyrus Dallin done nothing else, he would have deserved well of the American people.



Dallin's "The Appeal to the Great Spirit."

Real Genius.

She came out where he was smoking his after-supper cigar.

"George, dear," she said, coaxingly, "won't you spare me the money for another mushroom hat?"

"Another one?" gasped George, in surprise. "Why, pet, where is the one you bought a few weeks ago?"

"Oh, I got tired of the shape and the more I looked at it the more I thought it would look prettier hanging out on the porch as a flower basket. So I punched holes in the bottom and here it is. Don't you think I'm a little genius, George?"

Scientific Note of Interest.

The readiness with which low forms of life accommodate themselves to altered environment shows that they are capable of being trained or educated to a certain extent. Stahl has shown that a certain plasmodium flees when sprinkled with salt, but if the salt be added to the medium gradually the organism accommodates itself to the new medium. Purposeful action is manifested by plants as well as by animals and by both unicellular and multicellular [illegible]

CALLING DOWN THE BOASTER

Good Little Story Told by William Dean Howells as a Rebuke to Spread-Eagleism.

"It was William Dean Howells," said a Chicago editor, "who first rebuked us Americans for our spread-eagleism, for our foolish boasting. I see that Mr. Howells has just joined a men's society for the promotion of woman suffrage. Trust him to be in the forefront always.

"I once heard Mr. Howells deliver a fourth of July oration in Maine. The orator preceding him had boasted a good deal. Mr. Howells showed that some of the man's boasts were even impious.

"He said that these spread-eagle boasters deserved the rebuke that the little child administered to the cackling hen that had just laid an egg. The child, angered by the hen's continuous cawk-cawk-cawk, cawk-cawk-cawk-cawk, shook his little finger at her and said:

"'You fink you're smart. But Dod made dat egg. You touldn't help but lay it!'"

WHY, OF COURSE.

"Farmer, which of those cows of yours gives the buttermilk?"

"None of 'em. The goat."

Law of Attraction.

The attractions of men to women and women to men are full of the most perplexing inconsistencies and contradictions imaginable. It is, for instance, a physical law that magnetism is not simple attraction of one thing for another, but the difference of two opposing forces of attraction and repulsion, of which the former is the greater. The same law holds in relation to the attraction of men and women for each other, in which, as a rule, the masculine is the superior force.—T. P.'s Weekly, London.

SURPRISED HIM
Doctor's Test of Food.

A doctor in Kansas experimented with his boy in a test of food and gives the particulars. He says:

"I naturally watch the effect of different foods on patients. My own little son, a lad of four, had been ill with pneumonia and during his convalescence did not seem to care for any kind of food.

"I knew something of Grape-Nuts and its rather fascinating flavor, and particularly of its nourishing and nerve-building powers, so I started the boy on Grape-Nuts and found from the first dish that he liked it.

"His mother gave it to him steadily and he began to improve at once. In less than a month he had gained about eight pounds and soon became so well and strong we had no further anxiety about him.

"An old patient of mine, 73 years old, came down with serious stomach trouble and before I was called had got so weak he could eat almost nothing, and was in a serious condition. He had tried almost every kind of food for the sick without avail.

"I immediately put him on Grape-Nuts with good, rich milk and just a little pinch of sugar. He exclaimed when I came next day 'Why doctor I never ate anything so good or that made me feel so much stronger.'

"I am pleased to say that he got well on Grape-Nuts, but he had to stick to it for two or three weeks, then he began to branch out a little with rice or an egg or two. He got entirely well in spite of his almost hopeless condition. He gained 22 pounds in two months which at his age is remarkable.

"I could quote a list of cases where Grape-Nuts has worked wonders."

Geo. E. Austin of St. Hilaire, representing the Hazelwood Butter company of Spokane, Wash., and F. A. Martine of Spokane, general manager of the company, were here Tuesday interesting the local creamery management in butter shipments to the Pacific coast.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Krueger and Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Krueger went to Crookston to attend the funeral of Michael Wentzel, an old friend, whose death occurred last Thursday. Mr. Wentzel had often visited in Red Lake Falls and had many friends here who will be sorry to learn of his death.

Mr. and Mrs. Ira C. Richardson left last Wednesday evening for Rochester where they went to be present at the funeral of Mrs. Richardson's father. He was one of the old settlers in this state having come here in 1855 and having resided continuously on the old homestead.—Thief River Press.

Chas. O. Kankel of Terrebonne was in town Monday to meet Mrs. Kankel and little daughter who were returning from Grand Forks. The little girl had been in a Grand Forks hospital for two weeks and had submitted to a surgical operation. The operation was successful and the little girl is getting along nicely.

Mrs. L. A. Kaufer entertained the Happy Hour club and a few friends at cards Thursday evening in honor of Mrs. Fred Krost of Hammond Ind. Mrs. W. A. Schieter won the head prize for the ladies, and Mr. Emard the gentleman's while Mr. Harren had to content himself with the consolation honors. A dainty lunch was served and music and singing ended a very pleasant evening.

Vander Waal of Poplar River was in town Wednesday. Mr. Waal informed the Gazette that the construction of the big county ditch in his town was the best thing that ever happpened for the country. He says that the ditch has been filled to overflowing for several days carrying off the surpus water and that if it were not for the ditch much land would be under water. He estimates that the ditch has saved the farmers in the one season more than enough to pay for its construction.

There may be a change in the conduct of the business of the local creamery. F. A. Mortine, manager of the Hazelwood Butter company of Spokane, Wash., who was here this week, made a proposition to handle all of the product of the creamery. If his proposition is accepted the creamery will not make butter. He proposes to instal machinery for pasteurizing cream and if the proposition is accepted the cream will after being pasteurized be shipped to Spokane, arrangements having been made for an express refrigerator car making regular trips to he coast. Mr. Mortine claims that the change will mean an increase in the farmers' pay checks. If the proposition is accepted the change will probaby not be made until next year.

Irons That Don't Leak

Abestos Sad Irons direct all the heat to the one spot where it is wanted. They don't raise the temperature of the room nor pour a stream of heat against the body of the ironer.

On account of long heat retention, fewer changes have to be made with ABESTOS SAD IRONS, permitting the ironing board to be removed to a comfortable distance from the stove, and reducing the amount of walking as well as the hurry of changing "leaky irons."

A LOCK OF HAIR.

By KINGSLEY WELCH.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

"You are acting like a ninny, sir. I am very much disappointed in you."

The words were spoken by old Marshall Humphrey to his son Joe, who had reached the age of twenty-five, which his father considered ample to show that he was exactly what that father wished him to be. And what his father wished him to be was this: First, he should be devoted to business and predisposed to carry on the concern his father had built up; second, he should marry and bring forth a son, through whom all this growth of wealth could be transmitted. To the old man's chagrin, the boy would have nothing to do with the business and showed every symptom of becoming a confirmed bachelor. Since he was an only child he was old Mr. Humphrey's sole hope.

Joe Humphrey, matrimonially considered, was like a wild animal that needs to be caught and trained, after which it loves its master devotedly. Leaving his father to nurse his disappointment, he went to his boathouse, intending to have a pull in his single scull boat on the river. Just as he was about to embark he saw something red dancing on the wavelets among some rushes near by. Getting into the boat, he gave a couple of strokes, seized the red thing and drew out a bottle of pickles, as he supposed, the red thing being sealing wax covering the cork. It was a pickle bottle, but no pickles. Breaking the seal, he shook out a card, on which was written, "Irma Whiting, aged eighteen years, six months and twenty days." Tacked to the card with a bit of thread was a lock of auburn hair in circular form. Below this was the address.

There was nothing to explain why the articles had been placed in the bottle. If there had been there would be no story. Nature has laid a number of traps to insure the propagation of the human species, but the one she keeps for a starter in difficult cases is curiosity. By this she excites attention, which is held and enlarged by romance. In this case the starter was Miss Whiting's card floating in a bottle without a reason given. The interest it excited was enhanced by the little circlet of hair.

Joe Humphrey pulled to the shade of some trees overhanging the river bank and, with the card in his hand, gave himself up to wonder. What did the girl want anyway? What was she like? He had had girls in dozens thrown at him by designing mothers without feeling anything but repugnance. There was neither curiosity nor romance, and above all was wanting the excitement of the chase. If this girl was angling for a lover it was not him especially. She might spurn him on sight. Was she pretty or homely, bright or dull, modest or bold? And all the while he was conning over these queries there lay the little circlet of hair. He touched it with his finger. He pulled back to the boathouse, climbed to a furnished upper room, where he kept writing materials, and inclosed the card with his own, on which he wrote: "Picked up this —— day of ——, 190—. 'Cast your bread on the waters and it shall be returned to your an hundredfold.'"

In due time he received a duplicate card with the inscription, "Better one gold dollar than a hundred copper pennies."

His reply: "No puny gold dollar represents the writer. He may rather be likened to a big silver coin. Your circlet of golden hair may have suggested your simile."

Her reply: "It's all the gold I have."

His reply: "I have only a heart of oak."

That was the beginning of the end. The correspondence went on, Miss Whiting finally explaining that she was a poor girl with a stepmother and no one to love her. She had sent her card adrift hoping that it might change her life and make it happier. Supplementary to this Humphrey informed her that he was a poet whose verses were too far above the market to be acceptable to publishers, but he thought that together they might be happy in each other's love in a cottage and asked permission to call. It was granted, and he met the girl in a small house on a country road. She was dressed in calico, and he wore a woolen shirt under a threadbare suit.

There was a courtship.

One day Miss Whiting told him that she had been playing a part. She did not live in the house where she received him. She was rich and had been hounded by fortune hunters. She wished to be loved for herself only.

Then Humphrey admitted that he, too, had been playing a game. He was not a pauper, but heir to a big business and a fortune.

One day Joe Humphrey informed his father that he wished to take hold of the business and learn it with a view to running it. The old man was delighted, and the young man took hold with a zeal that was surprising. One day the father asked the son why he had so suddenly changed his mind.

"I'll tell you, father," said Joe. "I've got a girl who says she won't marry a man who has no object in life. Since she won't have a loafer I must bestir myself."

This announcement doubled the father's pleasure. In due time Joe married the lady who had sent out her card bearing a fictitious name for a husband, and a few years later the old man retired, leaving the business to his son. Meanwhile there is a small boy who it is intended shall hand the business on down to future generations.

Rough on the Architect.

"When I got the order to design a big wholesale house for a firm that has stores in five cities besides New York naturally I was elated," said an architect. "'I'll plan a building that is bound to be satisfactory,' I said to myself, 'and then they will give me the commission for those new stores they expect to put up in those other five cities.'

"Well, I did turn out a splendid store—a store that was admired by everybody in the wholesale trade. My patrons were pleased, too, but instead of giving me an orders for those other buildings they simply used the same plans over and over again and built all their houses alike. That's what I call playing a low down trick on a fellow."—New York Globe.

FARMERS HARVESTING BUMPER CROP.

Farmers Have Been Busy Cutting Grain Most of the Week.

Best Crop This County Has Had for Years Will Soon be in the Shock.

The farmers are busy this week harvesting the best crop that southern Red Lake county has had for many years. There is an excellent stand of grain, the heads are well filled and the kernels plump and of fine color. The grain stands up well and there is little that cannot be cut. Practically every farmer who had not been in the field before that date started his binder Monday morning. Tuesday's rain put a stop to the work, but, though it was not needed, it is thought not to have caused more damage than to delay the work a little. The farmers are at it again and it is expected that by Saturday much of the fine crop will be in the shock. Crop conditions all over the northwest are promising, but nowhere are conditions more gratifying than in southern Red Lake county. The northern part of the county has not fared quite so well. Excessive rains a few days ago caused some damage, owing perhaps to the fact that the country there is less rolling.

Promoter Williams Here.

Promoter Williams, the head of the Great American Railway company, about which the Thief River Falls people got so excited, was in town last week talking railroad to some Red Lake Falls citizens. People here have not yet become very much excited over the prospects of the construction of the proposed road. Helmuth Zaiser has shown no enthusiasm over Mr. Williams' project, so little can be expected of less enterprising railoud builders.

Mr. Williams has had a surveying crew working in the county for several weeks. However, little work has been accomplished, though Mr. William's says he will have a line from Winnipeg to Chicago within a year. He plans, he says, to engage the county surveyor in each county through which his road is to pass to do the engineering work and farmers will be engaged to do the grading and take pay for their labor in stock of the company. None of the Red Lake county farmers have yet entered into a contract with Mr. Williams.

NOT CORDIAL WELCOME

Government Officials Order Detention of Four Aliens.

Four Austrians, now arrivals in the country, are held in custody by chief of police Arthur Lizee. The men were arrested under instructions from emigration officials at Winnipeg. The men are guilty of no greater offense than coming into the United States without passing inspection, but they may be retained here for weeks before their cases are adjusted and it is possible that they may be compelled to return to their native land. Emigration officials of the two countries are in correspondence on the cases to determine what disposition can be made of the charges against the men. The men were in a party of forty or fifty men who came across the line at the same time. The officials are now looking for the fellow who acted as guide for the crowd.

Yes, verily! The Red Lake County fair is on and it shows ripe squash and pumpkins, but we don't suppose they were raised at Red Lake Falls.—Thief River Press.

The County Fair.

The Red Lake Falls people who attended the county fair at Thief River Falls last week say that it was a good show. The agricultural exhibits, considering the early date of the fair, were good, and there were good exhibits of live stock. It is the general opinion, however, that the management would do well to hold the fair at a later date next year. It might be difficult to get fast race horses, but in the fall there can be more creditable exhibits of products of the farm and more farmers can attend than in the busy season—and it is the farmers, more than any one else, who can profit from attending a well conducted county fair. The races and show attractions were good, but it is impossible to explain why the fair management permitted such a multiplicity of skin games on the grounds. They couldn't have found a worse bunch of grafters if they had conducted a campaign to get 'em.

Big Ditch Job.

A job of ditching in which the residents of Thief River Falls and vicinity are interested is dredging and straightening of the Thief river. The contract for this work was let by the State Drainage Board in St. Paul last week to Forestal & Fegan, of St. Paul, for 68.1 cents per yard. The work is going to cost the state about $05,000, and will be of great benefit to the country north of here.—Thief River News.

STEINERT GOT NUMBER

One of the Fortunate Few in Land Drawing at Colur d'Alene.

Leo Steinert received a telegram Wednesday morning from Attorney Thos. Gormo, who is sojourning in the west, informing him that his name had been drawn in the land drawing at Coeur d'Alene. Mr. Steniert has not yet learned what his number is so does not know how fortunate he has been.

The land was appraised by government officials and the quarters numbered according to the appraised values so that those whose names were drawn early got the choicest pieces of land. There were so many registrations that the chance of drawing anything of value was comparatively small. It is said that each of 105,000 persons applying for the Coeur d'Alene lands had one chance in 333; each of the 100,000 applicants for the Spokane lands, one chance in 400; and of the 87,000 for Flathead land, one in 15.

Roller Bearing Wagons

This invention has been tested and tried and has at last reached perfection. We have a wagon that runs one-third lighter, yet is as strong and durable as any wagon made.

It goes without saying that a load can be moved with less draft on wheels than to slide along the highway and it must follow that a wheel will revolve easier in the same degree when on rollers than when required to slide with friction on the endless surface of the boxing of the hub.

We will have one of these wagons here in a few days. You'll be interested to know how simply and durably it is constructed and we'll be glad to show it to you.

DEVELOPEMENTS ON NEW IRON RANGE

Prospector Found Great Wealth in Discovery of Valuable Iron Deposits.

State's Interest in Great Mineral Resources Should Have Better Protection.

St. Paul, August 9.

Considerable alarm is felt here over the development of an obscure disease of which children are the principal victims, and which is reported to be an epidemic in some localities, thirty cases having been reported from Northfield alone, and a similar number from Winona. Anterior polio-myeletis, as it is called, is a form of infantile paralysis which, while it is not often fatal, generally has results which affect those afflictetd with it through life. It is a germ disease which attacks certain parts of the spinal cord, producing paralysis of the arms and legs from which, while there may be partial, there is rarely full recovery. The limbs affected, it may be the arms or the legs or one arm and one leg, shrink and the patient has never the full use of them again.

Symptoms of Infantile Paralysis.

While some leading St. Paul physicians have been studying the disease but little progress has been made in finding a remedy for it. The best they can do is to suggest preventative measures, as general cleanliness, simple diet and the avoidance of uncooked fruit and vegetables. Parents are also cautioned not to allow their children to play in the dirt. The symptoms of the disease are fever for a day or two, with lack of appetite, deranged bowels, nausea and general pains followed by a complete paralysis of the legs or a leg and an arm. The paralysis is ordinarily complete by the time it is discovered, and it comes rather suddenly, being usually discovered when the mother tries to get the child up in the morning. The disease is thought by some to be contagious, by others to be infectious. At all events in localities where one case developes a number of them are likely to follow. It is a dreadful thing to think of the number of crippled innocents this cruel scourge is leaving in its wake.

Mining in the Cayuna Range.

Word has been received of the sinking of the first mining shaft in the Cayuna range. Formerly it was said that most of the iron ore in this range was of low grade but more recent drillings indicate that the quality will be fully up to the average in the Messaba country. This range covers a large territory which embraces Aitkin, Crow Wing, Morrison, Todd and Wadena counties. Indeed there are evidences of iron deposits in nearly every county in Northern Minnesota. There seems to be little question that mining operations so far have merely scratched the surface, and that iron deposits of fabulous value still await the drill of the prospector.

The State's Heritage.

It appears to me to have been a great mistake for the legislature not to have created a department of mines as recommended by Governor Johnson at the last and the previous session. The interests of the state in its iron deposits are great and some more effective steps than have as yet been adopted should be taken to protect them. Neither the Steel Trust nor any other corporation should be allowed to absorb the state's heritage in its mineral deposits without making some return for the wealth the taking of which from beneath its soil leaves the land a desert.

A Successful Prospector.

The Cuyuna range gets its name from Cuyler Adams, the original explorer of the country who took this way to perpetuate his own memory and that of his wife whose name is Una, hence Cuyuna. Adams was not so long ago merely an impecunious mining man with an inquiring and speculative turn of mind and a reputation for going off on wild goose chases. Someway or other he got the notion into his head that it wasn't possible that nature had been freakish enough only to strew a little iron across a narrow patch of St. Louis county, and so he began looking around to see if there wasn't any lying around in the adjacent territory. His Cuyuna discoveries rewarded him. He didn't say anything about them, however, but began getting options on some of the most promising of the farms in that locality, and as a great deal of the land didn't amount to much for farming purposes he got it for a song. Finding himself shortly at the end of his resources one day he packed his grip with samples of iron ore and hied him down to Cleveland. After a brief interview with some capitalist down there he came back and did some more land speculating. Ultimately however the secret got out, and people got talking about the iron deposits in the Cuyuna and prices of real estate began mounting upwards. This did not happen, however, before Adams had pretty well feathered his own nest. In point of fact the erstwhile impecunious man is now well on the way towards becoming a bloated capitalist with a present fortune which is estimated at somewhere between three and four millions of dollars. As mining operations develop this will doubtless be largely swelled.

Railroads in the Cuyuna.

At present the transportation facilities in this territory are quite inadequate. The Soo, however, is building a line which will tap part of the range, and an independent company has also prospected a road for hauling the ore out to the port at Duluth. The prospects are that the United States Steel Corporations will soon have an acitve rival in the mining field, a fact which no one will have reason to deplore. Among others who have become interested is Dick Grant, the handsome young lawyer, who represents a St. Louis county district in the legislature. I am told he has tramped almost all over the Cuyuna territory with the necessary exploring tools, and that his trips to the wilderness have not been without reward. It is not necessary to attribute to him, therefore, a tender regard for the Steel Trust to account for his persistent opposition to a tonnage tax.

The Ledbetter Murder.

Interest in the Ledbetter murder case has been transferred to St. Paul by the arrival here of young Pfau, the attorney for the widow, who on the evidence of the hired man Smith, is now in the Blue Earth county jail awaiting trial for the murder of her husband. Pfau sought to have his client, whom he thoroughly believes innocent, admitted to bail, and on his motion being denied, came to St. Paul with a view of bringing the matter before the supreme court on appeal. Here he found a peculiar situation.

Owing to the resignation of Judge Elliot, who is now on the high seas, and the fact that his place can not be filled until his resignation takes effect on the first of September, and the absence of other judges from the state, it was impossible to get a quorum, so the woman must lie in jail until court meets again, which, if she is innocent, and no jury would convict a yellow dog on the unsupported testimony of Smith, and as I understand it, that is all there is against her, is certainly a hardship.

Peculiar Proceedings.

The impression is here that the county attorney down in Blue Earth is making a mess of the prosecution in this case. From what can be learned the attorneys for the state are showing an animus against the woman for which, to those outside, it is difficult to account. They seem to have made up their minds that, evidence or no evidence, she is the most guilty and that it is their

GENTILLY WINS AGAIN

Frist Prize in Cheese Making Contest Again Comes to Red River Valley.

For the second time this summer the first prize in the state cheese scoring contest has come to the Red River Valley and for the second time the honor has been won by the same man. In the July scoring contest the cheesemaker at the Gentilly factory carried off the first prize. In the previous contest he had won a like honor. To get the highest score in a state contest twice in succession is conclusive evidence of the excellent quality of the product of the Gentilly factory.

He'd Never Have a Patient.

Pays to Raise Good Cattle.

Last Saturday Tonnes Nelson shipped out one the nicest steers ever seen in Newfolden. The steer was a five year old and weighed 1975 pounds and at 5 1-2 cents per pound, which was paid for same, brought the handsome sum of $108.62. C. W. Anderson is the man who raised the steer and will say that he has done what a good many farmers thought impossible here. This should be good proof that it pays to raise steers when done the right way. —Newfolden Review.

A Big Contest.

The Duluth News Tribune is conducting a big subscripton contest and valuable prizes are being offered. Among the big prizes offered are a house and lot, a touring car and several pianos.

First Class Man.

There is some talk about J. A. Duffy, the Red Lake Falls banker, becoming the candidate of the republican party for representative from this district. He would make a first class man for the position, and aside from a little local prejudice, at Thief River Falls, he would have the solid support of the party in Red Lake county.—Sunbeam.

Expression of Appreciation.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.,
August 10th, 1909.

Still laboring under the series of afflictions culminating in the recent death by lightning of our son George, yet we desire to most heartily thank the many friends and neighbors who so charitably helped to assuage our grief by their many kindly acts.

We also most earnestly thank the officers and members of the local lodge of Modern Brotherhood of America for their aid and presence in a body at the funeral, and for the beautiful floral offering of the lodge.

Of the three sons we have lost this year, our son George was the only one who was a member of the a fraternal order, he having joined only his year, and carried $1000.00 insurance. The wisdom of the step and of the worth of the society is seen in the fact that we received full amount of his insurance just twenty days after his death.

This prompt payment of their death losses is what builds up the M. B. A's. reputation for solid worth in the good will of the public as it has with ourselves and family.

Hill Offers $2,500 Prize.

James J. Hill, chairman of the board of the Great Northern, has offered $2,500 in gold as prizes to be awarded for the best grains and grasses grown in the territory along his lines to be exhibited at the National Corn Exposition in Omaha December 6 to 18.

The money is to be divided into 200 prizes by Prof. C. P. Bull of the Minnesota Agricutural College and Prof. Thos. Shaw of the Dakota Farmer.

There will be about 40 first prizes for wheat, oats, barley, corn, clover, timothy and alfalfa hay, as well as prrizes for speltz and field peas.

Details of the contest will be supplied by the exposition at Omaha within a few days and farmers intending to win some of the Hill money, should save samples of small grains in bundles as well as peck samples of grain.

In addition to offering the prize, Mr. Hill will arrange to assist the farmers in getting their exhibits to Omaha.

The contest is an unusual one, because the farmers will not have to compete with those in agricultural states, but spmliy among themselves as the contest for Mr. Hill's prizes will be open to those living along the Great Northern lines. Besides these, prizes are to be offered by states, so Montana, for instance, will not have to compete with the highly developed farms of South Dakota and Minnesota.

Besides Hill money the exposition offers $50,000 in prizes and while competing for the Hill prizes, the exhibitors may also win regular prizes.

ANOTHER CLOUDBURST NEAR ADA

Much Country Between Ada and Felton Said to be Under Water.

Farmers Will Not be Able to Get on the Fields for Several Days.

No. 5 from St. Paul this morning was two hours late, caused by soft tracks between Ada and Felton as the result of a cloudburst early this morning. The rain came in perfect torrents and a member of the train crew stated that for a distance of fifteen miles, the grain shocks were submerged by water and that farmers would not be able to get on the fields for a number of days.

The storm was accompanied by a vivid electrical distubrance. At Felton Johnson's big general store was struck by lightning and burned to the ground and between Felton and Ada four farm buildings were seen in flames, presumably from the same cause.

O, Rats!

It is said that a Russian wooing culminates in the betrothal breakfast, at which the bride-elect casts off a long tress of her hair and gives it to her betrothed. If the custom were in vogue in America there is little doubt that, owing to the present styles of headdress, many young men would get buncoed.

Taft Signs Tariff Bill

President Affixes Signature to Tariff Measure After Issuing Statement

BOTH HOUSES ADJOURN

A Substantial Downward Revision Says President Taft in Statement

Washington, D. C., Aug. 5.—President Taft signed the tariff bill at 5:06 this afternoon.

He gave out tonight a statement embodying his views of the new tariff act, which he designates officially as the "Payne bill," in accordance with the past custom of giving first recognition to the framer of the measure in the house of representatives.

The president declares that while the bill is not perfect by any means, nor a "complete compliance with promises made, strictly interpreted," it is nevertheless a sincere effort on the part of the party to make a downward revision and to comply with the promises of the platform.

The conference report on the bill was agreed to by the senate by a vote of 47 to 31, when the vote was taken at 2 p. m., and soon afterwards the concurrent resolution making certain changes in the leather schedule was adopted by both houses.

The tariff has been revised and the extraordinary session of congress has been brought to a close. Both houses adjourned sine die officially at 6 o'clock tonight.

BOATS RACE WITH TARIFF.

But Customs Port Closes And Tariffs Go Up.

New York, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Nearly twenty trans-Atlantic steamships which have been making their utmost efforts in response to orders sent by wireless to reach New York before the new tariff law went into effect, lost their race at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon when the doors of the customshouse clanged shut and the last payment of duty under the old law was registered and labeled "entry No. 1,118,000" by one of Collector Loeb's clerks. Importers who have merchandise on the boats will be losers to the extent of between $100,000 and $200,000.

The vessel which lost by the narrowest margin was the Hamburg American Liner Pennsylvania, with a cargo of wines and merchandise which must pay $20,000 extra duty under the new law. Fast scout tugs had been out all day awaiting the big frieghters arrival, with orders to take off her captain and hurry him to the customs house with the ships manifest. But when 4:30 o'clock came, the Pennsylvania was fifty miles or so from port.

HAIL IN BURLEIGH COUNTY.

Storm Swept Through County Causing Heavy Loss.

Bismarck, Aug. 5.—Dawson and McKenzie were visited today by a destructive hail storm. Many windows were broken at Dawson and the drops in the vicinity suffered much. The crop on the big Hackney ranch at McKenzie was entirely destroyed.

Destructive hail storms also visited other parts of Burleigh county Wednesday evening according to reports received this afternoon. The storm entered the county at the northwest corner and traveled a zigzag path to the southeast corner, leaving a path about four miles wide where it is estimated a twenty-five per cent damage was done. many farmers were in the field at work when the storm came up.

NAVAL OFFICER WAIVES RIGHTS

The Sutton Inquiry Adjourned Until Next Week.

Annapolis, Md., Aug. 5.—For five hours today Lieutenant Harold Utley of the marine corps was subjected to an exacting examination and cross-examination in regard to his connection with the death of Lieutenant James N. Sutton of Oregon, which is the subject of investigation before the naval board of inquiry at the naval academy. The hearings were resumed today after an adjournment from the early part of last week, pending the arrival of Lieutenant Utley and Surgeon Frank C. Cook, who were aboard the U. S. Cruise North Carolina, which reached Provincetown, Tuesday.

"BLUE LAWS" REPEALED.

Connecticut Legislature Wipes Out Famous Code.

Hartford, Conn., Aug. 4.—Both the houses of the Connecitcut legislature today passed a bill repealing the so-called "Blue laws" relating to Sunday observation which forbid almost every form of recreation and secular activity.

One of the laws specifically repealed is that which provides for a fine of $4 of each person who shall attend a concert or entertainment on Sunday.

TORPEDO BOAT HITS REEF.

United States Ship "Paul Jones" Makes Port in Sinking Shape.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 4.—The torpedo boat destroyer, "Paul Jones," which left here July 26, for a cruise in Alaskan waters, was said tonight to have struck a reef several miles from Skagway, Alaska, and made the port in a sinking condition. The extent of the damage is not known.

Thaw's Witness Dispels Illusion

FIRST LEGAL ADVISOR OF THAW TESTIFIES IN BEHALF OF FORMER CLIENT.

White Plains, N. Y., Aug. 4.—The state rested in the Thaw case today and from now on it devolves upon Harry K. Thaw and his attorney, Charles Morschauser, to offset the testimony of the state alienists, who have sworn without exception under cross-examination of district Attorney Jerome, that Thaw is still insane and would be a menace to the community if released from the asylum at Matteawan.

Dr. Carlos F. MacDonald was the last alienist called by the state. He was followed by John B. Gleason, Thaw's original legal advisor after the shooting of Stanford White. Mr. Gleason came to Thaw's aid this afternoon and cleared up a few old mysteries, sweeping away some of Thaw's apparent vagaries upon which Mr. Jerome has dwelt so persistently.

Mr. Gleason's most advantageous statement, from the prisoner's standpoint concerned the dropping of the law firm of Black, Gruber, Olcott & Bonynge and L. L. Delafield and the engagement of Delphin M. Delmas as chief counsel for Thaw. This had been done at his (Gleason's) orders, he said, and was not due to a whim of Thaw's.

Through Mr. Gleason, Thaw's lawyer hopes to show, that Thaw's attitude toward Stanford White was not due to delusions as the state contends but was prompted by what Thaw knew of White's practices.

Mr. Gleason has about fifty letters received from Thaw, which may prove one of the sensations of the hearing tomorrow if read. Mr. Morschauser tried to prove the charges against White today by reading parts of Evelyn Thaw's testimony at the trials. Thaw's letters to Mr. Gleason bear upon this, it is thought.

Trying to clear Thaw of another "delusion" Mr. Gleason presented a report of detectives regarding an alleged attempt on Thaw's part on the night of December 29, 1903.

The wording of this document was not made public, but it was introduced to counteract the state's contentions that Thaw had delusions concerning the "Monk" Eastman gang, which he believed had been engaged by his enemies to beat and perhaps kill him, and that after White's death the architect's friends entered into a conspiracy to "railroad his slayer to Matteawan."

If he can show that Stanford White and a number of wealthy friends did maintain several establishments where young girls were ruined and that an attempt really was made on his client's life, Mr. Morchauser will be able to dissipate some of the "delusion" evidence of the state. He intimates that he has some surprises in store for the remaining days of the hearing, including ten lay witnesses, who may testify as to what Thaw knew of White.

Tomorrow he will finish his readings of the testimony of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw and certain other witnesses at the murder trials. The present plan is to have the attorneys sum up on Saturday, and if possible, finish the case this week.

"LOVER" WILL PROSECUTE.

Shooting Mystery in New York Hotel Deepens.

New York, Aug. 4.—Mrs. Meville Castle, the woman from California, who has a difference of opinion with Mrs. William D. Craig as to whether, Mr. Craig, whom she shot but did not seriously injure last night at the Waldorf Astoria, has pursued her, or she him, found no mercy today in the man she says loves her. Nor had anyone gone on her bail tonight. Craig refused to dismiss the complaint against her and when she laid her hand on his shoulder in court and pleaded gently, "Will, please drop it. Wont you?" he turned bruequely and left the room. She was held in $3,000 bail for further examination.

In the matron's room of the Jefferson Market prison, Mrs. Castle gave out a statement interrupted by bursts of weeping, in which she intimated that her negro servant could give testimony in her support.

"The night before last," she said, "Will (Mr. Craig) called at my house about 7 o'clock. Some thing occurred that I swore I would punish him for. I had my servant put him out. He said things which he said he should tell somebody. I said he should not.

"If you had sisters you would have told them to act just as I have acted.

"Last night I went to the Waldorf to make him retract. I told him it would have to be in the presence of the negro, because he had been in the room, and had heard. When I met Will he said, 'I wish I was dead, that Kate was dead, that you were dead.' Kate, you know, is his wife.

"Then I drew this crazy little affair,"—the pistol she carried in her handbag. "He grabbed it and it went off."

Mrs. Castle has been highly excited ever since her arrest, but up to the time of her statement tonight she denied any attempt to "punish" anyone. She drew her pistol, she has said hitherto, with the intent to commit suicide.

TWO N. P. WORKERS KILLED.

Two Accidents Are Fatal in Morton County.

Bismarck, Aug. 5.—A. Lucboskankie and Alex Edanjuk, laborers on the Northern Pacific extension, were killed Wednesday afternoon. The former was killed by a car falling on him, the accident occurring twelve miles south of Cannon Ball. The latter was killed by a premature explosion of blasting powder six miles west of Cannon Ball. Two others fatally wounded at the same time are in the Mandan hospital.

REAL ESTATE RAISED.

State Board of Equalization Raised Valuations.

Bismarck, Aug. 5.—The state board of equalization today finished adjusting the assessment of real estate and "improvements and structures on lands." In real estate the county boards returned an increased valuation over last year of five and a half million dollars, and state board this afternoon boosted that valuation another five and a half millions.

COSTS HIGH TO RUN THE STATE

TREASURER DINEHART COMPUTES THE EXPENSE OF GOVERNMENT MACHINE.

TAKES $21.54 EVERY MINUTE

Disbursements Last Year $12,717,018.25, Leaving on Hand $2,773,250.75. Legislature is an Expensive Luxury.

The State of Minnesota spends $21.54 a minute. It spends $1,292.52 every hour and $31,020.45 every day. The total is $943,539.08 every month.

These figures are shown in the preliminary report of the financial condition of the state as prepared by State Treasurer Clarence C. Dinehart for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1909. That is the average amount expended during the past year, not counting the money loaned by the state from the permanent trust funds.

Starting with a balance of cash on hand Aug. 1, 1908, the state treasurer took in during the year $12,521,980.02. The total expenditures amounted to $12,717,018.25, leaving on hand at present $2,773,250.41.

Legislature Came High.

The state legislature for 1909 cost $290,752.75.

The permanent trust funds of the state, which are invested in securities, state and local, bearing 3, 3½ and 4 per cent interest, amount to $16,273,298.91, of which there are loans to:

Minnesota municipal corporations	$7,814,298.91
New capitol certificates	2,300,000.00
University campus certificates	50,000.00
Bonds of other states	6,109,000.00
Total	$16,273,298.91

Aoubt two-thirds of the permanent trust funds are invested within the state. The state board of investment has loaned to school districts and other local municipal corporations during the fiscal year $1,229,454.99.

Various items of treasury receipts are as follows:

Railroads	$2,972,792.55
Insurance companies	370,665.43
General taxation	1,745,290.97
Receipts from royalty on iron ore	118,768.52
Receipts from mineral leases	20,900.00
Inebriate hospital taxes	65,242.29
Inheritance taxes	213,992.21
Hunter's licenses	15,941.14
Automobile licenses	12,850.00
Oil inspection	34,934.40
Telephone taxes	140,958.34
Incorporation fees	73,450.00
Mortgage registration taxes	18,889.61

Business Men Confident.

Mr. Dinehart says:

"It is interesting to note that the corporation fees received during May, June and July of 1908 were $14,890; while for the same period of 1909, a time when ordinarily business interests would be conservative inasmuch as capital is timid when any possible change in a nation's policy is being considered, the receipts were $22,250. This would seem to indicate that the financial men of the middle west were satisfied with the business outlook and security of their investments."

The figures showing the amounts expended for various state institutions include all of the money spent by the state for their general support, repairs, buildings, and so forth, are as follows:

Five normal schools, $397,989.94.

Five hospitals and asylums, $1,063,645.79.

Schools for blind, deaf, cripples and delinquents, $701,441.25.

State Reformatory, $167,715.72, State prision, $1,468,163.03.

This includes $1,119,490.25 paid on account of the twine plant. The receipts during the last fiscal year have been $1,263,874.35. At the beginning of the last fiscal year, the twine account had a balance of $51,604.83. This leaves a balance at the beginning of the new year of $195,988.93.

Fighting White Plague.

The state sanitarium for consumptives cost the state $35,524.49. The receipts from this institution during the last year have been $19,948.88.

The total amount of money expended on account of the state university was $897,291.95. For the agricultural college, $41,492.54; for the Crookston agricultural college and experimental station, $48,270.55; Grand Rapids experimental station, $8,818.85.

The amount expended in support of the Soldiers' home was $122,304.51; for the Inebriate hospital, $30,842.04; for Indian war pensions, $56,896.80; for all educational purposes outside the university, $2,839,218.20.

Moorhead.—The cornerstone of the new Presbyterian church was laid here with appropriate ceremonies.

FATHER SHOOTS DAUGHTER.

Shot Fired at Target Will be Fatal to Park Rapids Girl.

Park Rapids.—Little Miss Addie Broadbent, the 8-year-old daughter of William Broadbent, was accidentally shot in the head by her father. Broadbent was shooting at a target when a twenty-caliber ball passed through a board, hit another and glanced, striking the girl above the left ear, cutting a hole through her skull and going into the brain.

AIRSHIP RACE FOR FAIR.

Wright-Bleriot Contest Sought for Minnesota's Exposition.

St. Paul.—Although Secretary C. N Cosgrove has received no reply to his cablegram offering Louis Bleriot $5,000 to make flights in his aeroplane at the state fair, he has met the offer made by the Seattle exposition and by the Hudson river celebration committee, with a counter move.

"If Seattle offers $25,000 for a race between the Wright and Bleriot aeroplanes, the Minnesota state fair will offer the same sum for the same event and the aviators wil not have to go as far West as Seattle. Moreover, the state fair grounds are so laid out that even the Wright aeroplane will have no difficulty in finding room enough to start, providing weather conditions are favorable," said Mr. Cosgrove.

"I also note that Bleriot has been approached with an offer to give him such part of $10,000 as he can win in the aeroplane events at the Hudson river celebration. If these aviators prefer to compete for a stated amount of prize money instead of appearing at expositions for a stipulated sum, we will be very glad to arrange our proposition to meet their desires."

SLEUTH CONVICTED OF PERJURY

Man Who Figured In the Stephenson Probe, Guilty.

Madison.—Frank T. Wagner, detective who testified before the senate investigating committee which probed charges of improper use of money in the election of United States Senator Stephenson, to having seen money paid by Stephenson agents, was convicted of perjury in the municipal court here.

Wagner had testified that he saw agents of Mr. Stephenson pay money to men who later absented themselves from the legislative sessions, allowing the election of Mr. Stephenson.

It was testified in the perjury trial that there was no transom between the hotel rooms in Milwaukee through which Wagner testified he had watched the proceedings and that, furthermore, both rooms were occupied by traveling men at the time when the transaction was charged to have taken place. Those involved were proved to have been sick or out of the city at the time of the reported incident.

TUGBOAT SEIZED BY OFFICERS.

Alleged That Duties Were Unpaid on Logs Towed From Canada.

Fergus Falls.—The United States government filed a motion in the federal court in this city, notifying the owners of the tugboat "Nick" that this boat has been seized by the United States revenue officers, together with two large rafts of logs, containing several hundred thousand feet of lumber, and that the entire property will be confiscated to the government unless redeemed within a stipulated time. The boat in question is alleged to have been towing logs from the Canadian to the American side of the Rainy river, and it is alleged that the persons in charge have been failing to pay the tariff duties. The government brought similar proceedings here in the case of a large quantity of whisky that was seized on the White Earth Indian reservation a short time ago.

MINE IS WORTH MILLIONS.

Scranton at Hibbing Will Pay State Vast Sums in Royalties.

Hibbing.—The state of Minnesota has struck it rich at the Scranton location on the outskirts of Hibbing.

The property is controlled by Pickands, Mather & Co., and they have just awarded a contract for sinking a concrete working shaft. This mine will not only be the biggest the state owns, but it will be the biggest underground mine on the Messabi range.

Twenty-five million tons of ore have been shown up by drills and the state will pull down 25 cents a ton royalty. The state will receive more than $8,000,000.

The Scranton mine was formerly called the Elizabeth.

LIGHT SYSTEM TO BE IMPROVED.

New Company Organized at Stillwater and $300,000 Mortgage Filed.

Stillwater, Minn.—the reorganization of the city lighting system of Stillwater was further advanced when Homer W. McCoy and Joseph H. Roy, both of Chicago, who recently purchased the Stillwater Gas & Light company's plant and business at a trustee sale, transferred the property to a new company known as the Washington County Light & Power company, of which they are members. The transfer was followed by the filing of the largest mortgage ever known in the county. The mortgage is for $300,000 and is written on the plant. The registration tax amounted to $1,500. The new company plans to make many improvements in the plant and service.

Famous Theosophist Coming.

Minneapolis, Minn. — Mrs. Anna Besant, Adyar, India, president of the International Theosophical society, will be in Minneapolis next month. Mrs. Besant recently sailed for America and is expected in New York early next week. She will arrive in Minneapolis Saturday, August 14, and will give two lectures at the Auditorium Saturday and Sunday evenings. Her subjects will be "The Closing Age," and "The Larger Consciousness and Its Value."

The Auto Strop.

When the train stopped at the little Southern station the Northern tourist sauntered out on the platform. Under a scrub oak stood a lean animal with scraggy bristles. The tourist was interested.

"What do you call that?" he queried of a lanky native.

"Razorback hawg."

"Well, what is he doing rubbing against that tree?"

"He's stropping himself, mister, jest stropping himself."

Putting It Delicately.

Author—Have you read my new book?

Friend—Yes.

"What do you think of it?"

"Well, to be candid with you, I think the covers are too far apart."

His Logic.

Knicker—Women will get the ballot when the majority ask for it.

Mrs. Knicker—Do men get their buttons sewed on when the majority of them ask for it?

"MAKES BETTER RAILROADS."

Western Writer Pays Tribute to Railroad Magnate as Builder-Up of the Country.

Mr. Edward H. Harriman is on a trip to Europe. Ordinarily there would need be nothing added to this announcement beyond an exhortation to Emperor William to chain down his railroads and to other monarchs to put their crowns and other valuables in the safe at night. But Mr. Harriman is going off on a pleasure trip, and so many mean things have been said about him that it will not hurt any to change the tune a moment while he is out of the country and not able to take any advantage of the lapse from the cold attitude of severity that is usually used in mentioning the name of Harriman.

Of all the great railroad men developed in this generation, E. H. Harriman is easily the biggest and the best, says a writer in the Hutchinson (Kan.) Daily News. The head of a railroad company, under the rules of the game, must work for his stockholders, whether it is for the advantage of politicians, shippers or consumers. It is his job to do the best he can for the interests entrusted to his care. Harriman is not only a financier, but he is a builder and an operator. Lucky is the town, city or community that has a Harriman road. He insists on a good roadbed, level track, safe track and the convenience and comfort of the traveler and the shipper. The Harriman roads are noted as the best in the country. When Harriman gets hold of a one-horse or played-out track and right of way he proceeds to put it in first class condition. He does not raise the rates of fares, although he doubtless charges "a plenty," but he insists that enough of the funds go into real improvements to make a railroad. And that is where he stands ahead of a good many others and why Harrimanism is not such a bad thing as some people have been led to think. He makes better railroads, and there is more need for improvement that way than there is in some others which are being discussed. So far as we can see, he believes in giving every interest along his road a fair deal.

He is a public benefactor from that standpoint. He uses his power fairly. He is a great man, and as good or better than the ordinary citizen who looks upon him as the personification of the money power, seeking whom it may devour. He is a strong man in the financial world, but that should not be against him, when the financial world is the object which most of us want to reach. He is a good American and he spends his money on American railroads, not on foreign titles, race horses, old editions or other bad habits. If he is not perfect—and we don't think he is—he is no exception to the rule and is worthy of the praise of his fellow citizens for the good he does and has done.

Laughter a Series of Barks.

Laughing is barking, say the scientists. The neck and head are thrown back while a series of short barks are emitted from the throat. However musical the barks may be, they are barks. The laugh begins with a sudden and violent contraction of the muscles of the chest and abdomen. But instead of opening to let the air pass out of the lungs, the vocal cords approach each other and hold it back. But they are not strong enough to exercise such opposition for more than an instant, and the air, which is under pressure, promptly escapes. As it does so it makes the vocal cords vibrate producing the bark.

This obstruction and liberation of the air expelled from the lungs repeats itself again and again at intervals of a quarter of a second. There are thus in a hearty laugh four barks a second, and if continued, they go on at that rate as long as the air reserve in the lungs holds out. The empty lungs must then fill themselves, and this interval is marked by a quick gasp for breath, after which the barks are renewed. The barks occur in series with gasps for breath at intervals.

When laughter is violent, the entire body participates. The upper part of the trunk bends and straightens itself alternately or sways to right and left. The feet stamp on the floor, while the hands are pressed upon the loins to moderate the painful spasm.

Interviewing the Professor.

"So you don't think Mars would reply, even if we did send signals?"

"I am almost convinced that there would be no response," answered Prof. Thinktum, adjusting his glasses.

"Then you don't believe that Mars is inhabited?"

"On the contrary, I think it extremely probable that life similar to our own exists on the sister planet."

"But you don't give those people credit for intelligence equal to ours?"

"Yes. I am inclined to credit them with even greater intelligence than we display. There are many indications that they have a civilization older than ours, in which case they should have too much sense to fool away their time on any such impractical proposition."

The Way He Did It.

Jenkins—Well, sir, I gave it to that man straight, I can tell you. He is twice as big as I am, too, but I told him exactly what I thought of his rascally conduct right to his face, and I called him all the names in the dictionary, and a lot of others as well.

Studds—And didn't he try to hit you, Jenkins?

Jenkins—No, sir, he didn't. And when he tried to answer back, I just hung up the telephone receiver and walked away.

Up on Hoyle and Blackstone.

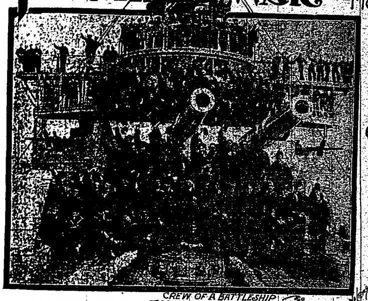
Sir Frederick Thesiger, while engaged in the conduct of a case, objected to the irregularity of the counsel on the opposite side, who, in examining his witnesses, put leading questions.

"I have a right," answered the counsel, "to deal with my witnesses as I please."

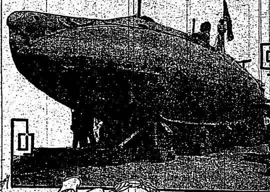
"To that I offer no objection," retorted Sir Frederick; "you may deal as you like, but you sha'n't lead."—London Tribune.

FIFTY BATTLECRAFT IN MIMIC WAR

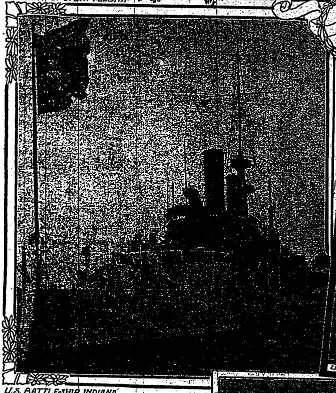
By CAPT. ELLIS D. MORSON



CREW OF A BATTLESHIP

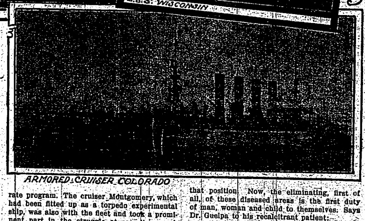


DISABLED SUBMARINE TORPEDO BOAT IN DRY DOCK



U.S. BATTLESHIP INDIANA

U.S.S. WISCONSIN



ARMORED CRUISER COLORADO

IF YOU had been an eye witness of the great naval battle which was fought off the port of Provinceincetown, Mass., in the Atlantic ocean, you would say without hesitation that "Uncle Sam can lick the world."

It was a mimic encounter, the feature of this summer's maneuvers of the Atlantic battleship fleet, which were held off the rugged Massachusetts coast between July 7 and August 5, the exercises there having just come to an end.

It was a great scrap, bloodless of course, but filled with enough mimic gore to make an American of the coldest temperament throw his hat into the air and yell for Old Glory, the stars and stripes, President Taft and all the rest.

Drawn up in battle alignment were 50 war craft of every size and shape. They ranged all the way from Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder's 16,000 ton flagship, U. S. S. Connecticut, to the tiny submarine torpedo boat Tarantula.

Divided into two squadrons, opposing each other, these two divisions of "our friends, the enemy," broke the morning mist on opposite horizons and at the flagship's signals quickly fell into circular battle formation, opening fire at a distance of several miles.

On paper it was a gory struggle. A dozen of the terrors of the sea were "disabled" by Rear Admiral Schroeder's edict and several submarines figuratively carried their crews to Davy Jones' locker, never to return.

The battleship Connecticut led the ships of one division. From out of the cover of each opponent's guns darted the tiny torpedo boats and almost as often their courses were blocked and in some cases the torpedoes and torpedo boats "destroyed."

By nightfall the battle being called a "draw," the searchlights of the two sets of enemies followed each other out of sight and that Saturday evening foes became friends upon reaching headquarters at Provincetown.

Every known modern naval device was given its inning during the fight. Torpedoes were dispatched by wireless telegraph, this being an experiment tried in an actual engagement for the first time by the United States. The newly adopted fire control mast, which has been called the "inverted waste basket," proved a success, the officers said. The summer's maneuvers afforded the first opportunity for a crucial test of this invention.

A dozen torpedo boats made attacks on the big battleships and officers and men were required to exert extreme vigilance to also guard against the little submarine torpedo boats, four of which with the parent ship, the gunboat Castine, made things lively for the monster war vessels. Time and again the flagship Connecticut was compelled to dip her nets to ward off the destructive torpedoes which shot little swirls of foam to the surface of the ocean as they sped on their mission of mimic death.

The grim reaper, burlesqued, stalked everywhere during the encounter and time and again ships were declared "sunk," "destroyed" or "scuttled" to prevent capture by the enemy, while admirals, captains, petty officers and men were notified they had been "killed" by a well-directed shell.

The battle of the fleets was the play of the maneuvers. To the able-bodied seamen the work consisted of fleet drills and exercises involving tactical problems and battle evolutions. With their work off Provincetown finished the fleet was scheduled to depart for the southern drill grounds, south of Virginia capes, for record and battle target practice, the results of which were ordered secretly tabulated for the war department.

This shooting will ocupy about two weeks beginning August 19. At its close the vessels will return to Hampton Roads and go to their home yards for repairs which may have been necessitated by the vigorous summer campaign. The winter maneuvers will take place in West Indian waters.

Hampton Roads presented a great sight when the big war craft departed from there for New England ports, where they spent July 4, preparatory to repairing to Provincetown for the maneuvers and sham naval struggle.

In the northern ports the sailors and officers were granted shore leave in relays from July 2 to July 6. Four ships visited Boston Independence day, two were at Penobscot bay, two at Portland, Me., and one each at Marblehead, Mass., Portsmouth, N. H., Eastport, Me., Brockport, Mass., Gloucester, Mass., and Booth Bay, Me.

With the reassembling of the fleet at Brockport, Mass., three days after the fourth began the summer's work, which was more picturesque than that of any previous year, it was said.

From Provincetown the fleet proceeded to sea each week, returning Saturday nights. On these trips of a week each occurred the fleet drills, the evolutions and other exercises.

One feature of the maneuvers was the presence of the naval militias of several eastern states. The members of these militia bodies are citizen sailors. Each body of militia was taken out for a week's instruction on the big ships. Permission to take the reserves on the voyages was granted through the courtesy of the navy department.

The Provincetown maneuvers presented the spectacle of battleships at practice firing at sea under every weather condition for the first time in the history of American naval art. Night firing under the same conditions was one of the important parts of the program which was carried out to the letter.

President Taft and Secretary of the Navy Meyer were witnesses of several of the maneuvers of the fleet at sea and both officials expressed themselves as delighted with the progress which the sailors have made at marksmanship since their world tour.

Two old torpedo boats, Nicholson and O'Brien, were dismantled, filled with cork to keep them afloat and used as targets for the gigantic projectiles. Time and again they were riddled and finally, the cork having been so thoroughly perforated that they were longer unable to keep afloat, they sank to the bottom of the ocean.

They were towed at different speeds by the cruisers and thus the gunners of the men-of-war given an opportunity to gauge distance and motion at the same time, one of the most difficult feats at which the American tar is an adept.

The scout cruisers Chester, Salem and Birmingham and the armored cruisers North Carolina, Montana and New York joined the fleet at Provincetown and took part in the elaborate program. The cruiser Montgomery, which had been fitted up as a torpedo experimental ship, was also with the fleet and took a prominent part in the struggle at sea, its experiments proving of great future value.

The great Atlantic torpedo fleet also deserves mention in connection with the summer's play at war. The flotilla of 12 boats with the cruiser Dixie as parent ship and four brand new submarine boats with the gunboat Castine as their parent ship played spectacular parts alongside of the monster battleships of fifteen and sixteen thousand tons.

Only 12 of the 16 battleships which went around the world were with the fleet of the Atlantic ocean off Provincetown, the other four in Rear Admiral Schroeder's command being new vessels, receiving their first experience at firing in this practice.

STOP EATING AND GET WELL

"In the course of my long experience I have noted," says Dr. Guelpa, one of Italy's best-known consulting physicians, according to the New York World, "that the beginning of a cure of a sick person always declares itself when the bodily weight shows a decrease. Whenever, on the contrary, the weight remained stationary I never failed on any occasion to find that the temperature had increased and that the particular illness of the moment had the upper hand."

And so it was that Guelpa, much to the chagrin and temporary discomfort of his many patients—and he had one of the largest clienteles in Italy—was wont to ruthlessly prescribe a "diet of starvation." The patient would naturally protest. He felt weak, he would declare and then Guelpa would talk to him somewhat after the following manner:

"My friend, you feel weak—and why? Simply because at the present moment your body, in the process of starvation, is expelling from its various departments a bad superabundance of toxic matters and diseased or worthless tissue which while you were overfeeding your system were unable to be thrown off owing to the calls you made upon your digestive and kindred organs. Not only do I starve you now, my poor friend, but tomorrow I will give you a purgative. You think I am cruel, do you? Not at all. All these noxious matters will be carried away from your system; but nevertheless I shall continue to starve you, caro amico. When your temperature has gone below the normal—that is to say, when in a couple of days the excess of toxic matter has been eliminated, then you shall have something to eat. No, not till then."

However, the doctor carried his investigations somewhat further. It occurred to him that even in the healthy state, or in the normal body which is supposed to be enjoying good health, this used-up or worthless tissue and effete matter must require occasional expulsion from the body. It is obvious that when the regulation amount of food is consumed the body's digestive and kindred organs have their allotted tasks to perform. Consequently, the refuse or worthless matter remains in the system, thus forming an object of attack in the case of disease, a source of debility and a happy hunting ground for those noxious phagocytes that prey upon the healthy body, first intrenching themselves in a center of the body which is predisposed to unhealthiness and attacking from that position. Now, the eliminating, first of all, of these diseased areas is the first duty of man, woman and child to themselves. Says Dr. Guelpa to his recalcitrant patient:

"When you are attacked by an illness, do you not find, my dear friend, that nature removes from you most of your ordinary desire to eat and drink? You, however, think that you know better than nature. You say to yourself that you must prepare for your sickness by putting in a stock of food—and perhaps drink. Foolish man! Does it not occur to you that nature is trying to teach you how to act and you won't learn. Far from waiting till you are stricken with illness, try an occasional day's starvation and illness may never come. You will, by doing this, rid your system of its effete tissues and its noxious toxic matters or poisons. When you feel that occasional headache; when you feel that "all-overishness" that sometimes attacks you; when you are depressed—you call it bilious—well, try a bout of starvation and then watch for results.

How long should we starve, then, according to our Guelpa? He says himself that there are few persons who cannot do three days without food, and that, too, with constant purgatives. At first a general gastric and muscular weakness is felt. That is simply the beginning of the process of elimination. Soon a sense of comfort begins to be enjoyed. Of course the body in this period is more prone to catch cold, a matter that must be provided for by an increase of clothing and a hot drink now and then.

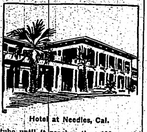
The Chamber of Commerce of Port au Prince offers to place at the disposal of chambers of commerce, producers and manufacturers of the United States and its colonies a space in its rooms for the exhibition of their products.

WHICH IS HOTTEST PLACE?

Yuma, Ariz., and Needles, Cal., Where Thermometer Daily Reaches 120 Mark, Given Honor.

New York.—With the advent of hot weather the old controversy between Yuma and Needles, the first in Arizona, and the other in California, as to which is the hottest place in the United States has been revived. Neither is clamoring for the distinction—oh, no, each is striving to thrust it upon the other! As a matter of fact, the difference is so slight that it isn't worth quarreling about.

From now on until late in September the mercury will climb up in the tube until it reaches the 120 mark nearly every day in both places; and there are weeks at a stretch when it never falls below 100 even at night. One can cook eggs hard by simply burying them in the hot sand. The Mojave Indians of the lower valley of the Colorado river always go barefoot, and the hot sands and stones have calloused their feet until they are as hard and as insensible to pain as the hoofs of a horse; they can walk through fire and trample red-hot coals without flinching.



Hotel at Needles, Cal.

The extreme heat is due to the low altitude, combined with the proximity of the Colorado and Mojave deserts. For 1,000 miles on the east, and 500 on the north and west, stretches a waste of sand and cacti. With every mile traversed by the winds they gather heat, so that a cooling breeze from any direction is an impossibility. The man that traverses the deserts doesn't wonder that Yuma and Needles are hot. He only wonders that they are not white hot.

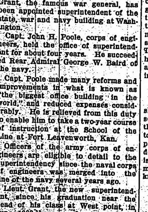
Persons who can stand the excessive heat find Needles and Yuma health resort admiably adapted to the cure of consumption, bronchitis and rheumatism. However, most people would consider the disease more tolerable than the cure.

A year ago a pretentious hotel was built at Needles for the purpose of exploiting the place as a winter resort. It is all right in winter time, but in the summer months New York's tenement districts are cool and delightful in comparison. Electric fans are installed in the hotel in every room and corridor, and wide balconies protect every apartment from ever receiving the direct rays of the sun. At nights guests pull their beds out on the corridors; but neither science nor ingenuity has devised a way of making life tolerable in Needles in summer time.

NEW POST FOR LIEUT. GRANT.

Grandson of Famous War General Is Superintendent of State, War and Navy Buildings at Capital.

Washington.—First Lieut. Ulysses S. Grant, III., corps of engineers, United States army, grandson of President Grant, the famous war general, has been appointed superintendent of the state, war and navy building at Washington.



Capt. John H. Poole, corps of engineers, held the office of superintendent for about four years. He succeeded Rear Admiral George W. Baird of the navy.

Capt. Poole made many reforms and improvements in what is known as "the biggest office building in the world," and reduced expenses considerably. He is relieved from this duty to enable him to take a two-year course of instruction at the School of the Line at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

Officers of the army corps of engineers are eligible to detail to the superintendency since the naval corps of engineers was merged into the line of the navy several years ago.

Lieut. Grant, the new superintendent, since his graduation near the head of his class at West point, in June, 1903, has served a tour of duty at the engineer school at Washington barracks, and also as one of the military aids of President Roosevelt. For several months past he has been stationed at Boston on duty in connection with the river and harbor works and fortifications in that vicinity. Last year he married Miss Edith Root, daughter of Senator Root, of New York.

Hungarian Farm Experiment.

An experiment from which much may be learned is being tried in Hungary. It is embodied in the new land bill which is now coming into operation. The proposal is to break up 24,000 acres into settlements, which settlements will be subdivided into plots of seven acres each. But the interesting point is that in the center of each group of small holdings there will be a larger holding of not more than [illegible] acres, which will be in the hands of [illegible] and experienced [illegible]

A City Clerk's Garden.

A city clerk never misses a chance of expatiating on his garden to his colleagues, who, however, were never taken home to see it, but were under the impression it was of enormous size. Five of them resolved to have a look at it, discovered his address, and called one Saturday afternoon to see the hundreds of roses all a-growing and a-blooming. On being taken to the rear of the house, judge of their surprise on seeing a back yard about 12 feet by ten feet. One bold spirit ventured that it was not very big.

"Big!" replied the proud owner, pointing to the sky. "Why, man, alive, look at the height of it!"—Chicago Daily Socialist.

The Clothesline Test.

"Let me see her clothes on the line," said an old-fashioned woman recently, "and I can tell you if she is a good housekeeper." The test lies in the way the garments are hung. If the skirts are scattered around promiscuously the woman lets garbage stand on her kitchen table over night. The skirts, like we men, should always hang together, shoulder to shoulder, and everything of its kind should hang in a row.—Atchison Globe.

"To Orient."

Primarily and as its etymology shows the verb to orient means to set an object in exact adjustment to the east, thence by a natural corollary to set it true with all the cardinal points of the compass. Then in the derivative and topical signification it is used to describe the attitude of a mind duly adjusted to any standard of knowledge, morals or life.

Jonah Dog Carries $5 to Farmer Who Believed Canine Had Brought Him Bad Luck.

Foreword—This thrilling narrative comes from the occasional contributor in New Jersey whose fame rests on his well-known stories "How Mike, the Rattlesnake, Flagged the Express," "Polly the Parrot That Raised the Mortgage," and "How Betsy Raised Hops in a German Beer Garden," says the New York Herald. It is believed that this story is even truer than the others.

Caldwell, N. J., Sunday.—Rush Gibbons, 12-year-old son of William Gibbons, a truck farmer of Fairfield, recently found a dog lying beside the turnpike. The animal was [illegible] whining as [illegible]

bons, who loves all dumb creatures, especially dogs, discovered that the animal's right foreleg was broken. The dog apparently had been struck by an automobile.

Gibbons took the dog home in his arms and placed the broken limb in splints. He nursed the poor animal back to health and soon it was as frisky as ever. His parents demurred at first, but finally allowed the boy to keep his pet, the dog earning his keep by driving away tramps and [illegible] vegetables. Things, however, did not prosper with the Gibbons family. The elder Gibbons declared that the dog was a Jonah.

"He has brought us hard luck," said Mr. Gibbons to the boy, "and he must go."

Rush took the dog behind the barn and then cried as if his heart would break. But it was not to be that the [illegible] leave the farm [illegible] family was at dinner when the [illegible] although his father objected.

The animal walked up close to the elder Gibbons, and then to the astonishment of all, dropped from its mouth some money, which, when counted, proved to be five $1 bills, all new.

Where the dog got the money is a mystery and one that will perhaps never be solved.

The result will be, however, that Mr. Gibbons will keep the dog, as he believes that [illegible]

The Little Falls Herald says that Taft reminds it of "Teddy;" he is so different.

The Gazette has always been enthusiastic for an income tax. We never expect to be hit by it.

Joe Cannon believes the tariff bill is a good one. This is about the only crumb of comfort the consumer gets.

The Windom Citizen wants to know what would happen if some one were to test the constitutionality of the legislators' salary grab.

This much may be said of President Taft's prospective endorsement of Tawney's vote on the Aldrich bill: it will injure both Mr. Tawney and the president in the minds of the people of Minnesota.

The law establishing standard provisions for health and accident policies became effective July 1st, and the insurance commissioner believes this law will insure a contract which is definte, intelligible and fair.

The medical authorities are clashing on the proposition whether or not matrimony is contagious. If it should be decided in the affirmative some of the germs should be sent to Red Lake county, as our accumulation of old bachelors is getting too large.

It is rumored that the four members of the supreme court are evenly divided as to the constitutionality of the peddlers' license law, passed by the recent legislature. If this is true Judge O'Brien will find it one of his first duties to pass judgment on this proposition.

The newspapers of St. Paul and Minneapolis have taken a strong position in opposition to the Aldrich tariff bill, and in fact Minnesota seems to be the center against this measure. No candidate for office next year can favor the Republican position on the tariff and hope for electon. On the Republican side it is evident that we are to have a campaign of apologies, and the candidate will be obliged to argue that while he is all right his party is wrong.

A Kansas editor says that "the head of Lincoln appears on the new penny, the face of Cleveland will be on the $10 certificate, and that of Grant on the $50 ones. We will get sight of Lincoln now and then, occasionally scrape acquaintance with Cleveland, but good-bye, General Grant, and God bless you."

The talk of Roosevelt for president for 1912 has been resumed. It is assumed as a matter of course that the congressional elections next year will show a decided slump in republicanism, and "Teddy" is expected to land at San Francisco and make a triumphal march across the country to Boston. This, it is expected, will fire the hearts of the old Roosevelt admirers and bring about the nominaton of the ex-president at the Republican convention in 1912.

According to the weekly bulletin of the insurance commissioner the fire losses in Minnesota for June amounted to $70,000, as compared with $955,000 for the same month in 1908. The losses in the United States were $11,268,000, as compared with $14,500,000 in June 1908. It seems that with the coming of better times and a brighter business outlook the number of fires decrease materially. The crime of arson is difficult to prove and many business concerns on the verge of bankruptcy evidently use the fire method to recoup their losses.

The Minneapolis Journal avers that genuine tariff revision must come though the agency of the Republican party. We might be willing to grant that this is wise counsel if we were given some assurance as to when the Republican pary will give us genuine revision. A large majority of the people of the middle west have been voting the Republican ticket for some ten or twelve years with the understanding that their party would at least relieve some of the burdens of the consumer, but we have been given the McKinley bill, the Dingley bill, and now the Aldrich bill, each worse than the other. "Three times and out" is a good old axiom and is likey to prove true in this case.

The Grand Army encampment is being held at Salt Lake City this week. Former Governor Van Sant is a leadng candidate for commander-in-chef. Van Sant's political fortunes have been under a cloud for some years but this new honor may cause a revival of public sentiment and make him a strong bidder for Senator Clapp's shoes.

The Bemidji Tribune gives its readers some good advice which applies to Red Lake Falls as well as to some other towns. "There should be no friction in our little city. There should be a natural interest in the prosperity of our people. When we note the indifference to the well being of its citizens we note a town all wise men shun. Success and failure are each a part of life, and often those who have made the hardest fight are vanquished in the race. Be a 'booster' for your home town; get your shoulder to the wheel and help the willing fellows who are trying to build up a successful community for the benefit of you and me."

Governor Johnson's address at Seattle last Tuesday is commented upon by practically all of the leading newspapers of the country. In the central and western divisions there is the highest praise for the governor's suggestion that these portions of the country should no longer submit to the political domination of New—Engand. Naturally the Massachusetts and Rhode Island journals strongly object to the west assuming its rightful place in the councils of the nation. The self-satisfied Bostonians object to the breaking of the Aldrich leading thongs. The governor's speech was a masterful resume of the growth and development of the northwest, and his plea for justice will be applauded by every person who understands the present political and commercial barriers that must be broken down.

THE CHARTER ELECTION.

As will be observed by the report of the city charter commission long-time franchises to use the streets and alleys of the city of Red Lake Falls for the coveyance of electricity, gas, water and other public necessities are permitted with the provision that no such franchise shall be exclusive.

This amendment to the city charter is necessary for the development of our numerous water powers. No large manufacturing concern will locate in Red Lake Falls unless it can be assured of a contract for power extending over a term of years. The investment necessary for the establishment of any of the industries proposed for Red Lake Falls would of necessity be very large and no business man will bring his money here until he can have the power problem definitely settled and assurance given that at the end of five or ten years he will not be obliged to move away.

The restriction of the proposed amendment of the city charter against exclusive or perpetual franchise is a wise and sufficient safeguard against monopoly. The charter commission is composed of fourteen of our most prominent business and professional men, all of whom are freeholders and loyal to the best interest of the city. They have given careful thought to the exigencies of the case and the Gazette believes the people of the city have confidence in their integrity and judgment.

The elecion to vote on the porposed amendment will be held September 7th and the people should sustain the recommendatons of the commission. A failure to do so would mean a setback to the development of Red Lake Falls.

EXCHANGE ECHOES.

Fairmont Sentinel: Thomas D. O'Brien will improve the standard of our supreme court. Governor Johnson never makes mistakes in his judicial appointments.

Pine River Sentinel: It is a matter of common knowledge that the voters of Minnesota contain a lot of fellows "from Missouri," but the way they "shoot it into" some candidates for election would lead one to think they might be from Texas.

Madison Independent Press: That little scheme to tax corporatons which was brought out to attract the public away from the dirty work being done by Aldrich and his crew in the senate is a joke and no mistake. The people are led to think by it that they are getting something out of the fat ones, but the fat ones know that the supreme court will have a chance to make a guess as to the Constitutionality of the law before they will have to pay a cent under it, and—the supreme court is safe.

Owatonna Journal-Chronicle: Men who want to be elected governor by the Republican party seem to be numerous as ever, but in view of the party's experiences during the past few years it looks as though what we Republicans need is a candidate who is not so blamed anxious for the job. Nowadays the voter is getting suspicious of the man who betrays a consuming ambition for so high a position. The people wonder if he wants it badly enough to induce him to make terms with certain powerful influences which the state is trying to get away from politically. What we need is a candidate of the right kind who has to be clubbed into accepting the nomination, or appear to at least like our third term Democratic governor.

STEALING A SIGN.

That Was the Policeman's Charge, but It Was Not Sustained.

Stealthily the policeman stole out from behind the side door of the saloon and quickly pounced on some Columbia college boys who were carrying a long board sign that had hung over some tobacconist's shop. The youths protested against the officer's interference, but he told them that they would find it a hard job to turn little old New York into a college town, and off to the lockup they went, college boys, sign and all.

"What's the charge?" asked the sergeant as he looked out at the aggregation of the coming great men of learning.

"Stealing a sign," answered the cop as some of the boys bumped it into the station house, where it reposed against the wall.

"We did not steal it," spoke up one of the youths; "we only borrowed it."

The sergeant turned to the cop and told him to call up the owner and find out what the true state of the case was. The policeman read the sign slowly and then turned to the telephone book to look up the owner.

"Hello! Did you lose a sign?" And the answer made the policeman scratch his head.

"What did he say?" asked the waiting sergeant. The reserves were beginning to grin; and the policeman looked very uncomfortable.

"It is all right," he said, scowling at the youths. "The owner says they rented the sign for the night and are to return it tomorrow morning when he is ready to do business again."

A shout went up from the youths as they were ordered out of the station, and they took up their triumphal march and sought out some other unsuspecting cop to dupe, and far down the street came back their triumphal yell:

"C-o-l-u-m-b-i-a!"

The cop laughed to himself as he started out again on his beat, and a friend at his side asked him the cause of his merriment.

"The owner of the sign was mad all the way through and wanted me to hold the sign. He had rented it all right, but he said that was the third time he had been called out of bed tonight, for the boys had been pulled in in three other precincts, but as long as I was a goat for him I thought I would let the rah-rah boys have some more fun with some other cop and sent them on their way."—New York Press.

Stop That Cold
To check early colds or Grippe with "Preventics" means sure defeat for Pneumonia. To stop a cold with Preventics is safer than to let it run and be obliged to cure it afterwards. To be sure, Preventics will cure even a deeply seated cold, but taken early—at the sneeze stage—they break, or head off these early colds. That's surely better. That's why they are called Preventics. Preventics are little Candy Cold Cures. No Quinine, no physic, nothing sickening. Nice for the children—and thoroughly safe too. If you feel chilly, if you sneeze, if you ache all over, think of Preventics. Promptness may also save half your usual sickness. And don't forget your child, if there is feverishness, night or day. business to convict her. As showing the length to which they are willing to go it is said that, at the suggestion and with the assistance of the attorneys employed on behalf of the county, a popular petition was prepared and circulated and afterwards presented to the judge asking him to deny the motion to admit Mrs. Ledbetter to bail. The paper to which the signatures were attached is said to have been prepared in the office of an assistant to the county attorney. This extraordinary attempt to influence a judicial decision by popular clamor was properly rebuked by the judge, but I learn that the matter is not likely to end there but that charges of unprofessional conduct will be made against the officials who incited it. The graver charge made, however, is that to make a case against Mrs. Ledbetter, the county officials are likely to compromise themselves with Smith with the result that he, who on his own confession, is equally guilty with Mrs. Smith, will go unwhipped of justice.

The Beltrami Muddle.

The inquiry has been begun by the commission recently appointed by the governor into the charges of malfeasance recently made up against the officials of Beltrami county. That nothing especially sensational has so far developed is attributed here to the fact that the original charges against them were of purpose modified by the attorney general who all along has shown a strange reluctance to vigorously prosecute the case. The public examiner does not know how to account for Mr. Simpson's lassitude, and Judge Stanton is said to have expressed surprise that more important charges should have been omitted from the counts prepared by the state's legal department. That so little zeal should be shown to bring offenders to justice is not likely to discourage those who have an inclination to transgress the law. I am told that the people of Beltrami county who favor an honest management of the county affairs are thoroughly exasperated by the method of procedure adopted on behalf of the state.

How They Squared Themselves.

The Minnesota devotees at the shrine of Joe Cannon, alarmed at the uprising against the upward revision of the tariff in their own constituencies, have sought to save their bacon by voting against the bill which, as it came from the house they had approved with all its imperfections. Their eleventh hour conversion is not likely to sevre them. They knew very well what would happen when they cast their vote for Cannon for speaker and that no honest tariff revision would be possible where power was placed in the hands of such an unreconstructed standpatter to dragoon congress into line. No one is likely to much regret that one of them at least failed to reap the reward which he expected to receive as the the price of their perfidy. Miller of Duluth did not get the place on the River and Harbors committee for which he bid and which his predecessor occupied. Uncle Joe probably remembered that Miller made him an issue in his campaign although Miller tried to make him forget it, as he himself forgot his pledges to the people of his district to vote against Cannon.

Committee Assignments.

Otherwise committee assignments of Minnesota members are not greatly changed. I would not be surprised if investigation would show that the speaker was consulted before some of the Minnesota members voted against the bill, Stevens for instance, and that the tip was given that unless their votes were wanted to pass the bill they could square themselves with the people at home, who are thought not fully to appreciate the inwardness of the situation, voting against it. Certainly Uncle Joe has borne no grudge against Stevens, for he has now a place several notches higher than before on the committee on interstate commerce which, in addition, as the dispatch says "will handle anti-trust legislation." Manhandle it more likely if its members are of the same mind with Stevens, whose relations to the Great Northern people do not indicate any extraordinary zeal for any effective kind of control or supervision of corporations.

Taft's Prospected Visit.

We are to have President Taft with us again it appears. This time he will come, not as a candidate, but as the apologist for the Payne-Aldrich bill and to set Mr. Tawney "right" with the people of his district. Evidently he has great confidence in his persuasive powers. There is, however, an intimation that the other congressmen will not relish a dessertation on the virtues of the bill they voted against and it is said that Senators Nelson and Clapp have already served notice upon the president that they will regard his championship of the Aldrich abortion in Minnesota as a challenge to defend themselves.

The President's Apology.

The president in his apology for the tariff directs attention to the peculiar wording of the Republican platform and insists that the new law is a substantial fulfillment of its terms. "We promised," he says, "to make the rates protective, but to reduce them when they exceeded the difference between the cost of production abroad and here, making allowance for the greater normal profit on active investments here." Certainly no one will accuse congress of not making ample allowance for the greater normal profit of the maufacturing trusts.

The Governor's Triumphal Tour.

The governor's visit to Seattle barring a slight misunderstanding at Seattle about the time of his arrival, has been really a triumphant march. His trip through the intervening states was one long series of ovations, the different communities vieing with each other in doing honor to the governor of the state. His address made at the fair on Minnesota Day has attracted national attenttion as the best exposition yet made of the progressive spirit of the new West. While in Canada (he returned by way of the Canadian Pacific) was treated as an honored guest and a private car was placed at his disposal by the road. High as is the popular esteem for Governor Hughes of New York, who was in Seattle at the same time, he was not shown the attention nor did he excite the curiosity which greeted the governor of the state. Nor is this surprising. Since the passage of the tariff law [illegible] of Taft's term and of all possible Democratic candidates there can be [illegible] to the hearts of the people. It wasn't merely the Governor of Minnesota, that went to Seattle, it was [illegible]

S.S.S. CURES MALARIA

Malaria is due to impurities and poisons in the blood. Instead of being rich, strong and healthy, the circulation has become infected with germs of disease which destroy the rich, red corpuscles that furnish nourishment and strength to the body, and reduced this vital fluid to such a weak, watery condition that it is no longer able to keep the system in health, or ward off the countless diseases and disorders that assail it. The loss of these red corpuscles takes the color and glow of health from the cheek, and we see pale, sallow faces and washed out, chalky complexions among the first symptoms of Malaria. But Malaria is a general systemic disease, and as the blood becomes more heavily loaded with its germs we have more serious and complicated symptoms; the impure blood having its effect on all parts of the body. The appetite fails, digestion is weakened, chills and slight fever are frequent, and the sufferer loses energy and ambition because of a constant tired-out and "no account" feeling. The lack of necessary nourishment and healthful qualities in the blood causes boils and abscesses, skin affections, and in some cases sores and ulcers to break out, and sometimes the patient is prostrated with a spell of malarial fever which may leave his health permanently impaired. To cure Malaria both a blood purifier and tonic are necessary, in order to remove the cause and at the same time build up the system from its weakened and run-down condition. S. S. S. is the medicine best fitted for this work. It is the most perfect of all blood purifiers, and the purely vegetable ingredients of which it is composed make it the greatest and safest of all tonics. S. S. S. goes down into the circulation and removes every trace of impurity or poison, and at the same time gives to the blood the health-sustaining qualities it needs. It cures Malaria thoroughly and permanently because it removes the germs and poisons which produce the disease, and while doing this tones up and strengthens every part of the system. When S. S. S. has cleansed the blood the symptoms pass away, the healthy color returns to the complexion, the old tired, depressed feeling is gone, and the entire health is renewed. Book with information about Malaria and any medical advice free.

During 1900 I was running a farm on the Mississippi river and became so impregnated with Malaria that for a year I was almost a physical wreck. I tried a number of medicines recommended as blood purifiers, chill cures, and Malaria eradicators, but nothing did me any good until I began to use S. S. S. The result was that after taking it for awhile I was as well and strong as I ever was. I have never had a chill since nor the slightest symptom of Malaria. I hope others will be benefited by my experience, and with that end in view I give this testimonial, knowing that S. S. S. is the best remedy for Malaria.

PROCEEDINGS

Commissioners' Proceedings of Red Lake County, Minn.

Red Lake Falls, Minn.,
August 6th, 1909.

Pursuant to call the Board of County Commissioners met at the office of the County Auditor in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 10:00 o'clock A. M.

Members present: Lindquist, Johnson, Demann and Pigeon.

Members absent: Aubol.

The matter of the petition of Ole O. Nesja and others for drainage ditch was continued to 1:00 o'clock P. M.

The following resolution was offered by Commissioner Pigeon, who moved its adoption.

Whereas, an action has been brought in the District Court of Red Lake County, Minnesota, wherein P. B. Gasse is plaintiff to enjoin the Board of County Commissioners of said Red Lake County from letting a contract for the construction of a Court House in said county, and

Whereas, this Board did on the 20th day of July, A. D. 1909, purchase certain real estate in the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, for the purpose of constructing a Court House thereon, and

Whereas, the County Attorney of said County has appealed from said resolution purchasing said real estate above referred to to the District Court of said County. Now, Therefore,

Be It Resolved, That F. A. Grady, an attorney at law residing at the city of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, be and he is hereby appointed, employed and authorized to act as attorney for said Board of County Commissioners in both of said matters above described, and to the necessary proceedings to represent and defend said Board in both of said matters, and to defend the same in Court and this resolution will be in force until the further order of this Board.

Said resolution was duly seconded by Commissioner Demann.

On roll call the following Commissioners voted aye, Wm. C. L. Demann, Joseph Pigeon, and the following named Commissioners voted nay, Joseph Johnson.

The resolution was declared adopted by the Chairman of said Board.

C. A. LINDQUIST,
Chairman of Board of County Commissioners,
Red Lake Co., Minn.

The petition of Ellef Gravlie for correction of assessment and abatement of taxes for the year 1908 on real estate was granted subject to the approval of the State Tax Commission.

The petition of John L. Radnicke for correction of assessment and abatement of taxes for the year 1908 on personal property was granted subject to the approval of the State Tax Commission.

Moved by Commissioner Pigeon seconded by Commissioner Demann that the Board take a recess until 1:00 o'clock P. M.

Motion carried.

Meeting called to order by the Chairman at 1:00 o'clock P. M.

The matter of the petition of C. J. Knox and others for the construction of County Ditch No. 36 duly came before the Board of County Commissioners. The said Petition was read and the arguments of all persons interested for or against the construction of same were heard.

Fred Zaiser, K. O. Gigstad and Michel Quesnelle, the viewers appointed by the Board and C. H. Martz, the Engineer appointed by the Board, were present at the hearing.

On motion made by Commissioner Demann seconded by Commissioner Pigeon, the reports of the Viewers and the Engineer thereon were accepted and the following order establishing County Ditch No. 36 Red Lake county was made.

Order to Establish Ditch.

State of Minnesota } ss
County of Red Lake }

In the matter of the Petition of C. J. Knox and others, for a Public Ditch in the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, designated and numbered as County Ditch No 36.

The above entitled matter came on duly to be heard by and before the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at a Special Meeting of said Board duly called for the purpose of hearing and considering the petition for said ditch in the above entitled matter on the 6th day of August, A. D. 1909, at 2:00 o'clock P. M., of said day and it appearing by proper evidence that due notice had been given of the pendency of said petition and of said time of hearing thereon, and that C. H. Martz, the Civil Engineer appointed by this Board to survey the route, has completed his work and duly filed his report thereon in the office of the County Auditor of said County and that the Viewers appointed by said Board to view and report upon said work have duly completed their labors and made and filed their report in due form of law in the office of said County Auditor, the said County Board did, at the time above specified, proceed to hear said petition and said viewers' report thereon; and said Board having duly considered said petition and heard all the parties interested for or against the contruction of said ditch and all other matters pertaining thereto, find as follows, to-wit:

First: That the Civil Engineer has completed his work and made and filed his report thereon in all respects according to law.

Second: That the Viewers appointed herein have duly completed their labors and have made and filed their report thereon according to law.

Third: That the estimated benefits to be derived from the construction of said work are greater than its total cost, including damages awarded.

Fourth: That the damages and benefits arising from the construction of said ditch have been duly awarded and assessed, and that said work will be of public utility and promote the public health and that said reports of said Engineer and Viewers are complete and correct.

Fifth: That notice of this hearing of said petition and of said Viewers' report and said Engineer's report has been duly given, published and posted and mailed as by law required, and that proofs of said service of said notice have been duly made and filed in the office of the County Auditor of said County, and that all other proceedings in the matter have been made and taken in accordance with the provisions of law.

Now, Therefore: As conclusions from the foregoing findings, we, the County Board of the County of Red Lake, State of Minnesota, at said Special Session of said Board, held at the time above specified, being satisfied that the proposed ditch will be of public utility and conducive to public health and public benefit and convenience, do hereby locate and establish the said ditch, with the exception of Station 27 to 50 inclusive of Branch 3, according to the report and the specifications of said Civil Engineer made and filed herein; and do hereby establish and confirm the report of the Viewers made and filed herein.

It is Furthered Ordered, That the damages awarded to the persons and corporations named in the Viewers' report herein, in excess of benefits, be paid out of the County Treasury of said County on warrants to be drawn and attested by the Auditor of said County and signed by the Chairman of this Board, and delivered to the persons entitled thereto as provided by law.

Given under our hands this 6th day of August, A. D. 1909.

BRAY.

Quite a little hay will have to be put up after harvest this year as most of the farmers have only half of what they need for the winter and harvest is already here.

STAR STIRS.

Very warm weather.

The ditches are out of sight.

The roads are getting better again.

The prospects are good for a bumper mosquito crop this season.

There is no danger that rightly placed ditches will spoil the country. They are surely a safe and sane investment. Should the settlements become too dry in the near or remote future, we could use the ditches for irrigation purposes. Ha, ha.

Ye scribbler contemplates departing on a cycle tour thruout the county. The photo machine also accompany, so if weather conditions allow, all ditching, telephone, creamery, railway and other public enterprises better "loog oud a leedle." Let me pray for steady weather.

There is a revival of the time worn style of "going to Dakota for harvest and threshing." When will the settlers of eastern Red Lake county be relieved from this kind of business? It would seem that all this wear and tear on men, horses and machinery is not what they are trying to crack it up to be.—Suburban.

Cooler weather at times.

That steady shower Saturday made us stay inside all day.

Much of the barley crop is cut already. The other grains are next on the program, and will soon be tied into boquets.

It is now about decided that, unless Red Lake county is divided whomsoever has any special "courting" to do will have to do so at Red Lake Falls. A sparkling structure is now being ordered for the purpose at that place.—Suburban.

DO HEARTS BREAK?

Human Nature the Same Despite Modern Improvements.

Broken hearts, so the British Journal of Nursing tells us, are quite out of fashion. The disease has become obsolete, and two reasons are assigned for this. In the first place, we are told that women do not fall in love as once they did. Mere children are not encouraged to think on love and matrimony, and then women, having come to riper years and sounder judgment before they decide to marry, do not let themselves fall into that state which was supposed to produce cardiac rupture.

One ventures to express the opinion that the statement is not altogether accurate.

Human nature does not alter from one generation to another. People "fell in love" a thousand years ago; a thousand years hence they will be doing the same. But they wore their rue with a difference; so will those who are to succeed us. The fact is we do not now wear our hearts on our sleeves, and we have learned that if lovers prove untrue or unworthy there are better and more dignified ways of lamenting them than souring our tempers, wasting away and allowing our friends and relations to treat us as derelicts.

An Isle of Man Oath.

What is regarded as the quaintest oath still in use is that taken by the high court judges in the Isle of Man, the terms of which are as follows: "By this book and the contents thereof and by the wonderful works that God hath miraculously wrought in the heaven above and the earth beneath in six days and six nights I do swear that I will, without respect of favor or friendship, loss or gain, consanguinity or affinity, envy or malice, execute the laws of this isle justly between party and party as indifferently as the herring backbone doth lie in the midst of the fish. So help me God and the contents of this book."
